Arty (Housman) is caught with the goods—a full cargo aboard—when he tells the widder with money that "Hans," his by-side friend, is his boss with whom he must imbibe or lose his job. And then off "Hans" (Waddy) starts the fun by the foot full that would chase the greatest grouch ever hatched. Waddy as the Dutchman boss, scores more home runs than all the men who ever returned at 3 A. M. Waddy and Arty's fun is the kind that giggles the kid, pleases the high-brows and just "tickles to death" the fan—for it's real, good-natured but gingery, laugh-getting stuff that's made fresh every foot. Hitch this team to your program and let 'em pull for you. There are over a dozen of Waddy and Arty comedies now. Book 'em and laugh.

Herbert Prior and Carleton King in

"The Newly Rich"

(Released March 24—1000 funny feet)

Carleton King, as the lover, is left by the wayside by the Newlyriches who would a title marry—or bust. And out blossoms Billy, the tramp, as a royally rich Lord, by Jove, who busts into such society, doncherknow! As the made-over tramp, Herbert Prior makes every foot a merry reel with the infectious fun that needs no subtitles to "get it over." It just bubbles over.

BOOK THE PERFECT PLAY---THE PRIZE PLAY

Gertrude McCoy and Edward Earle

in the much-talked-about

EDISON-DRAMATIC MIRROR PRIZE PLAY

"The Phantom Thief"

(Released March 27—1000 feet of action)

This, "The Phantom Thief," is the play that excited so much discussion as the play of skilful plot, closely-knit and absorbing interest, drawing one to the mystifying question, "Who stole the portrait?"—the play by Mark Swan, the highly successful dramatist, which drew a large number of scenario endings, trying to solve the perplexing question. Everybody is interested in it as it is much advertised—everybody wants to see the perfect play of action and dramatic situations. Go with the tide—and book it.

Marie La Manna, Sally Crute and Duncan McRae

in the gripping

(Released Monday, March 22—1000 feet)

No sparring for attention or spending of footage in this drama of doings—for it starts right off with gripping interest with the crack of the pistol that makes a wily creature a murderer and a hunted man. Safe in the affections of an innocent confiding girl, the unrecognized murderer is in the midst of an elopement when he comes upon "only the maid" who matches wits with the murderer—a great scene this! McRae as the murderer—enough said. Miss La Manna is "only the maid," and Miss Crute, the ever-fascinating Miss that she always is.

HANLON BROTHERS' FAMOUS "FANTASMA"

Facts and Comments

WE ask our readers to carefully peruse the Cincinnati censor story on page 1743. It ought to remove the last doubt as to the folly of the claim that this state censorship does away with local censorship. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been at pains to make this plain to its friends and readers and has but very recently pointed out that Ohio state censorship was no protection whatever against municipal censorship. Right on top of this statement comes the news that the Mayor of Cincinnati has suppressed the exhibition of a film which deals with a most unsavory subject. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD refused to accept any advertising for this film because we believed that its showing would tarnish the good name of the screen. The exhibitor who showed the production felt safe in so doing because the state board of censorship had given it its deliberate and solemn approval. When he found the police ready to close his theater if he did not stop exhibiting the film he wanted to know what good state censorship was any way. He said that both he and other Ohio exhibitors had favored state censorship merely as a lesser evil and that in principle they were opposed to all censorship. We are sincerely sorry for the predicament in which this exhibitor finds himself. He had reasonable ground for believing that he was safe in running the film. At the same time we must point out to him and to all others that censorship is not a question of brands but solely a question of principle. The only sound and logical and American attitude toward censorship is one of uncompromising hostility. It makes no difference whatever whether the brand of censorship is of the municipal or the state or the federal variety.

THE experience of film men in bestowing heavy advertising patronage on daily and weekly publications of a general circulation has been neither flattering nor fortunate. One large concern spent considerable money advertising in a widely circulated weekly journal. "In scorn as it were" of this advertising the publication printed a budget of choice misinformation regarding motion pictures in general and the motion pictures of the advertiser in particular. There has been naturally enough a perfect flood of protests. We fear that the protests, except as they stimulate the circulation of the protestants, will have precious little value. It is true that the press in general is more kindly disposed toward motion pictures than ever before. Money for advertising deposited in the counting room had a remarkable effect in enlightening the editors. We are very glad to know that the press is trying to give the motion picture its due, but we also believe that a little more care in the treatment of the subject is imperatively demanded. There is still an excess of flap-doodle and misinformation. Few papers it seems are able to resist the man who peddles a sensational story about motion pictures. Whatever is absurd or freaky is, in many quarters, given the preference over honest facts. No paper has the sense of loyalty which characterizes the publications specially devoted to motion picture interests. Men who have their money invested in any branch of the industry will consult their own interests in reciprocating the loyalty of the moving picture journals.

TO a greater extent than ever before has commercialism penetrated the counsels of journalism. Less than a quarter of a century ago the business office and the editorial room were two entirely different departments and one never interfered with the other. To-day advertising often affects in a greater or lesser degree the editorial and even the news columns. The founder of this paper used to say that if a man came to him with a good picture, but with no money to advertise it would feel it a duty to the exhibitor to print an account of it as a matter of information to the reader. On the other hand no amount of advertising could have purchased immunity from fair and impartial criticism.

We thank the many friends and readers of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD who have been kind enough to write us and assure us of their approval of our campaign against censorship. We are naturally cheered by such assurances and we propose to stay in the fight to the end. Co-operation and harmony in all branches of the industry are indispensable to ultimate success in the fight against the gravest peril that has ever threatened the industry. Our motto must be No Surrender and No Compromise. We can defeat all freak legislation based on ignorance and prejudice if we stand together. Our cause is just.

Lost Fortunes

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

HOW many fortunes have been squandered in the production of moving pictures? That side of the question has rarely been touched upon for obvious reasons—we dislike to confess our errors. Yet it is of the deepest interest to men investing money in the manufacture and distribution of films to know what they should avoid. Yankee-like, I will answer the question by asking another. How many men have carefully studied this new field before attempting its development? I know one who did. He even read the Moving Picture World for six months before deciding upon a permanent expenditure of time and money. If I am not misquoting him, he is Daniel Frohman. His efforts have met with unqualified success.

It would be manifestly unfair to name those who have failed, or those who plunged with more enthusiasm than wisdom. They have suffered enough. I know some of them and have heard of others. Some of them have lost out completely and others are merely so many thousands or tens of thousands poorer for leaping without looking. The singular part about it is that they are men who would exercise caution and common sense in any other line of business. They would make inquiries as to trade requirements and closely examine all departments of production. Many of them are still in need of information.

There exists such a diversity of opinion about distribution methods that discussion of their respective merits can be left to special articles on the subject. As to the demand, it may be summed up in the brief statement of a well-known distributor. "The outlook for poor pictures was never worse, and, considering general trade conditions, the prospect for really good ones has never been better than at the present moment. The exact value of this or that product, however, is about as easy to determine as its intrinsic merit. On that account we give weight to the drawing power of names prominent in public attention."

I am not betraying confidences to quote the opinions of two other prominent men, one of whom has lost heavily in the game and the other about to enter it under unusual advantages. I asked the latter about his future policy. "Our future policy," he replied, "is not entirely in accord with my judgment nor with a deduction from general experience. We have not adopted it. It is forced upon us for the present. We must produce from authors of established reputation through one or more well-known theatrical stars. That is an imposed condition of distribution."

Why are such conditions imposed? According to Mr. William A. Brady in the Saturday Evening Post, "Moving pictures, up to about eighteen months ago, depended upon amateur scenario writers and what were known as moving picture actors. But all that is changed now." "The vogue of the old moving picture actor has gone. His place has been taken by such favorites as——" Mr. Brady here quotes a list of star theatrical performers. The article is frank, bright and thoroughly readable, and Mr. Brady is sincere to the core. I will not comment on his statements further than to say that he is apparently under the impression that the production of motion pictures is purely a reflective art. My main purpose in quoting from his article is to answer the question, "Why are such conditons imposed?"

Instead of offering a comment I will revert to the producer who lost heavily in the game. The first thing he did was to purchase a play written by one of the most noted dramatists in the world. I refused to transform it for five-reel screen visualization, principally because it lacked vitality of theme, and secondly because there was not enough meat in it for two good reels. I know, and every one knows who has written scenarios for five-reel presentations, that not one stage play in ten contains the necessary elements for a five-reel photodrama.

To consider this new art of expression as merely one reflecting what has succeded in another art, I have repeatedly pointed out is a serious error of judgment. Uttered language, devised by fine creative minds, given life and soul by capable performers, may hold us spellbound at the theater devoted to stage production, even if the skeleton libretto has little more to recommend it than the plot triangular. Stripped of verbiage, many stage successes can be easily shown in a reel or two. Their attenuation to five reels means artistic failure and financial disappointment.

This new art owes a great deal to the old one, especially in the matter of well-trained interpreters of strong personality. It owes much to literature. It is in debt to painting and sculpture. But it was high in popular favor many years ago for reasons seldom fully considered, and one of them is that it is closer to the heart of nature. Through it a great theme may be more truly and universally presented than through any medium where words are employed. I am reiterating for the purpose of suggestion. Why not consider the theme as of greatest importance?

How shall that theme be adequately treated? By the roundabout route of artificial theatricalism or by methods peculiar to screen production? Let us engage one or more stars, particularly if they have the right sort of personality and have grasped the essentials of visualizing thought. What then? That theme must be incorporated in a veritable thesis, inasmuch as it must be most carefully formulated in advance of the proposition. The scenario, instead of being a mere rearrangement, a simple working plan of action, enters into the most remote cost of production. Upon it actually depends whether a five-reel feature, aside from the sum paid for star performers, is to cost anywhere from five thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars.

Able to cite from actual cases, yet restrained by business courtesy, I am justified in assuming that no great and highly profitable photodramatic structure will ever be built that is not worked out in the plans. Given a scenario carefully formulated in advance of the main proposition, in itself a work of art, so much depends upon the highest kind of inspirational treatment that the combination will be rare indeed. Inadequate treatment, too, nearly always means unintelligent handling at a cost far beyond the necessary.

Full comprehension of all the requirements of photodrama production, including psychological revelation and that demand which grows from universal interest, is necessary from the outset, and it is not to be acquired in a day or two. Lavish expenditure becomes mere folly when undirected by profound knowledge and trained intelligence in every artistic department of production. It is supreme folly in the light of experience, for some of the biggest money winners have been the least costly, their drawing power depending upon vitality of subject matter and inspired visualization. Meanwhile, on with the corpse revivals—let joy be unconfined.

More Fool Legislation

By W. Stephen Bush.

I WISH that the scenes at the hearing on the proposed censorship measure now pending in Albany could be filmed and provided with proper subtitles and then sent first to the producers, distributors and exhibitors and afterward circulated on the screen for the benefit of all the people. It might rouse us all out of an apathy and indifference which will do the industry incalculable harm, not alone in dollars and cents, but also in its present legal and moral standing and in its future development.

The property interests represented in this industry mount into the billions. Studios and technical plants in New York state alone have a value which can only be computed in millions. Millions of dollars are invested in theaters from the little show in the village hall or the firemen's building to the great show houses on Broadway.

A measure is introduced in Albany affecting all these interests vitally and directly. It is referred to a committee and a hearing is arranged. Nobody in particular is notified of the hearing, but somehow some of the producers learn of it or their attorneys learn of it and a reasonably strong delegation representing all branches of the industry appear before the committee to oppose the bill. Has the committee any information on motion pictures? Is there one member of the committee who knows more than any casual visitor to a motion picture theater may be credited with knowing? Has any effort been made to enlighten the members? Have the members made any effort in that direction? Have they gathered statistics and like intelligent and conscientious legislators procured at least the most essential data? Absolutely NO. In the first place but three members of the committee are present. One of them retires early and the other two listen in a more or less perfunctory way. Their knowledge of the industry which they propose to make laws for does not rise above the "knowledge" at the village store or the street corner. None of them has ever been in a studio, none of them has attempted even the slightest investigation. These men have it in their power to shackle and retard the industry; they have it in their power to ruin hundreds of exhibitors, to put exchanges out of business and to interfere in the most arbitrary and oppressive manner with the producer. Holding this sword in their hands and poising it above the heads of the whole industry they may strike at any time and cause untold havoc.

It is true that there were men in opposition to the bill who spoke ably and eloquently. It may be said that the interests represented by these speakers should have acted sooner and that a campaign of public education on censorship should have been started long ago with producer, exchangeman and exhibitor co-operating for the sake of the common cause. Let us hope we are not too late. The point I am trying to make now is this: What good have these speakers been able to do in view of the profound ignorance of these members of the legislative committee? Not one of these members posssesed even the most rudimentary knowledge of motion picture matters. Their ignorance was heart-breaking and in view of their power it may yet prove disastrous to the industry in New York state.

Let me give a concrete sample or two of their ignorance. Canon Chase, the venerable advocate of censorship, brought with him a lady who said she was interested in the welfare of sailors. She was asked by the committee to speak and delivered a speech in the course of which she deplored the fact that motion picture producers showed sailors visiting dance halls. She then went into motion pictures generally and mentioned with expressions of horror a certain comedy in which she said dogs were converted into sausages. A member of the committee indignantly demanded to know whether this comedy had been approved by the National Board of Censors. He seemed to consider the exhibition of this picture sufficient reason for immediate drastic measures against motion pictures. He then went on to say that all motion pictures ought to be licensed or approved by the state superintendent of education "because the picture had educational power."

The introducer of the bill providing for censorship then rose up and delivered a "philippic" against the "trusts" in the motion picture industry. He said that the trusts had made the exhibitor take whatever they wanted to give him. I could not stand this any longer and for the sake of getting the facts straight attempted to enlighten him and the members of the committee on the real facts asking at the same time what in the name of common sense the trust question had to do with censorship. The introducer of the bill then arose once more and informed the committee that he was going to read something from a speech by Frank Dyer, who, he added sententiously, was "the president of the General Film Company, the biggest trust of them all." Gently informed that Mr. Dyer had some time ago severed his connection with the General Film Company, the statesman went on to read this sentence from one of the arguments which Mr. Dyer had made against legalized censorship some time ago. Here is the sentence quoted: "The parents and guardians are charged with the care and custody of the children not the state." "You see,' 'the assemblyman went on, "these producers care nothing for the public welfare. They make their films and say we will go as far as we can or as far as the law will permit us and if the money comes in that is all we want."

This absurd and unjust statement was listened to with the greatest respect and attention. When the attorney for one of the producing companies declared that the margin of profit on a successful picture was moderate enough one youthful member who had at some time or other represented an exhibitor in the fight against Sunday closing smiled in a superior way and said with an air of finality: "You cannot tell me anything about that, I know a thing or two." Half an hour or more was wasted listening to the wholly irrelevant speech of the woman who said she was interested in the sailors' welfare, but great impatience was shown when the opponents of the measure wanted to put in their final arguments and it cost no little effort to procure another hearing.

What we want to do at once and as thoroughly as possible is to enlighten these men. The Moving Picture World has sent good literature on the subject to every member of the committee with a respectful request to read and consider it before taking any action. The next thing is to make these men and legislators and politicians generally respect the motion picture and the men behind the picture. We are entitled to respect. The picture today is the most important factor in the world of amusements and its future as an educational power is a vast field of opportunities.

World Man on Tour

Blaisdell, "Seeing America First," Calls on Picture Men of Atlanta, Ga.—Finds a Strong Delegation in the Southern Trade Center.

NOTE.—George Blaisdell, of the staff of the Moving Picture World, left New York on March 2 on a grand tour of the United States. His first stop was Atlanta where he visited many exchange men and exhibitors of whom he tells an interesting story. New Orleans was his next stop which will be the subject of his next letter. From there he will go to San Antonio, and El Paso, Texas, and thence to Los Angeles, Cal., where he will remain for several weeks visiting the various studios in that city and vicinity, after which he will visit San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and return by way of Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis and Chicago. This week's letter is the first of a series which will appear each week in the Moving Picture World during Mr. Blaisdell's tour.

New Orleans, Saturday.

WHEN last Monday I said good-bye to my good friend Bruenner, the watchdog of the treasury in the big Biograph establishment up in the Bronx, his parting injunction, or rather one of a series, was not to fail to look in on Antoine's in New Orleans and just sample his Huitres en Coquille, Rockefeller. I arrived from Atlanta this morning, looked up the film boys—but that's another story—and later, at 1 o'clock, went gunning for the aforesaid oysters. I found them.

Bruenner must have thought I was going on a vacation. Certainly he was the cause of putting me into a mood where even the idlest rich did seem pikers. A long stroll in the near summer sun, a peek or two at the muddy and rumpled surface of the Father of Waters, another long look at the great Brazilian date palms, a step or two on real green turf, and here we are on a Saturday afternoon seated at a window where may be seen row upon row of buildings fading into a haze that is almost sultry, trying to remember there is back in New York a man beginning to get uneasy—I can see him tugging at that goatee.

I arrived in Atlanta late Wednesday afternoon. It seemed surprising to find New York weather so far south; an overcoat was essential to comfort. It must be borne in mind that Atlanta has an altitude of something over 1,100 feet. It may be this fact that is responsible partly for the hustling characteristics of the Atlantans. It is said the town has more skyscrapers than any other community of its size in the world. Very likely the statement is true.

What is of immediate interest is the outstanding fact that the film business is most worthily represented in the Georgian metropolis. There are here a bunch of keen men, striving for business for their respective companies, but never losing sight of the fact that stability depends on pursuing business methods. There would seem to be real fraternity among them.

Wednesday evening we took a stroll down Peachtree street. You know in Atlanta you may be sure of one of two things—you are either on Peachtree street or you are not. If there are street signs only a native can find them. The electric blaze of "The Strand" loomed up and we went in. B. Lee Smith was named as the manager. Mr. Smith had been a newspaper man all his life up to last December, when he took up his present position. He had conducted a motion picture department on the Journal, and in that way came in close touch with the trade of the city. He had been successful. When he took hold of the Strand, with its 700 seats, he got advice aplenty, but he decided to try something different. He announced that he would run no features. Up to date nothing has been shown under his management that in length exceeded two reels. His program is Mutual service and always contains three subjects, all first runs. Mr. Smith admits that when the new features of the Mutual come along he may modify his policy.

One factor that has helped to build up the Strand has been the giving out of tickets to school children. One school is taken at a time. The admissions are good from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m. The result has shown that in innumerable instances each free ticket has brought in with it two or three paid admissions. When Mr. Smith began sending out the free tickets his matinee houses included on an average about 40 children. Now there are frequently 500 nickels represented by the younger picturegoers. The charge for adults is 10 cents. Mr. Smith gets out his own publicity, and he knows how.

The Grand theater, under the general direction of Jake Wells, has just been converted from the speaking stage to pictures. H. L. Cordoza is the house manager and H. G. Cassidy is his assistant. Mr. Wells is to open another house of the same seating capacity in Macon, the initial production to be "Hypocrites."

When we saw "The Montgomery" we inquired for the manager. R. H. De Bruler proved to be the man, and he announced by way of introduction that he had read the Moving Picture World "ever since it was." The Montgomery has a capacity of 400. The price of admission is 10 cents. It shows feature pictures only, from 11 to 11. Music is provided by a Seeburg photoplayer. "David Harum" was one of the recent subjects shown by Mr. De Bruler, and he said already there were requests for its return.

Mr. De Bruler took the writer on a little stroll over to the Vaudette, owned by the Vaudette Amusement Company, of which J. G. Evins is president. Mr. Evins' company has been doing business since November 18, 1908. He uses a licensed service, and the president seems to be the pioneer exhibitor of Atlanta. It was a pleasure to meet the two operators of the Vaudette, L. F. Henderson and J. M. Henderson. The former has been with the Vaudette company since its organization and the latter over four years.

Thursday morning by appointment we met Mr. Smith and he introduced us to the Mutual Exchange men. A. C. Bromberg is the manager of the Southeastern division. He said business in his territory was picking up. Of course, the slump in cotton had affected business generally, but many of the mills that had been closed were now opening. In La Grange plans were under way for the construction of a half-million-dollar cotton mill. A. B. Cheatham represents the Serial Publication Corporation, which means particularly "Runaway June." Another Mutualite we met was C. E. Kessnich, who is connected with the feature department, handling "The Million Dollar Mystery," "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" and the Keystone Specials.

H. E. Stahler is the manager of the World Film Corporation's Atlanta office, which has been open about a year. Mr. Stabler has been in charge since December. He said there had been a marked improvement in general conditions in the last four weeks.

It must have been about this time we dropped up on the sixth floor of the Rhodes Building to call on the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, the concern that in Atlanta, Memphis, Dallas, San Antonio, New Orleans and Jacksonville represents the Universal Program. William Oldknow, the vice-president and general manager, had left for the big shindig at Universal City on the fifteenth. Joe L. Marentette, the manager of the Atlanta office, ignored the card of the pilgrim from New York. "You don't have to show me that," he said. "Why didn't you call me up last night? You are leaving town tonight? No, you are not." Somehow it turned out that we didn't. There was placed at our disposal a large room and a fine typewriting machine after our own heart—but somehow also not a key of it did we get around to touch.

The Consolidated has a fine up-to-date office, even to the white rats that keep guard in the poster department. Walter Price is the efficient assistant manager. We were introduced to Exhibitor Guggenheimer, owner of two large houses in Savannah, who seemed to be keen in finding out what the public wanted and getting it to them.

Through the kindness of Mr. Marentette we had the pleasure of meeting A. D. Grant, of the motion picture department of the Atlanta Journal. Mr. Grant took the pains to come over from his office to the Consolidated and also to volunteer any assistance in his power to the World man. He said his paper was giving a great deal of attention to the publication of motion picture news, and that the Sunday announcements were of undoubted interest to their readers and of benefit to the paper. Pictures were treated the same as any dramatic amusement. Each Sunday there are printed the entire programs of the different theaters for the coming week and each day the announcements for the day following. Mr. Grant said he believed the Journal to be one of the first papers in the country to realize the news value of comment on motion pictures.

O. P. Hall, manager of the Fox Film Corporation in Atlanta, has had seven years' experience in his present territory. He is said to have a personal acquaintance with 75 per cent. of the exhibitors in seven states. Mr. Hall said his office had been open but three weeks, but good business was being done. Mr. Hall has strong ideas on the poster situation and is endeavoring to minimize what he construes as evils. He said: "A Fool There Was" had done enormous business in Nashville, as well as in Atlanta. He had also had many inquiries in regard to the Betty Nansen productions. Mr. Hall's territory takes in from Key West to the Virginia line—five and a half states.

M. C. Hughes, at the head of the General Film Offices in Atlanta, escorted the World man through his well-equipped establishment.

R. M. Savini, president and general manager of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana, has his offices in Atlanta. The branches are in New Orleans, Memphis and Tampa. Mr. Savini said Atlanta was a notable film center by reason of its accessibility to many towns of fifty or sixty thousand population. He said the war tax had wiped out quite a number of the smaller houses unable to pay the $25 annually, enough to count in the aggregate.

George R. Allison, Southern manager of the Pathe Film Exchange, jocularly remarked that he guessed Atlanta stood pretty well as a big film town. He said with eighteen or twenty branch managers, handling about 275 reels a week, it surely ought to be.

Harry K. Lucas has a big supply house at 69 Walton street. He has everything for the theater. He has recently equipped a big house in Columbus, Ga., with two Simplex machines, screen and nearly a thousand chairs.

C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company, has his eye on eight states. He has been in Atlanta less than three months, but says he has been very successful in closing contracts. The film business, both from the exchange and the exhibiting side, is showing a marked improvement in his opinion. Mr. Tandy deplores the use of the words "game," "movie" and "legitimate" as applied to motion pictures in the two instances and as to the latter in indicating the speaking stage.

C. E. Buchanan said bad weather had militated against the picture business in Georgia. He believes, however, this summer and fall will see a big boom. Mr. Buchanan said the South had learned much through its experiences during the European war. Heretofore the farmers had plunged in planting cotton—perhaps on account of its ready convertibility to money—to the neglect of other crops. This meant the raisers were getting less for cotton and were compelled to pay high prices for the neglected commodities. In future there was every reason to believe the planting would be equalized, with great benefit to the South in general.

Mr. Buchanan, by the way, is president of the Atlanta Motion Picture Trades Club, a social organization of the exchangemen of the town. G. R. Allison is vice-president, H. E. Stahler is treasurer and Joseph L. Marentette is secretary. There are fifteen members, who get together for a dinner at stated periods.

In the office of Mr. Marentette on Friday we met E. J. Sparks, of the Strand Theater of Augusta, seating 400, and the Bijou, seating 900. Mr. Sparks spoke of the recent visit to Augusta of two producing companies. The players and directors, among whom were William Farnum, George De Carlton, Edgar Lewis, Harry Springler, Claire Whitney and Miss Clemens, were anxious to show their appreciation of the courtesies extended to them by the local merchants. Mr. Sparks secured the Grand Theater for a night, and the picture players were given a reception. Mr. Farnum's speech made a marked impression on his audience. The proceeds of the evening were devoted to local charities.

Just before breaking away, or tearing away, if you will, on Friday afternoon we dropped in on W. T. Murray of the Alamo. Mr. Murray's house seats about 400. He shows three reels of first run pictures and does a big business. Admission is 5 cents. With Charlie Chaplin's "A Night Out" Mr. Murray played to 5,400 persons in one day. This record was exceeded by the Frank Bushman Essanay "Dear Old Girl," when 6,900 saw it in one day—and this in spite of the fact that the subject was not new. Without knowledge of the circumstances we hazard a guess it was a reissue, as we saw the splendidly dramatic subject many months ago. Mr. Murray seems to be enthusiastic over the advance the Essanay is making.

We came near not mentioning the pleasant meeting up with James F. Jackson of the Savoy theater. That's perhaps because the collision was outside the theater in company with Joe Marenette—and any one is entitled to be pardoned for forgetting things in that company.

There's no two ways about it: Atlanta is a big film town and it's got a lot of big film men in it. More power to all of them.

BLAISDELL.

Among the prominent exchangemen in New York this week are George Grombacher of Portland, Ore.; Louis B. Mayer, Boston; Otto N. Davies, Minneapolis; James B. Clarke, of Pittsburgh, and Mr. Allenbaugh, of Baltimore. A board meeting of the Metro Pictures Corporation was the attraction.

Another Play Decision

Where the Sole Right to Produce a Play Is Vested in a Certain Person, the Author Cannot Dispose of Motion Picture Rights.

ANOTHER important decision affecting the question of rights to plays, has been handed down by the Supreme Court, New York County, Justice Samuel Greenbaum writing the decision. Jacob Gordin, deceased, was the author of numerous plays in the Yiddish dialect, his best known work being a dramatization of the Kreutzer Sonata. Like most of the east side jargon dramatists, he was a prolific writer. Many of his plays were sold outright to Mme. Kenny Lipzin, a well known dramatic star, who for some years gave her name to the old London theater.

One of these was "Die Schechite," the rights to which were purchased for Mme. Lipzin by Michael Mintz, the terms of the contract reading that she was to have sole right to produce the play for a period of twenty-four years, except that the author was to have the right to produce the play once each year "in his own name and for his own benefit." There were no other reservations.

Two or three years ago Gordin died and last summer his estate sought to dispose of the motion picture rights to "Die Schechite." Kauffman and Gisnet, acting for Mme. Lipzin, then procured a temporary injunction which is now made permanent by Justice Greenbaum's decision.

This decision is to the effect that since there are no reservations other than the one mentioned above, there is nothing to show that the rights of Mme. Lipzin were limited to the presentation of the play in Yiddish, or that the author reserved any rights to translate the play into other languages. As the transaction was completed before the change in the Copyright Act gave the motion picture production an individual status, the sale of the play rights carried with it the motion picture rights as in the case of Frohman vs. Fitch.

The decision holds good on all of the plays written by Gordin for Mme. Lipzin, of which there are about a dozen to which she holds the exclusive rights.

The decision is interesting as defining the status of the jargon plays, a few of which as (to-day) have found their way to the English speaking stage, and many more of which would lend themselves even better to film production than to the speaking stage in a foreign tongue. Adler, Thomashefsky and others all own rights to plays of native strength and vigor and this decision in advance of their discovery will do much to make the way clear to negotiation.

In the jargon theater the management reserves for itself the Saturday and Sunday performances, when the "house bill" or exclusive play, is given. The other five nights the house is generally sold to some organization which nominates the bill from a list of some three or four hundred plays.

"Edison Night" at the Claremont

Moving Picture Actors Appear in Person and Are Warmly Greeted.

"EDISON NIGHT" was inaugurated at the Claremont theater, Thursday, March 4, Frank A. Banner, of the Edison publicity department, acting as master of ceremonies. The pictures shown consisted of "In Spite of All," "Hypno and Trance Subjects," "The Experiment," "That Heavenly Cook" and "The Life of Abraham Lincoln." The theater was crowded, and at the conclusion of the Lincoln film a remarkable demonstration took place. As Frank A. McGlynn walked out on the stage in the make-up of the Great Emancipator the entire audience started to its feet and greeted him with applause. Later in the evening, when with the other members of the Edison Company Mr. McGlynn appeared in his proper person, he made a brief reference to the difficulty of assuming a personality so overpowering and so revered as Abraham Lincoln's.

Augustus Phillips recited an amusing bit of verse about a friend of his—a dog. Robert Brower was another of the company to make a few remarks and received a hearty round of applause when he "assured his hearers" (an uncommon phrase to apply to a moving picture actor) that he was an excelent specimen of the pulchritude and distinction so plentiful in the personnel of the Edison forces. Little Andy Clark, by using Mr. Banner as a mouthpiece, told how he came to go with the pictures and thereby lost the chance of becoming a famous ball player.

John C. Graham

New Head of the United Film Service.—One of the "Old Timers."—Has Had Varied Career.

By Lynde Denig.

THE class prophet at the University of Nebraska probably made a big mistake when John C. Graham was graduated. There was nothing to lead him to suppose that in the year 1915 his fellow classmate would be a business man seated in the partition-protected office of a motion picture company, and that the lettering on the door would spell president. Time has played unexpected pranks with the career of this same John C. Graham, who intended to be a college professor, instead of the man in the front room of the United Film Service's offices in the Leavitt Building. He might have become an erudite student, or he might have remained a dealer in lumber; but if you visit him in his new quarters he will be simply a film man, keen, aggressive and anxious to settle the business at hand.

Mr. Graham is not fond of talking about himself. His eyes are cool, his manner is reserved and impersonal, but he thinks in a straight line and having been persuaded that a sketch of his career is wanted, he goes about it systematically, picking out the things that count and marking them in consecutive order, so that when he is through one has a sufficiently definite conception of how John C. Graham became one of the most experienced exchange men in the business, the general manager of the Universal Company, and now the president of the United Film Service. Without once saying, "I accomplished this," or "I accomplished that," he presents a record void of emotional coloring and lets it go at that.

John C. Graham.

Having been asked to begin at the very beginning of things, Mr. Graham said that on good authority he could claim Canada as his birthplace. Before he had any say in the matter, however, he was removed to Lincoln, Neb., where his father conducted a lumber business. In Lincoln he stayed until he became a thorough-going Westerner, and he regards himself as such even to this day. At preparatory schools, young Graham acquitted himself so well in studies that he went to the University of Nebraska with the intention of qualifying as a professor of languages; but the more he studied, the more he realized that his real tendencies were commercial and the biggest business in sight just then was the lumber business. He deserted a scholastic career to follow in the footsteps of his father. That marked the commercial debut of John C. Graham.

If motion pictures hadn't been discovered in this generation, or if he hadn't happened to become a friend of H. E. Aitken, Mr. Graham probably would have lived and died a lumber dealer, for having acquired the experience of a salesman in Nebraska, Kansas, Idaho, South Dakota and other Western States, he became the guiding spirit in the home office of the first concern to convert yellow pine into marketable lumber; then the secretary and general manager of another St. Louis company; and altogether he had no reason to think of changing his occupation until Mr. Aitken, also located in St. Louis at the time, began to talk pictures.

Mr. Aitken must have talked convincingly of "the infant industry with boundless possibilities," for in 1908, about two years prior to the formation of the General Film Company, he persuaded Mr. Graham that it would pay him to enter the film renting business. At that time licenses were secured from the Motion Picture Patents Company, and under these licenses Mr. Aitken and Mr. Graham successfully operated the Western Film Exchange and held a controlling interest in the O. T. Crawford Film Exchange.

Then one fine morning they received a communication that virtually left them without a business. The custom of the General Film Company was to take over prosperous exchanges; but for various reasons the usual procedure was altered in the case of the St. Louis concerns and they were squelched by a withdrawal of licenses. Mr. Aitken and Mr. Graham promptly re-entered the game with the Motion Picture Sales Company, handling the Imp, Champion, Nestor and allied brands, and with the General Film exchanges for rivals, the independent distributors faced the necessity of outselling the very pictures they had been boosting a short time before. A later development was the Swanson-Crawford Film Company, of which Mr. Graham became general manager.

Gradually Mr. Aitken relinquished his active hold on the western exchange business, and leaving Mr. Graham in charge, came to New York, where he purchased the Reliance brand. When he needed assistance he sent for his old partner, who, with J. V. Ritchey, was placed in charge of the Reliance output. All went well until dissension arose among the independent manufacturers distributing through the Sales Company which brings the career of Mr. Graham down to comparatively recent history—the split resulting in the formation of the Mutual and Universal companies. For about a year Mr. Graham remained with the Mutual in charge of the Eastern exchanges, including New York City. His next step brought him into the chair of general manager for Universal, and his last into the office of the United Film Service. Such is the past of a man who doesn't have much time to think about it because he is busy preparing for the future, especially right now.

The change in administration that came with the resignations of P. A. Powers and Joseph A. McKinney was made imperative, according to the United Service directors, by an enlarged business requiring the individual attention of its executive heads. The retirement of Mr. Powers as president, however, does not indicate a lessening of his interest in the affairs of the United, whereas Mr. McKinney retains his seat as a director. Besides Mr. McKinney the board comprises W. D. Campbell, H. W. Warner, J. E. Baum and Ludwig G. B. Erb. O. S. Goan, who was in charge of the sales department under the Powers regime, has been elected vice president and treasurer of the corporation, while P. A. Chase becomes secretary. Mr. Goan was a director of the National Biscuit Company, and one of the chief men concerned in the amalgamation of the biscuit making concerns which formed the powerful trust. Mr. Chase is the oldest official, in point of service, now with the company, having entered the film business with A. Warner when the Warners Features concern was organized more than two and a half years ago.

With these men to help him, Mr. Graham says he is preparing to put out a strong program that will include two and occasionally three-reel subjects. Features will be marketed as well, new exchanges will be opened wherever they are needed, and the United Film Service will have its share of the space on the motion picture map of America.

IMPORTANT VITAGRAPH ANNOUNCEMENT.

On page 1844 of this issue will be found a highly important announcement by the Vitagraph Company to the effect that it will hereafter release its justly famous Broadway Star Features direct to the exhibitor. This service will be handled by the Broadway Star Feature Co., Inc., from offices at 44th Street and Broadway, New York City. Interesting Vitagraph announcements regarding this service will subsequently be made.

Against Censorship in New York

Strong Arguments Against the Mitchell Measure Providing for Censorship in this State. Only Three Members Listen to Protests. Mitchell Talks in Favor of His Bill. Rev. Canon Chase Listens to Some Plain Words from a New York City Exhibitor. Committee Will Have More Arguments on March 11

THE Judiciary Committee of the Assembly gave a hearing at Albany on the Censorship Bill introduced by Mr. Mitchell of New York on Thursday, March 4. The committee consists of thirteen members: Frank B. Thorn of Erie, Chairman; John Leo Sullivan of Chautauqua, Howard Conkling of New York, Charles O. Pratt of Washington, Charles J. Fuess of Oneida, J. Leslie Kincaid of Onondaga, Edwin A. Mackey of Delaware, R. Hunter McQuistian of Kings, Leonard W. Gibbs of Erie, Charles E. Rice, Jr., of New York, Charles D. Donohue of New York, Henry Schimmel of New York and Salvatore Cotillo of New York.

Only the chairman and two members of the committee were present when the hearing began and one of the two members left long before the hearing was fully under way.

The Forces Against Censorship.

The following persons appeared in opposition to the bill: Ligon Johnson, representing the theatrical interests, I. N. Schechter, looking after the Universal and Mutual; Walter W. Irwin, for the Vitagraph; Charles Shea, representing various labor organizations; W. D. Meguire, from the National Censor Board; Lee A. Ochs, the newly elected president of the New York Exhibitors' organization; Dr. Hamilton, of the same body; Mrs. Lillian Betts for a prominent Brooklyn Civic organization; Mr. J. Price, of the Civic Club of New York, and W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World. Commissioner Licenses George H. Bell had also come up to Albany to urge his opposition to the bill and as the duties of his office compelled a speedy return to New York he was heard first. He said he was opposed to the bill because it was in his judgment entirely unnecessary. All the problems presented by the situation in New York, he said, had so far been successfully met by an intelligent co-operation between his office and the National Board of Censors. He detailed the method of this co-operation very briefly and then gave way to the next speaker, W. Stephen Bush. Mr. Bush said that he was not financially interested in any of the branches of the industry and never owned any films except a few educational pictures he had taken in Rome about two years ago. He said he spoke solely from the viewpoint of a friend of the picture men and as a citizen and taxpayer of New York.

Censorship Not Needed.

"The present laws," Mr. Bush continued, "are amply sufficient to protect the community against objectionable pictures. I am stating facts, not theories. When some time ago two promoters of an objectionable film hired a theater and started to exhibit them they were promptly arrested, tried by a jury and found guilty. There have been no objectionable pictures on Broadway since that time. I contend that there never has been any real public demand for the censoring of pictures. That demand has invariably proceeded from sources that were in no way representative of public opinion. Individuals and small groups of individuals have agitated censorship. These men and women knew nothing about motion pictures, but felt an abnormal desire to regulate their neighbor's business. The motion picture has improved wonderfully and has shown itself capable of satisfying public sentiment and public morality. The producers as well as the exhibitors in their overwhelming majority are reputable business men, fully conscious of their responsibility and eager to meet it in the light that God gave them. Censorship in Ohio originated in a mistaken belief that censoring by the state would free the exhibitor from petty annoyances by rustic constables; censorship in Pennsylvania originated in the mind of one man who is now holding office under the law. As far as this bill is concerned it actually discriminates against motion pictures of an educational nature. Such pictures under Mr. Mitchell's proposed law would be exempt from censorship only if shown for scientific purposes and in schools. If the educational picture is good enough for the school and college, why not facilitate its being shown on the screen in the theater. Dr. Leipziger, one of the best educators in America, a man who has given his life to the cause of instruction, says that the great need of the country today is better and more adult education. There is no better medium for reaching the adult mind than the motion picture. I see a provision in this bill creating the office of an attorney for the board at a salary of $3,000 a year. This would be a plain imposition on the taxpayers. Prosecutions under the act could be attended to by the District Attorneys or the Attorney General and the special attorney of the board would have little to do except draw his salary."

The Mitchell Bill "Impossible."

Mr. Bush was followed by Mr. Price of the Civic Club. Mr. Price analyzed the Mitchill Bill and found it impossible in many respects. He called attention to the harmonious co-operation between the National Board and the License Commissioner which had resulted in the suppression of a film, not because it was immoral, but because it was apt to incite to racial hatreds and because it violated both the spirit and letter of the President's proclamation of neutrality. Mr. Price called attention to the fact that the Mitchell bill provided for no such contingency.

He was followed by Walter W. Irwin, the attorney for the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Irwin made an extended and eloquent plea against the Mitchell Bill. He called attention to the workings of the National Board of Censorship, which he said had in the past well represented public opinion. "There are names on that committee,' the speaker said, "that stand very high in New York. These men and women could not be hired for money to do the work which they are now doing without claim of reward and solely from a sense of public duty."

He dwelt on the work of the Vitagraph and pointed out that censorship there really began at the studio. He read a number of rules and standards adopted by the Vitagraph. The National Board of Censors, Mr. Irwin said, was not really a board of censors, but rather an advisory committee co-operating with the manufacturers to discover and to satisfy sound public sentiment. Mr. Irwin read from the report of the National Board showing that the Board had done a vast amount of work which could never be done by one or two or three censors. Mr. Irwin gave way to Mr. Shea, the labor representative, who declared that the censorship bill would result in the closing of many motion picture theaters and in adding to the army of the unemployed. He ridiculed the contention of Mr. Mitchell that the National Board saw the films at the plants of the manufacturers because the manufacturers paid them."

Rev. S. Chase of Brooklyn Urges Censorship.

At this juncture Canon Chase, the Episcopal divine from Brooklyn rose up and declared that too much time had been given to the opponents of the bill and he would like to be heard in favor of the measure. Permission was given to the Canon and he launched forth into his old arguments which by this time are pretty well known. He said that the Congressional Committe on Education had reported in favor of Federal Censorship and then read the report in extenso. He also distributed the little green pamphlet which contains the discussion between him and Frank L. Dyer, former president of the General Film Company.

The reverend gentleman seemed to be much provoked about certain motion pictures which showed sailors visiting dance halls. He said that sailors in the United States Navy resented such pictures and he then read a lengthy correspondence between himself and the Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York concerning this subject.

Mr. Maguire of the National Board brought the fact that the National Board had in deference to the suggestion of the Canon and of Commissioner Bell written to all the producers asking them to keep sailors away from dance halls on the screen. Mr. Maguire had even written to the Secretary of the United States Navy inviting him to address the producers on the subject and Mr. Daniels had actually written a circular letter to all the producers. All this did not satisfy the venerable Canon who kept on talking at great length about the efforts of the sailors to raise their moral standard and to keep away from dance halls. When he was done he said that he had brought a lady with him who took a special interest in the welfare of sailors.

A "Plea for Sailors."

This lady, he said, would like to address the committee on the subject of sailors. Thereupon a middleaged woman, apparently laboring under a nervous strain, arose and told of her work on behalf of the sailors. She went into the subject at considerable length and was then asked by the venerable Canon to vent her mind on the subject of motion pictures in general. She replied that she had not expected to go into the subject at this time, but she said she had lately seen something like forty-eight pictures of which six were not to her liking. She then severely condemned the producers of a comedy which showed or pretended to show how dogs were converted into sausages. She added that she had been wondering ever since whether this film had been approved by the National Board. Mr. Maguire replied that he did not know, but he thought it very likely. Whether people liked to see a film showing the transformation of dogs into sausage depended largely on taste. The lady's appeal on behalf of the dogs and her effort to preserve them from such an ignoble destiny on the screen at least after a while caused some laughter, though one of the members of the committee appeared to be quite indignant. When the lady who had spoken against the dog-sausage film was through, Dr. Hamilton, who is informally connected with the National Board spoke in favor of the National Board and against legalized censorship. He was severely catechized by the Canon who wound up by saying that all the motion picture men would after a while share his views and unite for censorship.

"Censorship," the Canon exclaimed, "will result in a wave of prosperity for the motion picture interests."

Plain Talk From an Exhibitor.

Lee A. Ochs, the newly elected president of the New York Exhibitors' League, arose at this point and plainly told the reverend gentleman he did not know what he was talking about. Mr. Ochs for the next ten minutes held the close attention of the committee and all present.

"Why," he said, thoroughly aroused by the Canon's preposterous statement, "there are mighty few houses in New York today making any money. Many of them are on the ragged edge and the war tax closed more than a hundred of them. The impression has gone abroad that all the men in the motion picture business are becoming millionaires and we have to suffer for it. Who do you think will pay the censorship fee? We will pay it. It is human nature for the producer to shift it along to us; its the line of least resistance. I do not know why you want such a bill. Pictures are cleaner and better than ever before. We exhibitors do not want to run pictures that we would not be willing to show to our own children. I think as much of my children as you do of yours. We are suffering from overlegislation and let me tell you we are getting tired of it. If there is too much of this political interference with a legitimate calling like ours we will know how to get back at the politicians. I know Mr. Mitchell and I think that the bill is not his, but the Canon's. The Canon has by this time discovered that he can get more free advertising out of his agitation for censorship than he ever got by his preaching."

Canon Chase denied that he had the slightest connection with the Mitchell measure.

It was now getting late and there were signs of impatience around the committee table. Two of the attorneys, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Schechter had not been heard and both were anxious to be heard. Mr. Bush asked for the floor long enough to remind the committee that they were considering legislation involving millions of dollars and affecting the welfare of thousands of employes and he suggested that they get all the light and information possible. They owed that much to the people of the state and to themselves. The chairman of the committee then declared he would hear the two lawyers at some later time and it was agreed to adjourn the hearing to March 11 when both attorneys will be heard on the legal phases of the situation.

KLEINE HAS UNIQUE DISPLAY IN FRISCO.

Visitors at the San Francisco Fair as well as home exhibitors cannot well avoid seeing an immense and novel advertisement of the George Kleine attractions which appears in the heart of town just opposite the new Kleine offices on the sixth floor of the Pacific Building. This is in the form of a gigantic illuminated billboard display on top of a two-story building running from Market to Jessie Streets. When an exhibitor drops in on Tom North, the Kleine manager, and asks to see a line of paper, he is requested to step to the window and observe the display across the street. This consists of practically all the various styles of lithographs issued for all the Kleine attractions from "Quo Vadis" to "Stop Thief." The display is startling as well as novel.

No Compromise With Censorship

Exhibitors Everywhere Becoming Aroused to the Dangers of Unjust and Troublesome Interference—The Value of the Screen As the Most Powerful Antidote Against Official Tyranny Is Being Widely Recognized—Useful Suggestions Offered and Invited.

THE fight which the motion picture industry must make and maintain against censorship admits of no compromise whatever. We cannot make this too plain or repeat it too often. Censorship of one kind has been offered to us as a relief from censorship of some other kind. The offer is a snare and delusion. The principle of censorship is vicious, incurably vicious. We have heard it whispered that censorship might be tolerated as an unavoidable evil if only the inspection fees could be reduced and if one fee could be made to cover all the copies of the one subject. Such whisperings arise from ignorance of the radical wrongfulness of censorship. It is not at all a question of dollars and cents. We would have to fight censorship just as hard if the censor agreed to-morrow to do his work free of charge.

Nor is censorship in any sense of the word a fight on individuals. We are bound in principle to oppose legalized censorship, even if the censors were saints, their heads encircled with a halo. The voice of the people as a whole, the sentiment crystallized from a million units we are bound to respect and do respect, as a matter of fact, every day in the year. By that sentiment we are constantly surrounded and influenced and we yield to it sometimes consciously and sometimes unconsciously. The opinions of one or two or three, or even a dozen, or a score of individuals, appointed by the state never rise above the dignity of personal opinions. They cannot impose their tastes and their notions upon millions and millions of their fellow-citizens. The world—the old world especially—has been governed in that way for centuries and is largely governed that way even to-day, but in our country censorship and inquisitions have always been exotic plants. These ideas and forms of government do not thrive on the free democratic soil of the New World. Here public opinion is supreme. Sometimes this public opinion is crystallized into law, sometimes it is just public opinion. It is a well known fact that no law unsupported by public opinion can be enforced in the long run. Public opinion is the source of all law and no stream can rise above its source.

That is why we must fight on unrelenting and unafraid. All of us must do our share. The producers have not always done their full share in the past. Too often they have acted as if the question had only an academic interest for them and as if they did not really care. They are waking up, but there are still traces of somnolence and they must lose these traces and be keyed up to action at all times. The exhibitors must do their share. Not much fault can be found with them. They have often at some personal sacrifice devoted themselves to the campaign against the common enemy. Their task, however, has really just begun. They have a weapon in their hands which they are just beginning to wield. It is the 42-centimetre gun of publicity, before whose persistent hammering every fort of Prejudice and Bigotry and Graft is bound to crumble away. The slide and the screen form a combination that is irresistible. The exhibitors can do two things with their slides: They can put a quietus on the political aspirations of any man who comes out in the open with a proposition to shackle the industry with the rusty chains of censorship. They can educate the public as to the meaning and the dangers of censorship. You exhibitors can teach the citizenship of this country that censorship must be forever resisted until finally destroyed, not alone because it does a grave wrong to the motion picture industry, but because it forms the entering wedge for an agitation against freedom of expression. Let censorship of motion pictures come into legislative fashion, unchallenged by public opinion and it will not be long before devices will be invented for curbing the freedom of the press, of the pulpit and of the platform. All meddlers travel along the line of least resistance. Batter down the freedom of the screen, hamper the motion picture with a lot of oppressive red tape and you will leave the way open to attack the liberty of the press. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Let no exhibitor think that censorship will never come to bother him. Whether he lives in a state where censorship is still unknown or whether he finds himself bothered by actual censorship at every turn, he is bound to fight for the cause which is the common cause. Who can estimate the power of the collective force behind a concerted campaign of slides? Think about it just for a moment. Millions see the slides every day everywhere, they read anti-censorship literature distributed to them by the exhibitors. In every American there is that indestructible love of political liberty which has placed this country in the forefront of progress and prosperity. Rouse that sentiment, kindle it into flame, then give it something to act upon and woe to the force or influence that dares to confront or seeks to halt it. It will sweep the country like the unchained elements of nature. It will come to battle with censorship and censorship will be no more.

We must get busy. We must start the creation of public sentiment this very minute. We want to do our full share to aid the fight. We have done it in the past and will do it in the future, but the issue is really in the hands of the exhibitor who should receive generous aid from producer and distributor.

We have ordered a set of twelve slides with appropriate texts. The texts are herewith subjoined and numbered:

1. What do you think about motion pictures? Is there any reason for showing them to the police or the censor before they go on the screen? Newspapers are free, pictures ought to be equally free.

2. Official censorship is the judgment of one or two men or women. It does not reflect public opinion, but often flies in the face of it. Do the American people want it?

3. If you believe in motion pictures write to your assemblyman or senator to vote against censorship.

4. Do you realize that the moving picture is the entertainment of the people? Why should the amusements of the people be restricted?

5. Censorship means inquisition. Americans want no inquisition. Vote against moving picture censorship.

6. In Russia the government prescribes the amusements of the people. American freemen are their own judges. Why go backward and permit censorship?

7. Public opinion favors laws against bad pictures, but it abhors the tyranny of censorship.

8. Censorship places the motion picture industry with its big investment and its vast army of employees at the mercy of cranks and politicians.

9. Of all amusements the motion picture is closest to the people. The people watch over its morality and they need no salaried politicians or censors to tell them which is which.

10. The present law is ample to deal with objectionable pictures in every town, city or state. Censorship is an unnecessary burden upon the tax-payers.

11. Pictures are the best way of expressing thought. They were here before the alphabet. They are the most direct way of reaching and teaching the mind. Why hamper the picture with censorship?

12. We have gone along without censorship since 1776. Why do we want it now? Who wants it now?

We advise exhibitors to have the texts made by slide-makers in their vicinity whenever possible. There is no occasion for exhibitors at points distant from New York to send to us for their slides. They can get their slides made by local concerns at probably the same rates. Where this is impossible or where for any reason the exhibitor prefers to apply to us we will send him one slide for 18 cents, two for 35 cents, three for 50 cents, six for $1, a dozen for $1.90 and one hundred for $15. We request that exhibitors order by number. Orders should be accompanied by remittance. The prices include cost of careful packing and mailing. We are not going into the slide business; our readers do not have to be told that we are offering these slides strictly at cost and with no margin of profit whatever. We do it to get the campaign under way, to get things moving. That is our only object.

We want to say in conclusion that we will be glad to receive suggestions for good slide-texts from our friends and readers. In fact we want to solicit such texts. No doubt many an exhibitor has given much thought to the subject. He may have evolved a peculiarly strong and striking text. His suggestion may have a good deal of originality in it and we, on behalf of the readers of the Moving Picture World, would be glad to have it. We may thus be able to publish in a later edition a new and strong set of texts in addition to what are published here.

Co-operation, harmony, an intelligent recognition of community of interest are the watchwords of to-day. We must concentrate all our strength on this one issue. Until we can reasonably feel that censorship, with all its injustice and its damage, is dead and buried there can be neither truce nor peace. We are bound to win, but it will be a long fight and a tough one. It is a fight that cannot be evaded by maneuvering. The victory will cost us much sweating, but its results will compensate for every drop of perspiration. For every dollar invested the return will be a thousand fold.

Cincinnati Mayor Plays Censor.

Objects to Exhibition of "Three Weeks" in Queen City, Though Passed by State Censor Board—Starts Big Row.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent Moving Picture World.

A TRULY extraordinary situation has arisen in Cincinnati, growing out of the exercise by Mayor Spiegel of arbitrary powers of censorship over moving pictures shown in the city, the particular film involved in this instance being the Reliable production of a film version of Elinor Glyn's much-discussed novel, "Three Weeks." The film received the approval of the Ohio State Board of Censors, being utterly unobjectionable, and was advertised by the Alhambra, Charles Weigel's Fifth Street house, for the week of March 1. It was shown there to excellent houses during the first half of the week, when Mayor Spiegel, after taking the advice of the city solicitor, who informed him that he had absolute power to stop the exhibition of any objectionable film, notified Manager Weigel that "Three Weeks" must not be shown any longer. Mr. Weigel was naturally rather put out at this, pointing to the approval of the state board as shown in the picture; but the mayor was obdurate, although he stated, as a compromise, that if the state board would again approve the picture, as shown, he would withdraw his objection. Inasmuch as the state board's approval was duly shown by its runner, this appeared to Mr. Weigel to be rather useless, but it seems that there was a suspicion somewhere that certain eliminations ordered by the board had not been made.

Inasmuch as the film has been shown all over Ohio during the past month, this seems improbable, but it was the only apparent ground left to the mayor, as indicated by his compromise offer. Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, of the state board, is quoted as saying that there was nothing objectionable seen in the picture when it was brought before the board, either by any member of the board or by any of the twelve women or the ministers who were specially asked in to see it. She suggests that the notoriety gained by the book has done an injustice to the picture, which, as she points out, contains absolutely nothing objectionable in itself, and is much less subject to criticism than many others which pass the board and are never held up to criticism at all.

The following statement is attributed to Mayor Spiegel, in his assumption of authority to censor any picture shown in Cincinnati: "As mayor of the city I feel that I am the conservor of public morals, and consequently having been informed by City Solicitor Schoenle of my rights in the premises, I have ordered that the exhibition of the film known as 'Three Weeks,' now being exhibited in a downtown theater, be discontinued forthwith. The film, based upon the book of that name, is nothing but a glorification of the crime of adultery. The latter is no less a crime when, as in this instance, it is committed by a royal princess who resents the brutality of her royal husband."

Mr. Weigel, who was the spokesman of the Ohio exhibitors at their recent meeting at Columbus, when they went before the Legislature for the purpose of presenting their view on the subject of censorship, stated at that time, he says, that he favored state censorship, not because he believed it to be desirable in itself, but because he considered it as a lesser evil than municipal censorship; and this identical ground has been taken by a large number of Ohio exhibitors, including many in Cincinnati, as well as by many film men. It has a good deal of reason on its face, especially since the Ohio board has become expert and rapid in its work.

If, however, as appears from the action of Mayor Spiegel, which was taken after the legal opinion of the city solicitor was asked, and had been duly rendered upon mature consideration, the mayor of every municipality is himself legally endowed with censorship powers, this position has little left to support it. Notwithstanding the state board and its approval of pictures, the mayor of any city in the state may exercise unchallenged powers of censorship which are absolutely arbitrary. This obviously complicates the Ohio situation to an amazing extent, as it is not to be questioned that other city executives will follow Mr. Spiegel's example.

In fact, it has already been proved that this example will be followed. Across the river, in Kentucky, where there is no state board, the city authorities of Covington have ordered "Three Weeks" to be withdrawn from one of the houses of that city, taking their cue from Mayor Spiegel's action, and evidently they have that power, if the Cincinnati mayor has it, on general legal grounds. Moreover, exhibitors point to the fact that if this absolute arbitrary power may be exercised by a mayor as to one film, even though it might be highly objectionable, there is nothing to prevent him from exercising it with reference to any other, inasmuch as there is no means by which this discretionary power can readily be legally reviewed, if at all.

In fact, unless Mayor Spiegel backs down promptly and gracefully—which it may be his intention to do, in view of the compromise suggestion extended to Mr. Weigel—the situation in Ohio, the storm center of censorship for some time, will undoubtedly be immensely complicated. Even in case of an amicable settlement of the present instance, the power of censorship has already been exercised under legal approval, and the example will stand until the matter is finally passed upon by the Supreme Court of the state, which must eventually be called upon to decide whether the State Board of Censors is supreme in its field, or whether in spite of its statutory authority municipal authorities can act independently of it. If they can, it is pretty plain that the position of the average exhibitor will not be enviable.

The Cincinnati Exhibitors' League held an informal meeting to consider the question raised by the action of the mayor, in view of its importance to every member, but no plan of action was arrived at. It was suggested that the occasion was opportune to make a test case for decision by the courts, in order that the point might be cleared up once and for all, but it has not yet been decided whether anything will be done. In fact, it is stated by Mr. Weigel that an attorney close to the local league gave it as his opinion that the city attorney was correct when he advised the mayor of his censoring powers.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, of the state board, who is quoted above, is reported as having charged that the mayor's action is part of a plan to discredit the state board. Mayor Spiegel, who is understood to have received the letter containing this charge, refused to make its contents in full public, stating that it involved another administration. This obviously referred to that of Henry T. Hunt, who preceded Mr. Spiegel as mayor, and who, as stated by himself in a letter recently published in a local paper, is attorney for the National Board of Censors. Mr. Hunt made this public statement in refutation of a statement made in some paper to the effect that he represented the film manufacturers. He pointed out in his letter the high character of the national board and the handicap imposed on the development of the moving picture art by the operations of numerous state boards of censors.

However, the charge that the national board is in any way responsible for the action of the Cincinnati authorities is not taken seriously. For the present the matter rests as detailed above, and, in the meantime, Manager Weigel loses the revenue of the latter half of the week, including Saturday and Sunday, apparently without any "come-back" whatever, unless the legal lights are all wrong.

A rather interesting sidelight on the turmoil caused in Cincinnati by the action of the mayor in ordering the withdrawal of the Reliable production of "Three Weeks" is cast by a report from Lima, Ohio, following the Cincinnati development. The Lima chief of police felt that it was his duty to investigate the film, following the Cincinnati idea, as it was showing in his city, and accordingly went to the local theater where it was on exhibition and "censored" it, as the news dispatch put it. However, he gave it a clean bill of health, based upon the O. K. of the State Board of Censors, and permitted it to continue.

Select Film Booking Agency

New Booking Organization Created for Distribution of Big Features on Novel Plan Begins Operations.

THE Select Film Booking Agency, recently created to pursue an organized and definite plan for the distribution and booking of pretentious feature productions, is to assume immediate activity, with general offices in the Times Building, New York. George M. Welty, one of the best known booking managers in the theatrical profession, associated for many years with the Liebler company, will be in direct charge of the booking department.

The elementary object of the Select Film Booking Agency will be to create and maintain a standard of distribution not before attempted, and said to be far in advance of the booking methods now in vogue. The promoters explain that it is apparent that at the present time no single feature production of unusual magnitude or attractive power can obtain the proper exploitation or specialization necessary for subjects that involve great expenditures of money and months of preparation. It is in order to provide a greater incentive to producers of big feature subjects that the Select Film Booking Agency was organized, and it is, therefore, obvious that the essential purpose of the agency will be to establish such conditions as will enable progressive feature-producers to book their subjects in accordance with the relative merits of each production.

Toward this aim a systematic campaign has been inaugurated to align a number of important theaters throughout the country that are prepared and equipped to book a series of elaborate feature productions for indefinite engagements to be determined by the endurance of the popularity of each subject. To this end a complete organization has been perfected to conduct a national booking system operated on the same basis upon which the foremost theatrical attractions are booked and at the instant service of producers of features sufficiently distinctive to warrant extraordinary exploitation.

The first subject to be exploited by the Select will be the Famous Players Film Co.'s superb photo-spectacle, "The Eternal City," which is now playing an engagement of an indefinite run at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia. This subject will be followed by other elaborate feature productions of a similar reputation and importance to be secured from the foremost feature producers of the world.

"Wen" Milligan Weds

IT IS always the unexpected that happens. Surely no one ever suspected that "Wen" Milligan harbored matrimonial designs upon any woman, but he "done got married" the other day, which proves the rule. You never can tell. "Wen" has many friends in the trade. He came in touch with the motion picture business when, nearly three years ago, he became understudy for Joe Farnham on the Morning Telegraph. After a kindergarten experience with the "near" picture paper, he follow Farnham on the Billboard. All this time he went about in single blessedness, adored alike by the fair sex in and out of the trade, but believed to be quite immune and altogether "halter shy." But, as was observed before, you never can tell. Wherefore the news that the Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church (John D. Rockefeller's church), pronounced the words that bound in holy matrimony Wendel C. Milligan and Mildred McC. Schultz, on Thursday, March the Fourth.

Wendel C. Milligan.

Present at the wedding ceremony were William Barry, publicity man for the Nicholas Power Company, and Ken Renaud of Stamford. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Schultz of New York City. It appears that the young folks have been friends for some time, but no one suspected that the friendship was of so serious a nature. There are no further particulars at hand at this writing as Mr. and Mrs. Milligan are serene in the belief that they have all the "info" securely corked up and shelved for the time being.

That is why it happens that we are able to present here only the likeness of the groom—handsome fellow, isn't he? really can't blame the bride for choosing him. But, after all, the young lady is to be congratulated, for we know "Wen" Milligan to be a splendid fellow and a hustler who will be heard from in whatever undertaking he eventually determines upon. Good luck and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Milligan.

SACRAMENTO VALLEY LOCAL ELECTS OFFICERS.

Sacramento Valley Local, M. P. E. L., recently held its annual meeting at Sacramento, Cal., and elected officers as follows: President, Charles Goddard; vice-president, C. A. Nathan; secretary, Louis Marks; treasurer, J. W. Di Stasio, and sergeant-at-arms, Wm. Chaplin. President J. Ray Williams declined to serve longer as an officer, as he had plans in consideration for retiring from the business.

Metro Controls Productions

Richard A. Rowland Outlines the Novel Plan of the New Organization of Exchange Men.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND and Joseph W. Engel are two of the youngest old men in motion pictures. Both are under thirty-five, both started to face the problems of exchange men nine years ago and now, in the Metro Pictures Corporation, they are offering an answer.

Mr. Rowland sat near a window in the Heidelberg Building. Looking at the Knickerbocker Hotel, across the way, he pointed skyward and remarked that the time had come to lower the photoplay business from the shifting clouds and give it a solid, commonsense foundation.. The Metro Corporation, he intimated, has reserved space on the ground floor. Mr. Engel, seated at a desk near by, added that the space is paid for, that no more money is needed from anyone and that the doors are open to customers. Harry L. Reichenbach, advertising and publicity manager for the Metro, searched for a phrase that would express the purpose of the new concern and discovered: "It will bring the studio to the portals of the picture house."

Before recounting the exact scope of the corporation which he heads, Mr. Rowland recalled the shifting fortunes of exchange men during the last decade, how history had repeated itself each time a successful business was built up only to be purchased by the General Film, Mutual, or Univ rsal, and how the exchange men generally were obliged to sell whether they wished to or not. On three previous occasions exchange men have attempted to combine along lines resembling those of the Metro; but the plans came to nothing because money was not forthcoming. This time $75,000 was subscribed at the first meeting and Messrs. Rowland and Engel, as trustees of the fund, went ahead with the project.

Two premises were acepted—the unsatisfactory conditions in the open market and the necessity for quality in pictures handled by Metro. As the plan has been worked out the exchange men, including George A. Grumbacher, James B. Clarke, Louis B. Mayer, Otto N. Davies and James A. Fitzgerald, are virtually in partnership with the producers, in addition to being stockholders and directors in the distributing company. They will have a say in the choice of subjects to be produced and there should be no reason for complaints concerning an inability to get what they want, hence Mr. Reichenbach's catch phrase about bringing the studio to the portals of the picture house.

Mr. Rowland is free to admit that if they cannot turn out good pictures the scheme will fail; but he is certain that good pictures can be turned out and that the system of distribution, eliminating many of the heaviest overhead charges, will enable them to place money where it is most effective—in the productions. If exhibitors find that the films are not to their liking, they may take advantage of a thirty-day cancellation clause.

Soon the Tiffany Corporation, B. A. Rolfe and the Popular Plays and Players companies will be supplemented by two more producing organizations in which the Metro Corporation will retain a financial interest. The Metro officers hold the right to pass on subjects considered for production, also on the completed scenarios and to O. K. the selection of directors. Each picture when made will be viewed by a board comprising three exchange men, three exhibitors and three laymen, and suggestions for alterations will be considered. Shipping expenses, totalling approximately $2,000 a month, will be borne by the company making the film, which in every instance will be guaranteed to cost of the negative. Mr. Rowland refers to the arrangement as a gamble for profits, rather than the customary gamble for a percentage. And this, he adds, applies to everyone connected with Metro. It is essentially a partnership affair.

The first release will be "Satan Sanderson" on March 29th, followed by "Shadows of a Great City," "The Cowboy and The Lady," and "The Heart of a Painted Lady" at weekly intervals. For these pictures and the many to follow, a broad publicity campaign has been outlined, which will include a weekly story arrangement with 200 large city newspapers, besides many small town dailies.

PARAMOUNT INCREASES ITS CAPITAL.

It was announced at the offices of the Paramount Pictures Corporation that the capital of the Corporation has been increased to $10,000,000. The corporation will take over all its exchanges except a few not members of the Paramount. The latter constitute about twenty per cent. of the total. Other big and important developments will be announced later.

Baumann in Optimistic Mood

Back From the Coast, He Tells of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's Ambitious Prospects.

AFTER two months on the Coast, Charles O. Baumann is back at his desk in the New York office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, while his partner, Ad. Kessel, remains in California to complete plans for an increase in production all along the line. Mr. Kessel will come East in about two weeks, for by that time the fresh undertakings of the company will have been fairly launched and placed in the hands of men competent to carry them through.

Mr. Baumann is reticent about announcing events in advance of their realization, but he admits a policy of enlargement affecting, in particular, the activities of Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. In view of the great popularity of Keystone comedies new buildings are being added to the Keystone studios and Director Sennett is being given greater facilities and a more liberal choice of actors for use in his productions. Some of the recently engaged comedians will be introduced in a multiple reel comedy that will surpass "Tillie's Punctured Romance," unless Mr. Baumann is very much mistaken. Whatever he may have heard about the story and the manner of its presentation, it has been enough to kindle his enthusiasm, for he doesn't hesitate to prophesy that it is going to be the best thing Sennett has done and that, of course, is saying a good deal.

Then, beginning in April, the Mutual program will contain two feature pictures every month, for which Mr. Ince will be responsible. And in connection with the place these features and others are destined to occupy in the average theater it is interesting to note Mr. Baumann's estimate of the tendency of the market. "Long pictures with single reels for fillers are wanted by exhibitors," he said, and then to avoid the possibility of being misunderstood, he made it clear that he has no intention of slighting short subjects on that account. Because it goes without saying, he did not bother to declare that there is plenty of room for both.

Producing companies at all advantageous locations in America, that the backgrounds may meet the requirements of any story selected, is an aim on the point of being fulfilled by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The studios at Edendale and Santa Monica having proved inadequate for the present program, additional quarters have been secured at Hollywood. As a result of a trip to Florida made by Mr. Baumann and Mr. Ince a new studio will be opened there, and at Fort Lee, N. J., in what was formerly the Willet studio, pictures will be made the year round.

When asked about his impression of conditions as he observed them on his trip through the West and South, Mr. Baumann said that he didn't have time to talk to many exhibitors, but that so far as he could see there was no reason for anybody to complain. It was apparent enough that theaters were being filled and that exhibitors were on the look-out for entertaining pictures. This being true the concern of a producer is to turn out enough films of the right kind. With studios scattered about the country and a big force of actors kept busy all the while, Mr. Baumann may well indulge in an optimistic smile as he remarks that business is very good indeed.

"WEST WIND" A COMING VITAGRAPH FEATURE.

"West Wind," a four-reel feature with Darwin Karr and Eleanor Woodruff in the leading roles, in a Vitagraph production now nearing completion in Texas. This picture has been staged with the full co-operation of the United States Army officials, so that, aside from its dramatic value, the picture should prove of interest as an accurate portrayal of military life. "West Wind" is said to contain some thrilling scenes of horseback riding, as Darwin Karr is reckoned as among the most daring of screen horsemen, and, if what one hears is true, the officers at Fort Clarke, Texas, have not idly permitted Eleanor Woodruff to be without the services of willing teachers in the art of taming the peppery Texas steeds.

EDMUND HAYES TO BUILD STUDIO.

Edmund Hayes, the leading light of the Edmund Hayes Feature Film Company, with temporary offices at 1431 Broadway, New York, will build a studio in this city. He has several desirable sites under consideration. The first release of this company will be George M. Cohan's first stage success, "The Wise Guy," a play that is known around the Globe, and one in which Hayes has played for years.

With the "Universal Special" Party

President Laemmle and His Guests Arrive in Chicago and Continue the Journey On Board the Special Train.

"It's a long way to California,
A long way to go—"

BUT there isn't the slightest doubt that the "Universal Special" will make it in good form, and that Universal City will be "right there" ready for its dedication on the arrival of the big party. The start from Universal headquarters, at 1600 Broadway, New York, Friday, March 5, was an enthusiastic affair indeed. Banners were waving, autos were tooting, and excited individuals were running about trying to get into the pictures which Jack Cohn was taking for the Animated Weekly. And it is a safe bet that a considerable number of Manhattan's five million got their smiling faces registered on the film.

Even Broadway was shocked by the procession of autos which swept from headquarters over to the Grand Central station. The band was playing and everybody stopped to wave at the departing travelers.

President Carle Laemmle and family boarded the train; likewise Louis Laemmle, F. Schraeder, P. A. Powers, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Hoffman, Hy Mayer, the cartoonist, Homer Croy the humorist and his bride, Joe Brandt, Mr. Eisenstein, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grau, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wolf, George McGee and others. The special itself was to be made up in Chicago, where guests from all parts of the country were converging for the 'cross continent journey.

The long journey was begun under the happiest of auspices. The weather was bright and mild; but winter had one of its surprises in store and it was not long before the flakes were beating against the windows of the Lake Shore Limited that bore them westward. There was no sign of frost or cold inside though; cosy jollity and good comradeship were the rule in the bright cars and the party in the best of spirits were enjoying every moment of the evening. At breakfast time next morning the train was plugging through the drifts of Ohio. The pictures of the country, farms, villages, cities and bare forest trees, were set off in that clean fresh white that lifted everyone into even more companionable frame. On Sunday the train pulled into Chicago.

Many Universalites met the party at the depot and while they were in the city they were entertained by Witt Cochrane, of the Cochrane Advertising Agency, and E. J. Mock, Editor of Motography. After a few hours in the Lake Metropolis, they boarded the "Universal Special," their number greatly augmented by a large party of exchangemen and exhibitors, guests of the president of the Universal Manufacturing Company, and began the second lap of the journey to Universal City, a new incorporated community in San Fernando valley, one of the loveliest spots in all California and not more than ten miles from Los Angeles. It is 750 acres in extent; has over 1,500 population, a mayor to govern it and all the facilities and comforts of the best modern cities, including schools, churches, efficient police, firemen, and health board. The party is to help in the inaugural ceremonies when the new city will be officially set on its feet on March 15.

About the Chicago Dearborn street railroad station, as they set forth, there were flags waving and banners floating on the breeze. A band was playing "California and You" and a battery of motion picture cameras were working all the time.

The train will run over the Santa Fe route making four stops: at Kansas City, where the party is due Monday morning; Denver, where they are scheduled to arrive Tuesday morning; Grand Canyon, at which sight-seeing stop they are due Thursday evening and Los Angeles, where they are due to arrive Saturday evening. From Los Angeles they will go directly to Universal City.

The following were added to the party's manifest of sight-seers: Witt Cochrane, E. J. Mock and wife, Messrs. Plough and Flaherty, Watterson R. Rothacker, W. J. Page of Cincinnati; C. Hague, of Toronto; E. F. Dardine, of Charlotte, N. C.; J. Schnitzer of Indianapolis; C. A. Clegg of Calgary; A. A. Schmidt of Buffalo; J. A. Eslow of Boston; Mr. Hopkins of Buffalo; Mr. Thompson of Cleveland; Mr. Lux of Cincinnati; Mr. Bryson and wife, of Minneapolis; Mr. Carrick and wife, of Philadelphia; Mr. Swaab and wife, of Philadelphia; George Weeks and wife, of Detroit; Mr. Oldknow, of Atlanta; Mr. Fichtenberg and wife, of New Orleans; N. F. Brentlinger and J. Warren Kerrigan Mustard, of St. Paul.

Mr. Joe Brandt, manager of the Universal Home Office who accompanied the Laemmle party to Chicago on the Twentieth Century, and who has been Mr. Laemmle's right hand man in the hard labor which has been attached to the planning and construction of Universal City, is returning to New York, to manage things at 1600 Broadway during Mr. Laemmle's absence.

Universal Special Leaving Chicago, Sunday Evening, March 7.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

THE LEAGUE IN INDIANA.

Dr. Rhodes, Secretary, Relates Some Facts About the New Organization—All Film Men Admitted.

The Indiana Motion Picture League was reorganized Wednesday, Feb. 17th, at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Ind. Formerly Indianapolis had as strong a league as any state in the Union, having enrolled 500 members. Then the split came in the National League at the New York Convention in 1913. Indiana stood divided, and from that time there has been two factions in this state. At the meeting Wednesday, Feb. 17th, leaders and strong men from both sides were present and we decided to bury the hatchet and reorganize as one strong association.

The new officers elected were L. O. O'Donnell, Washington, Ind., president; Wm. A. Keating, Terre Haute, Ind.,

Officers of the Indiana Motion Picture League. Jos. Gavin, Treas., L. H. O'Donnell, Pres., J. M. Rhodes, Sec.

vice-president; J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis, secretary; Jos. H. Gavin, Indianapolis, treasurer. The board of directors consist of the officers and A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; F. M. Mouser, Indianapolis; F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; B. A. Rodabaugh, Dunkirk, Ind., and Wm. Lipps, Alexandria, Ind.

At a recent directors' meeting it was decided that the Indiana organization should be an organization for all exhibitors, exchange men, feature film men, manufacturers, and in fact anybody who is connected in any way with the motion picture industry. The board of directors felt that if all who were connected with the industry were united as one strong organization, there would be a better feeling and more harmony among all so connected. The board of directors felt that the exhibitors haven't any fight with the exchange men, nor the exchange men with the exhibitors. We are all working together for one common cause, and an injury to one is an injury to all; therefore, by banding ourselves together, we will work for mutual interests.

Robert Lieber of the General Film Exchange, Joseph Schnitzer of the Universal Exchange, H. A. Bandy of the Mutual Exchange, M. M. Miller of "Runaway June," Mr. Conners of the "Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," I. Beitman of the American Feature Film Co., Mr. Bingham of the Empress Film Exchange and Mr. Schraeder of the Box Office Attractions Co., paid their initiation fee and joined the League with the exhibitors when it was decided that their membership and co-operation was desired.

A very dangerous bill was presented in the Indiana Legislature last week known as the Judkins censorship bill, which, had it passed, would have created a state censorship board for Indiana. The new state League immediately got active and demonstrated to the members of the Legislature that this bill was unjust, un-American and unnecessary and the bill was killed. At the convention a resolution was passed condemning all state censorship and all municipal censorship laws and ordinances as unjust, un-American and unnecessary, and the work of the National Board of Censorship was indorsed as adequate fair censorship against undesirable films.

There are 700 exhibitors in the state of Indiana and we expect to have 500 members in the next three months.

THE INDIANA MOTION PICTURE LEAGUE,
J. M. Rhodes, Secretary.

HARRISBURG EXHIBITORS ARE ON THE JOB.

There was a recent meeting of the moving picture exhibitors of Harrisburg and Dauphin County, Pa., at which a large membership was present. The main business transacted was the election of a committee, with Peter Magaro as chairman, the purpose of which is to visit the members of the legislature and the senators of that district.

On the 25th of February the entire committee called on Hon. E. E. Beidleman in a body and asked him to stand by them in endeavoring to have this censorship bill repealed which is to be introduced on the 2d of March. There was quite a lengthy discussion of the subject, at the conclusion of which it was found that Mr. Beidleman is very much in favor of having the bill repealed.

Mr. Breitinger, the censor, wanted Senator Beidleman, senator of Dauphin county, to present a bill before the senate to raise his salary from $1,500 to $4,000, and that of clerks who are now getting $1,000, to $2,000; that of rewinders to $600 and that of operators who work only a short time during the day to $100 a month, but he refused to handle the bill, having too many moving picture friends in his district.

NEW CALIFORNIA LEAGUE QUARTERS.

The offices of the California State branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the San Francisco Local have been removed from the Phelan Building, where they have been located for a long time, to the third floor of the Mechanics Building, 948 Market street. The new location is near the center of the film exchange district and is also in the heart of the Market street amusement center, making it convenient of access. Plans for the reorganization of the San Francisco Local are now under consideration, and President Beach of the State League will shortly issue a call for a special meeting. The annual election of officers of this organization has been postponed, but will be held at an early date.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS PREPARE FOR NEXT BALL.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which was held in Rathbone Hall on Wednesday, Colonel Henry Kincaid, of Kincaid's Theater, Quincy, Mass., and Herman L. Sivovolos, of the Dreamland Theater, Boston, were added to the board of directors. A ball committee, comprising Samuel Grant, of the Eastern Theaters Company; J. Laurie, of the Modern and Beacon Theaters, Boston, and Herman L. Sivovolos, of the Dreamland Theater, was appointed to start making arrangements for the annual ball. Mr. Grant was chairman of last year's committee and the success of this affair was largely due to his untiring energy.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Way of the Transgressor.

F. A. RICHEIMER, of the Great Northern Manufacturing Co., of this city, returned from Harriman, Tenn., Sunday, March 7, where he had spent a week attending the trial of C. H. Rose, with aliases E. H. Boehm, Edward A. Bohn, Count Edward von Wallstatton and E. V. Wall.

On Tuesday, Dec. 8, at the instance of W. C. Scott, owner of the Edsonia theater, in Harriman, the man was arrested on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Mr. Scott had read, in the Dec. 5 issue of the Moving Picture World, an article warning exhibitors against a man who purported to represent the Great Northern Manufacturing Co. and taking orders for dinner ware to be used for premiums, usually collecting some money in advance on each order. The description printed in the World fitted the man C. H. Rose. A search at the police station showed that the linen of the prisoner was marked E. A. Boehm, while the letters in his pocket bore the name of C. H. Rose. The prisoner was arraigned in the police court and held by the magistrate to await the arrival of the Great Northern Company's representative from Chicago.

"Rose" was given his hearing on Dec. 17, and was bound over in a bond of $1,000 to await the action of the grand jury on the first Monday in March. In default of bail he was committed to prison until the day of trial.

Mr. Richeimer appeared before the grand jury Tuesday, March 2, and Rose was indicted, the trial being set for March 6. Judge Hicks, of the state district court, presided at the trial. The jury brought in the verdict of guilty, on the charge originally made by Mr. Scott, the penalty for which by statute is from three to ten years, according to the behavior of the prisoner.

The prisoner will be compelled to work in a coal mine, with murderers and other criminals, white and colored, during his term.

Miss Dorothy Warshauer Wins in "Sue" Contest.

The ten weeks' contest for the honor of being the leading woman in an Essanay photoplay ended Thursday, March 4, and the result was announced in the Chicago Herald in Sunday's issue, March 7.

Miss Dorothy Warshauer, after a most spirited contest, in which Miss Florence Tighe made a tremendous spurt in the last week's running, has been declared "Sue."

More than three months ago the Herald decided to start a contest to find the most popular girl in Chicago with moving picture patrons. An agreement was entered into with the Essanay Co. to write a scenario so that moving picture patrons, not only of Chicago, but of the entire world, will have the opportunity of seeing Chicago's most popular girl in a film play.

More than 800 girls were entered in the contest. A board of five judges selected forty-two from the list to be voted upon by the Herald family. The voting was close and heavy for ten weeks, and ended Thursday night, March 4, with Miss Warshauer's selection. She will be awarded the "Sue" diamond which has been on exhibition in the window of Peacock's jewelry store for several months past, and a portrait to be modeled by Hoffman, the famous Chicago sculptor.

Miss Warshauer was notified of her victory after the votes were counted. She was so pleased she was hardly able to express her joy over capturing the honors.

"Just say for me I do not really know how to thank the Herald and the people who elected me by clipping coupons and voting," she said. "I wanted to be 'Sue,' but did not know I had so many friends or would win the chance to represent Chicago in the motion pictures. I worked hard, but am sure the other girls worked just as hard. I wish we all could have won.

"I only hope I will be able to justify the selection and that the Herald and my friends will not be disappointed when the photoplay is shown on the screen. I never have had any motion picture experience, but I intend to work hard and do anything and everything the directors of the Essanay company request. I am sure that with their coaching the photoplay will be a success."

The Essanay Company has finally decided on taking the first ten on the voting list and they will be notified when to appear for the production of the "Sue" picture. They will be coached by directors of the Essanay Company, and the photoplay will not be produced until they have become perfect in their parts.

Following are the names of the ten girls with the votes secured in the contest: Dorothy Warshauer, 1,653,355; Florence Tige, 1,263,930; Gladys Swain, 574,655; Myrtle Johnson, 523,800; Beatrice Brown, 432,000; Marguerite Foster, 397,050; Elizabeth Garry, 368,770; Alice McChesney, 289,280; June Price, 256,900, and Hazel Daly, 215,975.

Following is a brief synopsis of the "Sue" photoplay: The photoplay opens in the office of the city editor of the Herald. He is swamped with pictures of pretty girls who desire to play the part of Sue. The scene changes to the home of Senator Howland.

Sue Newland, his pretty daughter, is alone in the library. She is bored to death. She picks up a copy of the Herald and sees an advertisement about the contest for "Sue." She decides to enter. She sends her photo to the newspaper and is informed that she has been chosen among a number of others to pose at the Essanay studios for a trial film. Jack Rankin, one of the Herald's star reporters, is assigned to cover the story at the Essanay plant.

He goes about it very peevishly. J. Mortimer Rose, son of a millionaire, is a suitor for Miss Newland's hand. He learns she has entered the contest and is very angry. He accompanies Jack to the studios, where he remonstrates with her. Jack falls in love with her at first sight. Rose is given the cold shoulder. Later Rose enters the newspaper office and fights with Jack. The next evening Rose is taken in a gambling-house raid. Jack, because of Sue, gets the police captain to let him go. Rose leaves the city, and the next morning the Herald announces Miss Newland has won the contest. Jack hurries to tell her the good news. There is a happy love scene and the photoplay ends.

Respect the Men of Our Navy.

I have before me a circular letter to moving picture producing companies and others interested, concerning the depiction of enlisted men of the navy in moving pictures in an unfavorable light, from Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy, and another from George H. Bell, commissioner of the department of licenses of New York City.

Commissioner Bells' letter states that a short time ago a delegation of blue jackets of the United States navy called on him and asked that action be taken prohibiting the showing of moving pictures of blue jackets in various vicious resorts. Mr. Bell further states that they brought to his attention one specific film and informed him that it was the regular practice of film manufacturers in the productions of scenes in dives, saloons and other low places, to display blue jackets prominently among those present. They complained that very often in the worse resorts the audience was almost exclusively blue jackets. Commissioner Bell in closing his letter says:

"I believe that if the attention of the manufacturers of motion picture films were drawn to this matter they would be glad to do their share in helping the blue jackets, and I am writing to ask if you will be good enough to present it to them. It means no sacrifice to the manufacturers to comply, and a great number of high grade young men in the service of which we are all proud will be grateful to them."

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, in his circular letter, says in part:

"The Department requests that scenes be not incorporated in pictures which present in an unfavorable light men in the uniform of the Navy, or in a uniform that is similar to the regulation uniform.

"At the present time there are some 51,000 enlisted men in the Navy, serving on board our ships in all parts of the world. This body of men is as moral and self respecting as any class of men in the country, and is drawn from among the best young men that our citizenship affords. During the past year out of approximately 83,775 applicants for enlistment in the Navy only 13,780 were accepted, which indicates the care with which men for the Navy are selected. The uniform is, of course, distinctive, and to depict scenes of drunkenness, immorality or debauchery in which men wearing this distinctive uniform are shown as participants reflects upon all men who wear that uniform. This is not only an affront to the splendid body of men themselves, and to the parents and relatives of men who are honorably serving their country, but it gives all people who see the objectionable pictures a false idea of our Navy and the class of men that are rightly considered the nation's defenders.

"Aside from this, which pertains to men already in the service, such pictures would have the effect of deterring many self respecting young men who see them from entering the Navy if they thought that life in it were as depicted in dissolute and immoral scenes; parents would not want their sons to enlist under such circumstances; and many people would become prejudiced against the Navy and its fine and manly body of enlisted men.

"It may be further explained that in the last generation the character of the enlisted men of the Navy has undergone a great change. Terms such as "drunk as a sailor," etc., the idea that the Navy is a reformatory, and other ideas of a like nature, are no longer justified in connection with sailors of these days in general—they certainly are not justified as pertaining to the class of men that now constitute the enlisted personnel of the United States Navy.

"The Department will appreciate any action which you may take that will remove such scenes from your photoplays."

The extracts quoted require but little comment. The personnel of our navy is superior to that of any other nation. The men are drawn from better social circles, as a rule, than the naval forces of any other country. Many of these men have had university training, and quite a number of them are men of fortune and of good families, who take advantage of the training on board our warships to make healthier and better men of them all around. Most of the men are of good character, good habits and clean living, and have been carefully selected on these grounds as well as because of their sound physique.

Manufacturers and directors of moving pictures should, therefore, be careful to excise all scenes reflecting on the good name and moral standing of our men of the navy.

Chicago Film Brevities.

James Martin, manager of the Magic Theater, Fort Dodge, Ia., writes me that Miss Ruth Stonehouse, of the Essanay Company, will appear at that theater on Mar. 20 and 21. She will be the third star of the General Film Company's films to appear at the Magic, Mr. Bushman having appeared in it about a year ago, and Miss Lillian Walker in the month of November last. Mr. Martin states that business has been very good for the past month and that everything points to exceptional business this spring.

G. P. Hamilton, president and general manager of the Albuquerque Film Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Cal., stopped over in Chicago one day last week, on his way from New York to the Coast, and paid this office a call. Mr. Hamilton left Los Angeles for New York on Feb. 20 to look over the situation created by the reorganization of Warner's Features and, as vice-president of the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., was naturally interested in knowing just how the affiliation with the United Film Service will be effected. He stated that he was happy to report that the organization has brought about splendid results. He spoke in praise of Mr. Graham, who succeeded Mr. Power as president, and stated that the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., are stanchly behind Mr. Graham and willing to assist him in every way necessary. He stated that his company is producing at the present time two comedies every week, bearing the Luna brand and featuring Miss Dot Farley.

A new house, the Lawrence, located on the northwest corner of Kedzie and Lawrence avenues, is under construction, and when completed will be leased by Alfred Hamburger. The new house will represent an investment of about $165,000. This is Mr. Hamburger's second venture in moving picture theaters on the North Side, the Pine Grove, on Sheridan Road, being the other.

David Horsley, manufacturer of films of the MinA brand, passed through the city from New York on his way to Los Angeles, Thursday, March 4. He called at the World office, but I was engaged elsewhere at the time. Mr. Horsley succeeded in getting considerable publicity from the daily press of Chicago during his stop-over. A long article by Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Tribune was devoted to the text announced by Mr. Horsley, "I have to do things differently. I don't follow after other men; they have to follow my trail." Kitty closed her article with the following tribute: "Mr. Horsley, in the variety and extent of his ideas, with their practical and humorous tinge, is like nothing so much as a moving picture himself."

Luman C. Mann, who successfully lectured on the Williamson Submarine pictures at the Fine Arts and Studebaker theaters here, also lectured on them for the week of Feb. 28, at the Orpheum theater, Milwaukee, a Saxe vaudeville house. Mr. Mann stated that nearly $4,000 for the week was the result. He has also been engaged to lecture on these pictures for a run of two weeks in a Minneapolis theater, in the near future.

Miss Grace Darling, of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, arrived in Chicago from the Frisco exposition, Saturday, March 6. One of the trips she made while here was out to the big Selig plant on the Northwest Side, where she was shown all the mysteries of film making by Mr. Selig himself. A cameraman took a snapshot of Miss Darling and the head of the Selig plant when they were humorously engaged in conversation. Miss Darling was effusive in her praises of the expositions at San Francisco and San Diego. "The Panama-Pacific is so massive, so impressive," said Miss Darling. "I'm still in a daze over all I saw. And the San Diego fair is so dainty, so artistic, it just couldn't be prettier." Accompanying Miss Darling was Miss Hazel Deyo, whose pen name is "Jane McLean," and whose stories on married life, in the Hearst evening papers, have attracted widespread attention.

The regular Sunday religious services at the Oregon state penitentiary was dispensed with, temporarily, on March 8, with the approval of Governor Withycombe, in favor of a moving picture program. For the succeeding four Sundays prisoners will attend moving picture shows instead of religious services.

MAX C. ANDERSON IS DEAD.

Max C. Anderson, best known to the show world as one partner of Henry M. Ziegler, in conducting vaudeville enterprises, died at his home, 88 Central Park West, New York, on March 8th. Death was due to a complication of diseases, of which anaemia was the most serious. Mr. Anderson was 54 years old and had been in the show business thirty-five years.

As a motion picture man he first came into prominence as the organizer of the French-American Film Company, through which he handled the Sarah Bernhardt films on the state rights basis. He was one of the first to sell state rights to a picture, and his profits, first with the Bernhardt pictures and later with the Mendel Beiliss and other films were large. He died a wealthy man. Funeral services were held at the Elks' clubhouse on March 10th. The honorary pallbearers were E. F. Albee, A. Paul Keith, Martin Beck, John Ringling, A. S. Stern, John Omwake, John Havlin, George H. Nichols, Henry M. Ziegeln and J. J. Murdock.

BATTLE CREEK THEATER FASHIONED AFTER STRAND.

The Strand theater of New York City is being used as a model by Glenn Cross and H. E. Lipp, who are proposing to open a moving picture theater in Battle Creek, Mich. While the proposed structure will not be as big as the theater which Messrs. Cross and Lipp are using as an example of a beautiful picture house, it will be erected along similar lines. A three-story fireproof structure is to be built by Charles E. Kolb, which will cost something like $30,000. Negotiations were completed recently by Messrs. Cross and Lipp for a 15-year lease of the building. The plans call for the theater to occupy the whole building, and it will contain about 600 seats. A pipe organ has already been bought. The width of the building will be 40 feet.

Doings at Los Angeles

A SAD fatality occurred here this week when Clarence Chandler, aged 30, a cowboy rider for the Lasky company, was shot and instantly killed by a bullet fired from some gun in a battle scene at the Lasky ranch. An attack was being made and Chandler was one of the attacking party. Blanks were being used, but some guns were really loaded with bullets so that the scene would be realistic with splintering timbers. Suddenly Chandler dropped to the ground, and it was seen that he was dead. It was not ascertained from whose gun the fatal pellet of lead issued, but accidental was the verdict. Deceased leaves a widow and three children, living at 1614 North Alvarado street, and the western film world is in deep sympathy with the survivors.

As was stated in last week's doings, the New York Motion Picture Company is to move the larger part of Inceville in to town. This was officially announced a few days ago. Here are the facts: A twelve-acre tract has been leased. It lies between Sunset and Santa Monica boulevards, and is bounded on the other three sides by Fountain avenue, and Hoover and Delmar streets. It was stated that at least $100,000 would be expended in a complete and down-to-the-minute studio, including every department and branch for the making of moving pictures. Contracts have been made and, within a week, a small army will be busy on the field. It will take two months to complete. The firm also has an option, and may eventually buy the land. It is well suited for a studio site, with its long slopes, level stretches, and a small gully. There will be eight stages, a glass covered studio, 100 dressing rooms, and all the other necessary buildings and divisions. It is between Hollywood and Los Angles and is right on the car line.

Topsy turvey is no word for the condition of the Keystone. Ad Kessel hardly speaks to a soul, he is so busy directing the erection of buildings, stages, dressing rooms, and a thousand other additions. Everyone is working hard and fast and the place is one bunch of debris out of which will loom up a studio, new, big, and modern in all ways. Mae Busch who played the star part in Lasky's Beauties on the Orpheum, has been engaged here and is being featured in a new picture.

Hot rivalry it is between the Queens of the Southland, and the picture queen is leading them all it seems. Last week the Evening Herald feted the beauties at Venice with an afternoon on the bench, a banquet in the famous Ship cafe, and a ball in the dancing pavilion. The picture queen was the distinctive one, and everywhere she went a generous following trailed her. This week a ball was given in her honor at Ocean Park and many photoplayers were there. Frank Goode, of the Mutual, one of the star cameramen, snapped some good pictures of the queenly aspirants to the big throne.

Here is a really, truly honest story. Bruce Mitchell, doing a Thistle comedy for the Crown City Co., with Allan Fralick and Rena Rogers, is treasuring a wad of confederate bills. The comedy "The Hidden Treasure of Hiram Scroggs," calls for Fralick to jump in a window of the farm house and shoot at the clock which was fixed with a roll of money. He tripped, fell and smashed into an old horsehair couch which had been loaned the company. He went clear through and when they pulled him out it was found that a treasure had been discovered in the inside of the couch. The roll of old bills had been uncovered, by accident, and the camera got the whole show.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Mawson Antarctic Pictures

Afford Laughter, Thrills, Tears and Scenes of Wondrous Beauty—Twenty-Five Thousand Comedians.

"ROYAL penguin tastes like canvas-back duck—flavored with kerosene oil." Sir Douglas Mawson made this statement at Weber's Theater last Monday night during his illustrated lecture, "Racing with Death in Antarctic Blizzards." Two years spent in Adelie Land upon a restricted diet of imported food gave the explorer an excellent opportunity to prove the truth of his remark. Sir Douglas told many other interesting facts about his expedition and was listened to with the closest attention for nearly two hours and a half. His quaint touches of humor awoke hearty laughter; the courage and hardihood displayed by him and his companions, filled his hearers with admiration; the story of the death of Lieutenant Ninnis and Dr. Mertz, and the miraculous escape of Mawson himself, held everyone breathless with awe and compassion; and the still and moving pictures thrown upon the screen furnished many scenes of beauty and grandeur; moonlit icebergs in form like gigantic mushrooms; fierce blizzards that blotted out the sight of a man's hand held before his face; terrific winds that blew two hundred miles an hour and drove everything before them; and, last of all, wonderful views of bird and animal life in the frozen seas and desolate lands about the South Pole.

The whole civilized world is familiar with the exploits of this intrepid Englishman and his brave companions. Sir

A Mushroom Island.

Douglas has a most likable personality, an excellent speaking voice and shared equally with his pictures the favor of the audience. This, in itself, was a remarkable achievement, as nothing more novel and interesting in photographic art has ever been show in public. From the moment the explorer's ship, "Aurora," leaves Hobart, Tasmania, and is seen plunging through seas that roll and tumble to the height of sixty feet and are never still, until the last view fades away, the work of the cameraman is a source of astonishment and delight. The audience was especially enthusiastic over the moving views of the ship forcing her way through the ice. These pictures were obtained by lowering Mr. Frank Hurley and his machine from the bowsprit of the vessel, by ropes, the result more than justifying the risk.

Of the seascapes, the glorious lighting on the icebergs, it is difficult to write without dealing in superlatives, their use being demanded by the beauty of the pictures. Educationally the views are also of the highest vaue. The living records of the animals and birds of this desolate region; the sea lions and sea elephants; the royal gray and the snow petrels—those cliff-dwellers of the Frozen South—are beyond price.

The penguins deserve a paragraph by themselves. The lamented J. H. Haverly, of minstrel fame, was wont to advertise his troupe thus: "Forty—Count 'em." Imagine twenty-five thousand comedians in one group, each actor endowed with an unctuous and grotesque personality, whose every movement excites laughter and who are unconsciously but incessantly performing and a fair conception of a colony of penguins may be obtained. Add to this that every one of the birds is a high-diver of unsuspected skill, and to see them play "Follow your leader" into the water, then out again, landing with a surprising leap upon the ice, is to behold a "stunt" that sets "advanced vaudeville," even when aided by Emma Calve, a difficult pace to follow.

The baby elephants are another group of finished comedians. John Bunny at his best never excited greater laughter than one of the young elephants when he awoke from a day dream, assumed an expression of pained surprise, and scratched his nose with his flipper.

A striking example of the marvelous utility of wireless telegraphy was given when the Mawson party from its hut buried beneath the snows of an Antarctic winter, kept in touch with civilization by the aid of the Marconi invention. Hardly less marvelous is the bringing back to the inhabited globe the indisputable proofs by means of the moving picture machine, of Mawson's account of life and adventure at the South Pole.

Little Madge Evans in "Alias Jimmy Valentine"

MILLIONS of people on both sides of the Atlantic know little Madge Evans, aged five, by sight; she is one of the most pictured, most photographed, most filmed little girls in the world.

Typically English in appearance, this child has caught the fancy of illustrators, poster designers, advertising experts on both sides of the Atlantic, and the result is that her beautiful face and features are familiar by sight to millions.

In the World Film Corporation's five part photoplay, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," released February twenty-second, Madge Evans plays a small, but vital, part. She is the little sister of Rose Fay, to whom the reformed Jimmy is engaged. A detective is after Jimmy. The child is accidentally locked in a safe, which Jimmy opens to save her life. In proving his ability to open the safe, he furnishes a waiting detective with evidence against him, and he is in danger of arrest. But love beats the law, and Jimmy goes free and the child's life is saved.

Madge Evans.

Madge Evans is an ideal small sister—lovely, supple, plastic and intelligent. She likes acting in the pictures, and her intelligence makes her easy of direction.

And she is not merely pretty to look on, but also a natural actress—unaffected and graceful—sensitive and expressive.

Success and celebrity have not spoiled her; she is entirely unconscious, in speech and action, of her beauty and other gifts.

Pawtucket Has Civic Theater

Moving Pictures Employed in Teaching Foreigners—Institution Realized by Rev. J. D. Dingwell—Is Non-Sectarian, Non-Political, Uncommercial.

THE use of moving pictures as an aid to better citizenship is not a new idea in itself. In fact, it is just this idea that hundreds of advocates of the silent drama have put forward as one of their strongest arguments for moving pictures in the public schools, and such has been one of the factors in the development of the educational film. Moving pictures used to make more intelligent "citizens" of those who are not yet naturalized, who in many cases cannot even speak the English language, is a new idea. This is the object of the Civic theater of Pawtucket, R. I., and much has been accomplished in this direction since the inauguration of the plan in 1913.

Rev. J. D. Dingwell.

The Civic theater was conceived by Rev. James D. Dingwell, pastor of the Broad Street Congregational Church of Pawtucket. A remarkable field for such an institution is found in that city of 52,000 inhabitants, separated as it is from the city of Central Falls, R. I., by a line that passes through thickly settled districts in which the occupant of a Pawtucket residence goes to Central Falls to reach his garage a hundred feet at the rear of his house. Central Falls has a population of nearly 53,000 persons. Thus there is found here a densely settled community of 105,000 persons of which nine out of every ten are foreigners. These foreigners, workers in the cotton and lace mills of this section, speak at least twenty different languages and probably forty different dialects. Such are the conditions to be met in furnishing an educational entertainment for the public.

The Pawtucket Civic theater is unique in many respects. There are, of course, various municipal entertainments throughout the United States and numerous charitable and what may be called semi-charitable forms of amusement are provided for the poor in certain communities, but none of these holds the position of the Pawtucket theater, which is non-sectarian, non-political and uncommercial. The theater found its birth in the Men's Forum of the Broad Street Congregational Church. It came as the result of a discussion brought up by the pastor as to the best method of Americanizing the foreign population of the community. In order that the necessary co-operation in the project could be had, the suggestion of the theater was submitted to various religious organizations, and public officials were consulted in an effort to obtain the opinions of those whose endorsement would help to make the success of the work possible.

Before the experiment was launched, the object of the theater was endorsed by the Governor of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Commissioner of Education, the president of the North American Civic League for Immigrants and many other prominent persons. In every case those who were asked to give expression to their opinion as to the success of the plan said that they believed the idea was unique and that the plan would have far-reaching results. During the first season the theater was conducted on Sunday evenings for five weeks. The program was composed chiefly of moving pictures, as this was the only means of reaching all of the nationalities represented in the audiences at a single entertainment. The visual translation of the pictures was made possible to hundreds of immigrants, and the entertainment was open to all persons as no admission was charged.

In an effort to pick the popular pictures and yet not offend any of the spectators, and further keeping in mind that education was the real object of the program, the committee that chose the films from the lists submitted by various producing companies found itself at a loss frequently in making its selection. It did not take long to discover that war pictures were the biggest hits from the standpoint of the audience. However, the committee believes that psychologically such reels should be avoided as far as possible. The wild west scenes were next in popularity, but there was a marked dislike for an overdose of this type of film. An explanation of the pictures always precedes their projection upon the screen. This is spoken to the audience by several interpreters who take five minutes each in his own language to outline the scenes that are to be shown. The interpreters include men whose native tongues are Polish, Syrian, Italian, Armenian, Yiddish, Greek and some of the dialects. Although this does not reach all of the persons in the audience, it furnishes a word picture of the films to the majority of those present.

The co-operation of the citizens of Pawtucket and Central Falls contributed to the financial success of the enterprise from the start, but not a little co-operation on the part of the manufacturers of films has resulted in making it possible to present the variety of pictures that was needed. In spite of the interest in the theater taken by a number of the moving picture companies, it was found that the available subjects for exhibition before the mixed audiences were scarcely enough to supply the needs of the performances. At the close of the series of programs given in 1913 a set of resolutions was drawn up by the committee in charge of the selection of films in which the manufacturers were asked to prepare "films that will deal with every moral and educational phase of our civic life—historical, biographical, sociological, hygienic and scenic." The resolutions further petitioned the companies to translate the story of the films from English into Polish, Italian, Syrian, Hebrew, etc.

The moving picture companies which received the petition considered the requests seriously, but they agreed that the translation of the stories of the films into several different languages would be impracticable. However, several firms prepared special reels showing the pictures that it was thought the Civic theater desired. The Civic theater is entering upon its second year. The natural development of the film industry has furnished many new pictures of the variety that will be of greatest assistance in increasing the efficiency of the theater. The historical subjects have increased in number to such an extent that the committee in charge of the selection of the programs anticipates little difficulty in finding a series of reels that will prove interesting and at the same time will be instructive along the lines upon which the theater is run.

NEAL BURNS WITH NESTOR.

Neal Burns, the well-known musical comedy comedian, has joined the Nestor Company in Universal City, Cal. Al. Christie, the Nestor director, visited the Gaiety theater and was so impressed with his work that he offered him an engagement in the pictures. It was accepted, and film fans can look forward to seeing this well-known comedian on the screen.

HANK MANN JOINS L-KO.

Hank Mann, of Keystone comedy fame, has joined the L-Ko Company at the Universal Coast studios.

Hallberg's Business Expanding.

Economizer Man Transfers Office and Salesroom to More Commodious Quarters on the Same Floor.

PRESSURE of business has compelled J. H. Hallberg, the man whose establishment is known as "the house of quality," to transfer his office and salesroom from the front of his floor at 36 East Twenty-third street to the rear, where in a room 25 by 30 feet he is most comfortably situated. The accompanying illustrations show how Mr. Hallberg gets abundance of natural light. His former office and salesroom have been transformed into a testing and an experimental department, and a most complete one it is. On the floor below is a large storeroom, and it is Mr. Hallberg's intention to secure additional space there as soon as possible.

Business Office of J. H. Hallberg.

Mr. Hallberg has been in his present business since 1906, when he put his Electric Economizer on the market. It was the manufacture and sale of that much-used instrument that marked the beginning of the present extensive business. Mr. Hallberg just prior to the time named had been consulting engineer for the Beck Flaming Arc Company. He was a member of the International Association of Electrical Engineers, the National Electric Light Association and the Swedish Engineers' Club of America. For four years he has been at the present address.

In the testing department Mr. Hallberg has installed every instrument he knows for testing of electrical energy. There are here volt meters, ampere meters, watt meters, and frequency meters and other necessary instruments, and, in fact, all kinds of apparatus for taking tests of apparatus. To a visiting exhibitor Mr. Hallberg is able to show him just what the various instruments will accomplish under all sorts of circumstances. For instance, if he desires to see for himself how a picture will look on a mirror screen, or a mirroroide, or a gold fibre or a day and night, it is a simple matter to put up one of these and throw on the current. Or if a visitor may be anxious to see in operation the A. C. to D. C. economizer in conjunction with the ampere meter, the volt meter and the light regulator, but a moment is required to begin the demonstration.

Sales Room of J. H. Hallberg.

Mr. Hallberg makes a point of the fact that no instrument or apparatus is placed on sale in his store until he has personally tested it and is satisfied as to its qualifications to do just what it is said to be able to do. Here will be found every make of projection machine. So, too, there are calcium gas making outfits and acetylene gas generators, which upon request are put into actual operation to show any intending purchaser just what may be done with these in comparison with electric current.

The former private office of Mr. Hallberg has been transformed into a storeroom for many of the smaller requirements of a motion picture theater. There are lamp colorings, film cements, oils, film cleaning liquids and a large assortment of the new fire-proof reel cases. Of tickets there is a stock of three million, ranging all the way from 5 cents to 50 cents. There is a big stock of carbons, ranging in steps from a quarter inch in diameter to one inch, and in length from four inches to twelve. So, too, there are condensing lenses, reels, and fittings of all kinds.

In this room also there are many pieces of used apparatus which have been taken in exchange for new and up-to-date equipment. Mr. Hallberg remarked how oftentimes a man starting in a small way, and especially if he had no competition, would begin business with second-hand apparatus, but very shortly after increasing his bank account would return looking for the latest and best. In the storeroom on the floor below there is an interesting lamphouse which was formerly in use on one of the battleships. It was made on shipboard, of heavy galvanized iron to withstand salt water, and was well made. It is hardly likely the government compels its sailors these days to use the home-made article on anything connected with the projection of motion pictures, but the old relic is proof that things were not always as they are today.

In the salesroom is a wide variety of motion picture apparatus. Lenses there are in large numbers, any kind an exhibitor desires; spot-lights, picture frames, machine parts, etc. There is a motion picture camera here which with the ordinary lense sells at $100 and with a Bausch & Lomb lens at $125. The magazine holds but 150 feet, on account of its small dimensions, but Mr. Hallberg says the instrument will do the best of work.

It is altogether a most shipshape and comfortable establishment Mr. Hallberg has, one that spells progress and progressiveness.

CHANGE IN BOSWORTH MARCH RELEASE SCHEDULE.

Bosworth, Inc., announces a change in its release schedule during the month of March which will affect the release of "Sunshine Molly," which was originally listed for distribution commencing March 18. The date of release for this production has been placed forward one week and in accordance "Sunshine Molly" will appear on the Paramount Program beginning March 11.

Bosworth has three releases for the month of March, the first being Elsie Janis in "The Caprices of Kitty." on the 8th, followed by "Sunshine Molly," featuring Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley on the 11th, and Fritzi Scheff in "Pretty Mrs. Smith" on the 29th, the last-mentioned being a Morosco subject produced in association with Bosworth.

"Sunshine Molly,' with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley in the principal characters, has just been finished and, judging from the glowing accounts of the film received from the coast, the picture promises to score another success for Bosworth, Inc. The film offers a thrilling dramatic story concerning the history of the discovery of oil in California and presents several spectacular incidents including the burning of three large oil wells. The stars are supported by such capable payers as Herbert Standing, Vera Lewis, Roberta Hickman, Frank Elliott and Adele Farrington.

INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE SERVICE.

Edwin L. Barker and P. W. Swan, formerly connected with the I. H. C. Service Bureau, announce the formation of the Barker-Swan Service. They are located in the People's Gas Building, Chicago. This service will make and circulate industrial and educational moving pictures and slides and act as an agency for manufacturers and all others who desire proper circulation for industrial, educational, health or civic pictures. The increasing interest and number of available films along this line shows one of the largest increases of any branch of the great moving picture industry.

KLEINE RELEASES THREE-REELER.

"The Crimson Clue" is the title of a new three-reel subject to be released under the Kleine standard in the near future. The story deals with a so-called incurable disease and the mistaken gratitude of a victim saved by a doctor who afterward uses his patient to commit a crime for him. The story is excellently told and highly spectacular.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THE EDITOR of a local dramatic newspaper warns vaudeville performers not to make appearances before motion picture cameras if they do not wish to suffer a big cut in their salaries by the booking agents for the vaudeville circuits. It is claimed that vaudeville managers in many parts of the country have caused their agents to cancel contracts with performers whose pictures have been run in moving pictures. It is also claimed that a prominent actress had her contract price for a vaudeville tour cut down from $2,500 to $1,500 a week because she posed for a motion picture company before starting upon the tour.

This is an old theme in new dress and, while the protest has some color of justification and is worthy of endorsement, the warning will not have any particular bearing upon the motion picture producers. It will not deprive them of talent that cannot be replaced readily, especially so when the complaining editor says two-dollar legitimate stars may pose for the pictures without depreciating their standing with the theaters, but vaudeville artists cannot.

Several years ago, before the story motion pictures were produced and manufacturers were pressed for subjects, overtures were made to performers having novelties such as trapeze and horizontal-bar acts and contortion and muscular demonstrations, tumbling and acrobatic groups, and other vaudeville performers having acts that were new and out of the ordinary were sought to pose before the camera. The vaudeville people very sensibly then, as they no doubt do now, turned down the offers because they realized that a picture presentation of their acts would precede them throughout the country, and make their personal appearance stale. Very few took this risk. Performers of magical acts readily offered their services, but the picture makers refused to accept them after a few trials, because the audiences "got wise" to trick camera work and, no matter how good the act was, the people said it was not genuine, but only the creation of camera chicanery. If the writer is not mistaken, the vaudeville acts at that time were limited to the Four Lukins, acrobats; Sandow, the strong man, and three or four others. Later on Little Tische, with big shoes, and Harry Lauder appeared upon the screen. But that line of work soon dropped from sight, so far as the motion picture people were concerned. The returns from the subjects did not justify the expenditures made to get the acts.

It is difficult to understand the distinction that is attempted to be made between the legitimate star and the vaudeville artist with regard to their appearances upon the screen. It seems that if a warning should be sounded it applies more appropriately to the former. The great exodus from the theatrical profession to the motion picture studios has been on the part of the legitimate people. All featuring in films has been with them. The argument that the class of people who attend the two-dollar shows is usually not the class that patronize the motion picture houses will not hold good now. The fact that the reverse is the case accounts for so many of the "legitimate stars" going into the motion picture plays. This attempt to make exception in behalf of the legitimate people creates a suspicion that the vaudeville magnates are trying to use the motion pictures for another big cut in salaries.

It must be admitted that recently some very clever performers on the vaudeville stage have turned their attention to the motion picures, but not with their acts. They are not wanted. The people themselves are acceptable because of their value in comedy pictures. This is the field in which nearly all of them are found and it is they, as a rule, excel the people that come from the legitimate stage. It has been suggested that possibly the protest against these vaudeville performers has been instigated by their less successful legitimate rivals. It is well known that since the introduction into pictures of that style of comedy known as "slapstick" the comedians from the vaudeville stage have gradually been displacing the more dignified funny men.

The time will probably come when there will be a falling off in the demand for the style of comedy in motion pictures that has been so popular during the past year or so, and the vaudeville comedians who furnish it may be obliged to return to their original bread-winning line. Should that time come it would be an injustice to claim that because they have appeared in pictures their drawing power in the vaudeville field has dropped a third or more. So far as any particular act is concerned, the argument will hold good, but ability remaining the same with new acts should leave their value the same, if not better. The advertising they receive through the pictures must be reckoned.

An old vaudeville performer now working in motion pictures said the other day: "I don't take much stock in that protest. It is in reality a threat to keep some of the old-timers and other good people in line. The growth of combination vaudeville and picture houses has been so great that the booking agents have a hard time to get a sufficient number of new and good acts. The so-called second circuit are tempting the big circuit performers to try and get some new faces over their circuits once in a while and the big circuits have a hard time to keep up a line of attractions that will compare with what they offered before the second circuits were started. They want the good people who can create new acts to stay with them. If I had my choice I would never return to the vaudeville stage, but I realize that I may be obliged to do so some time. If I am, why should I be discriminated against? Look at the people who have left the legitimate stage for the vaudeville circuits and have gone from there to motion pictures, and back again to the legitimate houses along the White Way. Their faces and performances have appeared upon the screen as well as mine, and the elevation of the picture houses to the standard of today have made them appear on the same screens that I have. Let me tell you, my son, that if the time comes when I must return to the vaudeville stage I will be better equipped to make good than I was before I left it. Motion picture studios are affording the best training performers ever had, whether they be 'legitimate stars' or vaudeville performers. Scores in the profession will tell you this. Few managers and patrons of the picture houses may realize it, but when a good director—and there are many of them in the motion picture business—completes a picture and it is presented upon the screen it reflects the best that is in the actors and actresses appearing in it. You do not always get that in stage productions. Indispositions, worrying, the hardships attending travel from city to city and scores of other things frequently interfere with stage performances being uniform. The picture house patrons see in California what the patrons in New York see. Nothing better, nothing less. The director has given his best and the players have done likewise in the original production, and the audiences get the benefit of it. Why, I have been on the stage for years, and in my particular line have always considered myself the best that ever happened. Experience and care to see that I did the right thing at the right time made me think I was one of the best self-made comedians on the stage. I was—to an extent. Gee! What a surprise I received when I was put under a motion picture director to show how funny I could be. In appearance he was more like a funeral director but what he showed me made me look like thirty cents. I was like a house badly in need of repairs and improvements. What he brought out of me would make a brand new comedian. 'You're all right, but there has been considerable latent talent in you. Now go to it,' and I did—and made good. Under such circumstances would it be reasonable for anyone to say that I would not be worth as much to the vaudeville stage as I was before I left it?"

A booking agent says that the real cause of complaint against vaudevillians entering the picture game is that picture-house managers by deceptive advertising create the impression that the actors are appearing in person. The same thing applies to the legitimate people. Why select the vaudeville people for condemnation? There are laws against deceptive advertising schemes and exhibitors who resort to them should be called to account. The five and ten-cent houses are not alone in the scheme. A circuit of the higher priced houses is not only doing the same thing by outside billing, but is also misleading the public by screen announcements. The trick is to display the names of the players and date of the show so much that reading at a distance the fact that they appear in pictures is shielded from the public.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Helping Exhibitors.

PROBABLY no small part of the success of the Universal has been due to the help it has given the exhibitors showing that program. They have helped the exhibitor to make money by providing him with paper, cuts and press stuff, the latter without cost and the former items at just about cost. But now they are doing something more. They are offering a series of advertisements which can be reproduced by the local printer or set by him in connection with some white-letter cuts, constituting a campaign for a decent price of admission. The same matter can also be had on slides for fifteen cents each, the cuts costing twelve cents each. It is the most helpful thing they have yet done. Their ready-made advertisements for releases have been more than helpful and now they are broadening their scope.

And Now Selig.

And now Selig has come back to a style of stuff that reminds us of the old Stanley Twist days, and Twist was the first to give the exhibitor a complete layout of stuff for a special release. The Selig matter now consists of two sections. One of these is a press sheet for the newspapers, giving a weekly letter signed by William Lord Wright, and some scattered paragraphs. Most towns have at least one newspaper department and in some places all the papers carry the stuff Sundays, at least. The exhibitor's end is looked after by a monthly herald with a handsomely lithographed cover that can be used for lobby work, items not duplicated in the press sheet, press items for each release (which was originated by Sam Spedon of the Vitagraph) and stories and casts of all the releases. With Selig it is a return to early practise, but it is none the less welcome on that account.

Not Up to Date.

The Spotlight, the general program for Galesburg, Ill., gives a short list of addresses of companies wanting photoplays. Among these it lists the defunct Eaco company. It does a local program no good to give out unreliable addresses, as when scripts get lost the publication will be blamed. One of the other addresses is that of a wildcat that wants 200 foot lengths. Huh!

Steve Suspends.

Steve Farrar has had to drop his Casino News because the owners think that it costs too much money, and while the local advertisers want to come in they do not want to pay more than a dollar an inch, and some not that. Mr. Farrar has been getting out a snappy little sheet and we do not see how advertising money can be more advantageously spent. It is not what a thing costs but what it brings in that tells the story. And the trouble is that you never know you've lost ten dollars until it isn't in your pocket any more. It is not so much that a house organ advertises your programs. The daily paper can do that for you, or you can put it on cheap throwaways. The house organ is a personal chat with your patrons. It helps you to shape their ideas and form their loyalty to you, and that is worth something more than twelve dollars in hard money.

Swagger.

James H. Gilday, who is an exile in Kansas City, where he is at the Willis Wood, sends in a "program de luxe" that is precisely that. It is cream printed in green and brown, four pages, with an inch and a half strip that folds over the top page from the bottom half of the sheet. It offers nothing startlingly new, but it is the proper thing perfectly done.

Sprouted.

B. A. Holway, of the Proctor house in Elizabeth, N. J., writes:

> Here is what is left of The Proctor News. Practically nothing, but from the ashes has risen what I think will turn out to be a bigger and better house organ of more value to us in every day. I have changed the name for two reasons: The greater number are circulated away from the theater and I argue that the title, The Motion Picture Guide, will excite curiosity more quickly than the old one, which stamps the publication as pre-eminently an advertising proposition. Secondly, inasmuch as I hope to make it in a measure self supporting I have argued to myself that a non-commital name will have more effect with prospective advertisers than one which inseparably stamps it as a purely advertising proposition (which brings us back to reason No. 1).

It should have written, "here's what we've grown to overnight." In place of the program-style sheet it is now a four page ten by fourteen inch paper, printed, set and written in newspaper style. The change in title is a happy one, since, as suggested, the house is held back until interest is gained. There is some clip stuff, some original matter and a lot of house stuff set up in such a way that it looks important and will be read. The only danger with a snappy sheet of this sort is that they find it hard, as time goes by, to resist the appeal of the advertiser and sacrifice the space rightly belonging to the reader to the business manager. If they keep up with not more than thirty per cent. advertising, they will soon get to be eight pages and still more profitable. It is a capital start, and we want to enter our subscription right here. There is an editorial column that is going to become mighty useful if it is properly handled—and it promises to be from the start.

Changed and Likes It.

J. N. Cason has come over to our side with a dated day for his program and writes:

> Here's another copy of one of our Programs, and we would like to know what you think of it.
> Both myself and printer concluded that you were correct in the criticism you had made in regard to omission of dates on the days, and the use of "stereotyped" phrases and adjectives in describing the various pictures, and so, you will note that our program has profited thereby.
> We think this is just about the neatest yet.
> Your favorable criticism of the program forwarded you, published in your issue of January 23d, was greatly appreciated by both myself and the printer, who has used your comment in a piece of advertising for his shop. Also, we have received quite a few requests from New York to Oklahoma, for copies of our programs, which demonstrates the interest and value of your "Advertising for Exhibitors" department.
> Again thanking you for the favorable comment and the valuable suggestions we find in your column, and awaiting the verdict on this program, we remain, with best wishes for the Moving Picture World.

This is the program of the Opera House, Sylacauga, Alabama. The new issue runs some type that might be described as a "readable old English," were such a thing possible. The novelty is a special cut for the front page. This is a white letter on black for about two-fifths of the page, then the rest is mortised for type. The permanent text is the familiar "There's one man who doesn't care for the movies. He's dead and buried." It is distinctive and effective. Now that they are dating the days they spell out the date, and it looks very much better as well as increasing the value of the program. We are glad that Mr. Cason is complying with requests for samples, for it is an excellent model.

Alas, too Late!

The bars are up on reproductions of photographs of men made up in imitation of Ford Sterling or Charles Chaplin. Samuel Kressing, of Philadelphia, does Sterling, Chaplin and Ritchie (same as Chaplin) and Louis Rubin, of the Hippodrome, Louisville, makes a pretty good Chaplin. It is a capital stunt—but no more photographs, please.

Too Much Display.

Glynne and Ward, of the Alhambra, Brooklyn, issue a weekly program that runs too much display. The eye gets discouraged at the sight of so much type of so many various sorts, and does not know what to pick up first. It would be better to run titles in display and straight type for the rest. A program in all display is seldom more than 25 per cent. efficient. It doesn't stick.

At Last.

At last the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., has completed alterations and has opened the enlarged house. They now have a floor space 120 by 73 feet. And they seem to need all of it.

Had the Orphans.

B. A. Holway, of Proctor's Broad Street theater, Elizabeth, had Alice in Wonderland the other day and did a deed of kindness and got some good advertising out of it by inviting the orphans to a private morning showing. That's the best sort of advertising. He writes that the new advertising sheet is suspended—which is a pity. Also he reports good success with the boy scout picture, turning an excess admission price back to the boys. He puts up a strenuous kick because we located his house in Newark, lately. We don't blame him.

Nice.

The Maxine theater, Detroit, sends in a very pretty card-calendar. The card is a regular stock design with a color paster and tied with ribbon. The interesting part is the use of the space. The calendar is on the back and only the name and address of the house appears on the front, under the vignette. Inside is a cut of the house, times, prices and all other germane information and not much else. Because they had a lot of space they did not try to use it all. They told all they had to tell and stopped. It is a great art and worthy of cultivation.

A Little Late.

Someone around the Reel theater, Cleveland, must be delegated to sit up nights and think out ideas. We lately spoke of some novel blotters. Now they come in with some new schemes. One is rather late in the day; a block of shaving paper on a card that tells the recipient to get a real shave and then go to the Reel theater. The safety razor has robbed the shaving paper of its old charm. It would have been better to have issued the same thing in the guise of a memorandum pad. It still can be done by others. It is a card 5½ by 9½ inches, on which is stapled about 50 sheets of cheap news paper about 5 by 6 inches, the reading being at the top. The lower third of the card is a coupon good for more paper if the name and address are signed and the card is presented at the theater. The changed text might read: Jot it down here, then go to the Blank."

A second issue is a vest pocket sized book asserted to be the list of theaters where you can see a better performance than that offered at the Reel. The pages are blank and can be used for memoranda. The idea is not new, but the adaptation is.

Now After That.

Clyde D. Klinger, of the Palace theater, Harrisburg, Pa., writes:

> I am a subscriber and reader of The Moving Picture World, which I feel that no exhibitor or manager can be without if he has the moving picture industry at heart. I find that the World is the only guide that I can follow and will say that it is one, and the only one, that the advertisements as well as the news paragraphs are read. As to your different departments, wish to say the projection department is fine, but, as a manager, find the Advertising for Exhibitors department the best I have ever come across and it is the first thing I read when receiving my World every Monday. Am enclosing you two of my latest programs and would like you to give your opinion on them.

After that pat on our bald spot it would be tough to have to throw rocks at Mr. Klinger's programs, but fortunately we do not have to poke any holes of consequence. He has an eight pager, a day to the page, days dated. He uses about all the type he can get on a page after the cuts are laid in, but someone knows how to lay the cuts and set the type around them so the lines can be read. This is because there is not much use made of display stuff. It is an orderly arrangement that leads the eye from one paragraph to the next instead of throwing them all up at once. Mr. Klinger seems to believe in cuts, for there are two or three to the page, scene cuts or portraits, anything to get the pictorial effect and hold the eye. The front page layout for the week of February 15 is better than that for the preceding week. All of the pages have a rule border, mostly linotype work, but good. It gives a finished effect to a small page (6 by 9) that helps throw up the type. One thing that helps make the crowded page readable is the careful use of cut off rule that keeps the items apart, and this is a matter worth watching.

Again.

Now and then the Academy of Music, Selma, Ala., drops into print again. This time it announces a slight raise in price for features with a careful explanation as to why. There is no exaggeration, just a simple statement of fact, and a list of coming releases to prove the point. Like other recent issues it is a nice thing to look at. The cover is dark green with yellow ink—an odd, but effective, if not overstrong combination. Inside the pages are heavy cream enamel stock printed in brown with a border rule letting in the Paramount trade mark at the top and the name of the house at the bottom. Everything that comes from the house is marked with an air of quiet elegance that cannot help but be convincing. We are sorry we do not see more of it, but such work costs money -also it makes money.

Backs It Up.

J. H. Henry, of the Empire theater, Winchester, Va., sends in a blank he gave out recently. He didn't merely give them out. He stood at the door and gave them out personally and asked his patrons to fill them out. The sheet lists twelve styles of pictures, of which three are to be checked and 27 brands, five of which are to be marked. Below the list continues:

WRITE THE NAMES OF A FEW OF YOUR FAVORITE PLAYERS.

.....

.....

How many in family who attend pictures?.....
Would you rather see ordinary pictures at 5c.....
Is there any special picture you would like us to run. Answer on back.
Can you suggest any thing to make the Empire more to your liking. Answer on back.
Kindly sign name and address.....
If child is filling out this form also give parents name.....
If others in your family wish to give answers we will gladly furnish the blanks.

Of course the result will be a jumble of three services and some specials, but it will give a line on what is wanted and, done properly, it creates the impression that the manager is trying to give the fullest service.

Mr. Henry's whole letter breathes the same spirit of desire to please and show the patron that this is the desire of the management. It is that spirit that makes for the permanent patron. A manager is not a little tin god on a papier mache throne. He is, or should be, a caterer to the public taste, even while he tries to lead that taste in the direction of what is good.

Prints His Own.

A. H. Blair, of the National theater, Toledo, part of the chain of the Toledo Motion Picture Company, writes, enclosing a throwaway, explaining that they have their own power press and are planning to print their own house program. It is pretty clean typesetting, with very few breaks, even of a minor sort such as a f and an in instead of the logotype. The type is well selected for its use, being clean and readable, and the impression is good—which is where most of the home-made printers fail.

It advertises the last section of the Million Dollar Mystery and rehearses all of the questions left unsettled at the end of the twenty-second Episode, freshening curiosity and pulling the patron, if anything can. Merely announcing the showing of the solution might attract, but reminding the patron of all the things that puzzled him gets much more out of the booking. The questions may interest those who get the subject late. Here they are:

> The Black Hundred attempt once more to secure possession of the Million Dollars. Their chiefs—Braine and Countess Olga—get into the Hargreave home,
> Do they succeed in finding the million?
> Are they foiled again?
> Does Jimmy Norton marry the charming Florence?
> Who is the butler—Jones?
> What has become of Hargreave?
> Where is the million found?
> Who wins the $10,000.00 prize for the best solution of the mystery.
> These questions are answered in the final Episode of The Million Dollar Mystery.

Haynic Help.

Here's another helpful hint from the Haynic doorknob. It can be adapted to any serial release.

JUST BECAUSE YOU WERE LATE FOR THE SOUP COURSE YOU NEEDN'T MISS YOUR DINNER.

> If you were invited to a fifteen course banquet, and it so happened that you couldn't get there in time for the soup and other preliminary inconsequentials, would you stay away entirely and miss the whole feast?
> We fear that some of you are doing just that with the Master Key, which is the greatest Fifteen Course Entertainment ever devised by experienced caterers to the public taste. But it isn't too late even now to sit down to the first table. The preliminaries are disposed of, but the real substantials, are now being served up. Sit down at the table now; get your share of the good things yet to come; it is a shame to go hungry when such a feast is so easily obtainable.

For Serials.

Charles W. Mahone, of Cordell, Oklahoma, sends in a card he is using for The Master Key, but which is useful for any serial. The prices for the serial are fifteen cents, but for several weeks before it came, all of the advance advertising carried the announcement that a season ticket for the fifteen parts could be purchased in advance for $1.50 or ten cents a performance. Mr. Mahone writes that the sale put him in the clear. More than that, he is guaranteed against the weather. They can stay away, if the weather is inclement, but their money is already in the bank. The purchaser's name is written on the card that it may be replaced if lost and the old card taken up if it shows up at the door. The form is suggested in the type production given below:

$1.50 SEASON TICKET. $1.50

THE MASTER KEY

Sold to .....

Good for the entire Fifteen weeks of this Great Serial—

COMMENCING TUESDAY, DEC. 29th.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

The ticket should be given as many numbers as there are parts to the serial, and each number should be punched as presented. It might be well to announce that unpunched numbers cannot be used on other nights if the management desires to hold the admissions to that night. It is often well to sign the tickets, as well, to serve as a check.

Three Times a Week.

L. M. Carroll, who signs himself "operator and advertising manager" of the Opera House, Lancaster, N. H., sends in some throwaways for criticism, explaining that the house runs but three nights a week against the opposition's six, but they run a feature and two other reels and get the crowd.

One bill states that the public is (the bill says "are") invited to see a certain new brand "and criticize it freely, that the management may know whether more are desired." It seems to us that this is coaxing trouble. The idea is all right, but don't beg them to take up the maul. The same effect could be gotten by saying "This is a brand that has not been shown before. On the way out tell us how you like it. If you approve, we'll have more." That gives them the opportunity to express an opinion and help run the house, but it does not urge them to dig up the hatchet. A second sheet looks more like a program than a throwaway with only titles and casts. If this was on the street it would have been better had the cast been set in six point or merely the names of the players used, the rest of the space being given to snappy explanatory lines. At that the advertising is not badly done. It gets the message over.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Cutting Back.

CUTTING back seems to be one of the chief difficulties of the beginner and yet cutting back is quite simple once the mechanism of the idea is understood.

Suppose that Bill has fallen down the cliff and Lottie wants to drag him up with a rope. Of course Lottie could not do this in real life without the aid of a pulley, but we'll forget that side of it for a moment. The novice would write the scene something like this:

19—Cliff—Bill at bottom hurt—Lottie looking over the top—calls to him to be patient—gets lariat from Bill's saddle—lowers down—Bill puts under arms—she pulls him part way up—tired—stops to spit on her hands—Bill drops to bottom again—dies.

We'll suppose that this is a nice, easy little cliff with a drop of only about forty feet. Played as one scene, the camera would have to be so far away from the cliff in order to get in both top and bottom that the players would be about two inches high on a big picture. The expression could not be seen and practically none of the details of the action. But by cutting back we can get, each time, the full detail and at the same time get the suggestion of height. Look at this:

19—Bottom of cliff. Bill on ground—apparently badly hurt.

20—Top of cliff—Lottie cautiously approaches the edge—looks over.

21—Bottom of cliff—Bill hears Lottie—looks up—calls.—

22—Top of cliff—Lottie rises—in despair—undecided—has an idea runs out of scene.

23—Cliff near No. 20—Horses (Bill's and Lottie's) picketed—Lottie runs in—snatches lariat from the pommel of Bill's saddle—runs out—

24—Top of cliff—Lottie runs in with lariat—drops end over cliff.

25—Bottom of cliff—lariat comes into picture from above. Bill seizes—starts to put under arms.

26—Top of cliff—close-up of Lottie watching Bill—her face shows intense anxiety.

27—Bottom of cliff—Bill now has lariat under arms—gives signal—rises slowly out of scene.

28—Top of cliff—Lottie braced—pulling on rope—strain almost too much for her—stops—breathing heavily—afraid she cannot hold on.

29—Flash of Bill, suspended by rope, hanging in the air—shoot out to get clear sky, or suggestion of great height.

30—Top of cliff—Lottie rallies—fresh determination—lets go rope to spit on her hands—rope whips out of scene.—Lottie realizes.

31—Bottom of cliff—Dummy dropped into scene—cut.

32—Top of cliff—Lottie looks down—calls—

33—Bottom of cliff—Bill lying there—dead.

34—Top of cliff—Lottie realizes it is all over—starts for home.

This is sixteen scenes instead of one, but the actions run very little longer, and the dramatic tensity is greatly increased. Scene 26 is cut in to give Bill time to adjust the rope under his shoulders. Instead of waiting there to see him perform the operation, taking possibly ten or fifteen feet we run three feet of Lottie at the top of the cliff and come back to him with the rope under his shoulders, a saving in footage of from seven to twelve feet. In scene 31 the much abused "cut" is properly used. Some novices use cut at the end of each scene. Properly it is needed only when a scene should be stopped at the precise moment indicated. In this instance the cut is called for to end the scene before the dummy fairly lands, and before the audience can have time to see that it is a dummy and not the real player. The next time we come to the scene the actor playing Bill has taken the place of the dummy.

Working the cut back in this fashion, we get all close up scenes, we make each action show clearly, avoid waits and increase the general effect. We do not get increased dramatic suspense, because this is gained through cutting back to contrast. In contrast cut backs it might work like this.

23—Location—Bill and Jim fighting—Bill gets the better of Jim—binds him to tree—pulls out revolver—gloatingly taunts him—pretends to shoot—refined torture—finally grows serious—going to shoot—steps back—Sam and Harry rush in—capture Bill—free Jim.

Here the action all takes place in one scene. But if we flashed or cut back from Jim and Bill to Sam and Harry coming to his rescue, we might heighten the suspense and condense the action at the same time.

23—Location—Bill and Jim struggling.

24—Trail—Sam and Harry riding desperately.

25—Location—Bill bests Jim—starts to tie him to tree.

26—Trail II—Sam and Harry ride through.

27—Location—Jim tied to tree—Bill takes gun from holster—aims Harry braced for shot.

28—Trail III—Sam and Harry ride through.

29—Location—Bill laughs—lowers gun—goes to Jim—slaps his face.

30—Close up of Jim struggling to break loose and resent the insult—calls Bill names—Bill gets angry.

31—Back to big scene—Bill backs away—raises gun again—going to shoot this time.

32—Trail IV—Sam and Harry ride in rein up horses—Harry wants to turn back—they wheel horses—Sam turns—let's ride a little longer—they continue toward camera.

33—Location—Bill fingering gun—shoots—no result—shoots again—laughs—speaks.

Cut-in—"The sixth shot kills."

Back to scene—Bill goes to Harry—shows gun—four more cartridges.

34—Trail V—Sam and Harry rein in—look at each other—shooting! They urge their horses on.

35—Location—Bill shoots twice more—Jim half crazy with rage and the torment of the delay—calls on Jim to shoot home—Bill laughs.

36—Trail VI—Sam and Harry ride through—loosen guns.

37—Location—Jim about to shoot—lowers gun—looks about him—Sam and Harry dash in—shooting as they come in—Bill runs—Harry pursues—Sam goes to Jim—starts to untie.

38—Near above—Bill runs in—Harry follows—captures him—drags from scene.

39—Back to No. 37—Harry drags Bill in—Jim, now untied, and Sam help bind him—all exit.

Here, too, there is little more footage than there would be to the single scene, and a heightened suspense for, in spite of the fact that we know that heroes always are rescued, there is still the sugestion that they may be too late. Of course mere alternation of scenes is not always cutting back, but it is not difficult to cut back intelligently after very little study, but like all other points the practice work is what perfects the writer.

Mrs. Parsons Retires.

Mrs. Louella O. Parsons (as was) for several years editor for the Essanay company, has retired from that position following her marriage to Jack Murray McCaffrey. Mrs. McCaffrey (as is) will still do scripts and has the major portion of a year's contract with the Chicago Herald to fill, but the bossy half of the firm insisted that she give up her routine work. Mrs. Breuil. Mrs. Parsons. Who will be the third? Many writers have good reason to be grateful to Mrs. Parsons, and she will be missed by all.

A Newark Inquest.

A member of the New York Inquest, living in Newark, has obtained a charter for that city and will hold meetings the second and fourth Thursdays of each month. If you live in Newark or nearby and wish to join, his address will be supplied if you will send a stamped and addressed envelope.

We Have a Gun.

We have recently purchased a gun and are going to use it on the very next person who wants us to decide that the judges were unfair in any of the very numerous prize contests. The last straw was a script badly scrawled on eight pages from an old account book. The writer contended that this solution of the "Million Dollar Mystery" was more worthy the award than the ending the judges accepted. It was not, but that is beside the case. We have something better to do than to encourage people in the belief that they have been hardly used. We are not judging in any contest and will not judge in any contest and the only contest in which our name has been used that was run really on the level was the recent Universal Contest for the best theater lobbies. That was the one case where we even saw the entries, let alone having any voice. In that contest we were not only permitted to vote but the vote was counted.

We're In.

At the Feburary meeting of the Board of Control of the Photoplay Authors' League we were elected to membership. We proffered our application because we believe that the league is now doing good work and is deserving of the support of all writers who want to help others.

In Agreement.

This letter from Emily Brown Heininger should be read by a number who feel that there is no reason why they cannot write plays:

> Just a line to say that I think your page in the last issue of "The World" is one of the best on the subject of photoplay writing I have ever read. I only wish that all newspapers and magazines which devote any space to this sort of thing would copy that article on "Why all intelligent men and women cannot learn to write photoplays."
> It would save a great number of aspirants a lot of trouble and disappointment. I receive a number of letters from people whom I have never known, but who get hold of my name as being connected with this business, asking me "How to write scenarios." They seem to think that it is just about as easy as picking up a basket of chips. While I do not believe in crushing anybody's hopes or throwing cold water on their ambitions before they know whether or not they can write, I always tell them what I consider to be the truth: That is requires a bit of talent and literary ability as well as a world full of work, determination and "sticktoitiveness" to become a writer of photoplays.
> All this talk about its being easy to earn money during "spare time" is a crime and should be punished with penitentiary imprisonment. I always end my letters to these young hopefuls by telling them to buy a book on the subject, and if they can't afford the price to buy the book, to go find it at the public library. It is easy enough to learn the form of a scenario; but to be able to build up worthwhile plots, is quite another thing. I tell them it is something like writing poetry—anybody can learn how poetry ought to look to deserve its name, but how to put real thoughts and sentiments into poetic form is an art that only those who are born with a poet's talent can acquire.

An Offer.

If the gentleman who sought to hurt our feelings by telling what he thought of a recent release with our name on it will send his address we will send him some second hand and perfectly unmailable adjectives we used on the same subject and that are much more picturesque than the ones he employed.

Skipped.

Out in Denver a man was teaching a lot of boys and girls to become picture actors. At least one pupil paid her three dollars a week in the idea she would learn to write better stories through knowing the acting end. The man skipped out of town three jumps across the state line ahead of the sheriff, and before the lady learned more than to keep a tighter grip on her money.

There is only one way to learn to write scripts, and that is not by studying acting, by mail or otherwise.

Room for Work.

Sending in a practice script, an authoress wrote that she had spent a lot of time searching for a happy ending, but that she had decided that one could not be gained. To that extent she was right. The story would have been inartistic with a last-scene switch, but the author did not see that the fault of the story was lack of clear motivation. She knew why her people acted as they did, but she did not put it down in the script and so it became a rather disjointed series of fact establishments rather than a running story. She had so much that was mental she was not able to get these mental processes and a story as well into the single reel the idea was worth, and so she had some of each but not enough of either. It is seldom safe to try and write in too much of the mental. It must all go into leader or elaborate action and there is then little space—not enough—for the story these mental matter evolve.

Wants the Earth.

A recent correspondent wrote five scripts and sold two. Lately she has sold none, so she is becoming discouraged. If we had sold two of our first five fiction stories we would probably be driving a truck now for the same reason that we would have hit the chute. The lady wanted to know whether to keep on or to keep on being discouraged. She likes to write scripts. We told her if she really had in her the makings of an author nothing could stop her. Nothing can. It's bound to come out. Don't expect the earth, at least not the first year.

Discouraging.

Comes another who wants to know why we spend so much time "discouraging" young authors. We are not discouraging young authors and we are not trying to. If you get discouraged it's because you are not an author but a misfit. A man who is writing for something besides the checks cannot be discouraged. What we are trying to do is to help some of the hopeless get wise to themselves. There's a difference.

Baby Early's Play.

Baby Early is a kiddie, but she has done a lot of acting. She is with the Kriterion program and Jack Byrne sends in a synopsis she turned in to the editorial department. She is a little weak on capitalization, but she is better at spelling than some of the older folk. This is her story:

THE HEART OF THE SQUAW.

Once upon a time there lived an Indian girl. Her name was Minnie ha ha one day She got the idea to kill the white people and get the while girl for a slave. one day Alice ran away from the Indian tribe and tried to find her mother while doing the search she was captured by the soldiers and she told them of her fortune So they started off to fight the Indian. the Americans won five years later the girl and boy said thank God and minister bless you both.

She knows the need of a love interest better than those who crave the unhappy ending because it is artistic.

Proportion.

Clayton Hamilton, in an article, "Proportion in the Drama," in the February Bookman, condenses a very large truth into these words:

> When a play with an obviously interesting theme fails to hold the attention and to satisfy the interest, the fault may nearly always be ascribed to some error of proportion. Too much time has been devoted to secondary material, too little to material that at the moment seemed more worthy of attention. The serious plot of "Much Ado About Nothing," for example, tends to bore the audience, because they have grown to care so much for Beatrice and Benedick that they can no longer take any personal interest in what happens to Hero.

Now stop a moment and see how closely that applies to photoplay. You have lots of plays that did not satisfy because you grew more interested in some minor character than in the star.

Earlier in the article he writes:

> Considering the entire story of "Hamlet," for instance, it would be possible to make an interesting play in which the climax should be the seduction of Queen Gertrude by her handsome and unscrupulous brother-in-law, and the murder of the king by Claudius should constitute the catastrophe. In this play, the young prince Hamlet, remaining ignorant of what was going on about him, would play but a minor part and would be dramatically interesting only as a potential menace to the machinations of his plausible but wicked uncle. Many other plays might be selected from the entire drift of narrative from which Shakespeare derived the specific dramatization that we know so well; and it is by no means illogical to assume that the same great dramatist might have made as great a tragedy of one of these innumerable other hypothetic plays.
> But after the dramatist has made a definite selection of events to be exhibited, the nature of his play will still depend on the sense of proposition with which he develops the materials selected. What characters, what motives, what incidents shall he emphasize, and what others shall he merely shadow forth in the dim limbo of his background? Suppose the dramatist of "Hamlet" to have decided to begin his play after the murder of the king and to end it with the retributive execution of the murderer. It would still be possible to project Claudius as the central and most interesting figure in the tragedy. He might be exhibited as a man self-tortured by the gnawing of remorse, harrowed by an ever-growing doubt of the security of his assumed position, wounded to the quick by the defection of his queen, and ultimately welcoming the stroke that cut the knot intrinsicate of all his tortures. In a dramatization so conceived, the young prince Hamlet would once more be relegated to a minor role. A shift in the proportions of the narrative would alter the entire aspect of the tragedy.
> Whenever we go to a play, we witness only one of a myriad possible dramatizations of the entire story that the playwright has imagined. If we are dissatisfied with the drama, this dissatisfaction may frequently be traced to a disagreement with the playwright concerning his selection of material.

All this has been written of the drama of the stage, but it applies with equal force to photoplay. When you think of a plot, you do not merely conceive a single idea. You evolve a situation around which perhaps a dozen plays may be written. Be certain that your selection is the one that gives you the fullest opportunity.

And by the same token, in your reading, do not confine your interest to photoplay matters. Be broad and much that you meet will help, even though it is not written about photoplays.

A New Rule.

There are as many scenes to the reel as will go into a thousand feet, but you can't possibly measure a scene until it is made, so don't ask how many that is—or are.

Stolen Stuff.

The other day an author hot-footed a letter into the office pointing out that a story scheduled for production was precisely like one he had sent the company releasing it. He just dropped a line to get his information in, adding that he had written the company. And the company wrote him sending a check for the story. There had been a mix-up and that was all. That's the way so many charges of theft creep up. The author yells "Thief" without first asking the alleged thief if he really is one. If you have reason to suppose a story stolen, first write the company and find out what is wrong. A fifty dollar check is a lot better than a tale of woe, and it will buy more things.

Diagram.

Touching on interest, we wrote recently that while the incident might look like this: vvvvvvvvvvv, the interest must always be in a straight line like this: ————————. In other words, the interest must be constant to the point aimed at, no matter how the incidents moves, in incident you may have alternate fits of elevation and depression, of rising and falling action, but always the interest must be held to the central character and given the others only as they affect the leading personage. It is not possible, for instance, to center the interest on Jim through half the film and suddenly switch the appeal to his mother or his sweetheart. From the start all of the heart appeal must be made for the selected character, and this interest should not be divided. If Jim is the central character, his mother and his sweetheart are interesting only because they, as the ones most intimately in contact with Jim. They may have appealing personalities, and they may make personal appeal, but the plot appeal must all be thrown to Jim if you would have your story a success.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

Manufacturer's Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies my mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. The second half of the questions, seventy-six in number, are now ready for distribution to our readers. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 76.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What gauge is used when measuring resistance wire? What difference is there, both mechanical and electrical, when using a rheostat on D. C. and on A. C.? Explain fully. With a given voltage will a rheostat deliver more current when working on A. C. or D. C.? Suppose there be no arc, but that the rheostat be connected directly between the wires. Would it then deliver more current on A. C. or D. C.? Explain fully.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 70.

The Roll of Honor on question 70 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; John Solar, Watertown, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; Baltimore, Maryland; C. W. Brown, E. Dedham, Massachusetts; E. G. Mayer, Waterbury, Connecticut; Rhode Island; Montreal, Canada; R. E. Sivley, San Antonio, Texas; Joe Guraddux, Spokane, Washington; W. H. Brooks, Canton, Pennsylvania; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee; and one written in lead pencil without any name attached. When answering questions you should always put your name on the answer itself, not on the letter attached thereto, since the answer is filed in one place and the letter in another, and when I come to consider the answer, if the name is not on it there is no way of resurrecting it.

I have selected the reply of E. G. Mayer as best, everything considered, though some of the others were just as correct, but they would take up more space without giving additional information, and believe me, space in this department is at a great, big premium.

Reply to Question No. 70.

By E. G. Meyer, Waterbury, Conn.

The Question:

It is possible to substitute a motor generator set, called a d. c. to d. c. economizer, for rheostative resistance. The generator of such a set is so wound that a projection arc can be successfully handled without any resistance in series herewith. There being no resistance, is the energy taken from the line all reproduced in light at the arc? Is waste eliminated by these sets? Using a rheostat, there is a certain and large difference in wattage taken from the line and wattage at the arc. Using the above named economizer, how does the wattage taken from the line compare with the wattage at the arc? Explain fully.

The Answer:

Waste will not be entirely eliminated by the substitution of a motor generator set for a rheostatic resistance, even though the generator of the set be specially designed to allow the successful handling of a projection arc without resistance in series therewith. All the energy taken from the line will not all be reproduced at the arc, but nevertheless, considerable saving will be effected, as may be seen by the following comparison of the two methods.

Assuming that current is supplied at 110 volts and the arc drawing 40 amperes, with an arc voltage of 50. With rheostatic resistance, the energy taken from the line will be 110 x 40, or 4.4 k.w., and the consumption at the arc will be 50 x 40, or 2 k.w. The energy lost in resistance is therefore 110 — 50 = 60 x 40 = 2.4 k.w. This method shows itself to be very inefficient, as it will be seen that over half the energy is used in resistance. And now to consider the motor generator. A two k.w. machine would be required, consisting of a motor taking current from the line at 110 volts, the same being direct connected to a dynamo delivering current to the arc at arc voltage. The efficiency of the motor and generator may be taken at 82 per cent each, hence the efficiency of the set will be .82 x .82 = 67, or, 67%. By "efficiency" is meant the energy delivered at the arc divided by the energy taken from the mains. The energy required to operate the economizer would therefore be (50 x 40) ÷ .67, or about 3 k.w., which shows a saving of approximately 1.4 k.w. as against resistance. With current at 7 cents per k.w. hour the saving amounts to 9.8 cents per hour, or nearly 60 cents per day of six hours—quite a considerable item.

While it is not a portion of the question, still I would like to call your attention to the saving effected where a gas engine is used for power. A generator of correct voltage to supply the projection arc may be belted to the fly-wheel and an electrical efficiency of about 82 per cent obtained. In addition to this relatively high efficiency the power obtained is much cheaper than that supplied from the central station, as is more clearly set forth in the appended tables. In computing comparison costs power plant current figured as 7 cents per k.w. hour, city gas at one dollar per thousand cubic feet, and the engine is considered as consuming 22 cubic feet of gas for each h.p. hour—a very conservative estimate.

Method	Energy consumption at projector, arc-watts	Electrical efficiency, per cent	Total energy consumption, watts	Cost per hour, cents
Resistance in series.....	2,000	45.5	4,400	30.8
Motor-generator.	2,000	67	3,000	21
Gas engine and 50-60 volt compound-wound generator.....	2,000	82	2,450	7.2

I will ask our readers to kindly check the correctness of Friend Mayer's reply. I am swamped with work, and, moreover, I believe that is the better way anyhow. At a glance I do not see anything wrong with it except that in so far as his remarks regarding the gas engine outfit be concerned. I would call attention to the fact that unless he had a generator made for that particular purpose he could not operate at less than 60 volts, which would cut down his efficiency considerably, and, by-the-way, while we are on this subject, what is the reason manufacturers of small isolated plants cannot use the same kind of generator used in motor generator sets, and thus avoid all loss through resistance? Possibly it is on account of the incandescent lighting. I have not given the matter any thought.

Illuminating Large and Small Pictures.

The following is a very interesting table. Beginning with a 6-foot picture and ending with a 20, Simon Arkin has figured out the increased percentage of light made necessary by increasing size of picture, for instance: If you have a 6-foot picture and desire to increase it to 7 feet. The area of your 6-foot picture is 26.4, and the area of your 7-foot picture is 35.9 square feet, an increased area of 9.5 square feet, which will require 36 per cent. more light. In other words to illuminate a 7-foot picture to the same brilliancy as a 6-foot picture would require 36 per cent. more light. The percentage, however, decreases as the size of the picture increases; that is to say, there is a less percentage between the 10 and 13-foot than between 8 and 12-foot picture. This table ought to form a very interesting study for operators. It is based on the $^{15}/_{16}$" aperture:

Width in feet.	Height in feet.	Area, sq. feet.	Area increase in sq. feet.	Percentage of increase area.
7	5.13	35.9	9.5	36

Should Have Begun Sooner.

An operator in Nashville, Tennessee, says:

> Operators in this city are going to have to stand an examination, and, being new in the business, I realize the necessity for getting busy if I want to pass. Can't you give me the most likely questions, with answers to them? I trust you will help me out in this instance.

Nope, sorry Old Man, but I cannot accommodate you. You should have begun studying quite some time ago and should have served an apprenticeship, yet, although you have presumably been operating a machine, you only order a Handbook and "get busy" when you find that society is going to compel you to prove that you have knowledge of your profession. If you are competent you will pass, if you are not competent, you ought not to pass and I sincerely hope you do not. I could not help you anyhow, however, even if I wanted to, because I do not know what questions will be asked, and it would take a whole issue of this paper to consider the possible ones even briefly. Then, too, each question might be put in several different ways. If the examiners know their business they won't ask each applicant the same questions. They will start out by asking a question, the answer to which will give them a pretty good idea of the range of knowledge the applicant has on that particular subject. For instance: there should be a dummy equipment in the examination room. I, being the examiner, might point to a switch on the wall and ask you "What kind of a switch is that, and would it be a proper switch for you to use on your projection circuit?" Now that is a very simple question, but it would surprise you the number of men who fall down on it. My idea of your knowledge of that particular subject, however, would be formed first by the promptness of your answer and the certainty with which you made it, and by how you went about ascertaining whether that particular switch could or could not be used, assuming it to be a double-pole, single-throw knife switch.

Incidentally, if Nashville expects to get any real benefit from an examination of their moving picture machine operators it is essential that an examining board be appointed who themselves have a good working knowledge of practical projection. This thing of appointing a building inspector, for instance, as examiner makes one inclined to smile. A building inspector may be a perfectly scrumptious building inspector, and yet not know any more about the practical projection of pictures than a two-year-old-child knows about trigonometry. If the examiner has no practical knowledge of the subject, will some good friend kindly arise and explain how he is going to examine an applicant and ascertain his competency? It seems to me that sort of proposition is an aggravated case of the blind leading the blind, and yet we find many cities where the examining board for operators is composed of a building inspector, the chief of the fire department and the city electrician, which means that two-thirds of the board have no knowledge whatever of projection, and, to all intents and purposes, mighty little other knowledge that would be of any practical value in the examination of a moving picture operator, which throws the whole thing on the electrician, who, however excellent an electrician, may or may not be competent to even pass judgment on the operator's electrical knowledge as applied to projection. To sum this whole matter up, I would very strongly advise Nashville to make a very careful selection of one of their moving picture operators, and place him on the examining board, at least in an advisory capacity.

But out of the examination, in any event, good is going to come; that is proven by the letter which has brought out this comment, and you can gamble your last summer's mackintosh against your best friend's wife's side combs that this anxious seeker after knowledge is not the only good Nashville brother who is "getting busy" about now, doing what he should have done long ago, viz.: Studying good and hard.

From Fort Worth, Texas.

I recently gave space to an article by one, Warren, who visited various theaters in Fort Worth, Texas, and criticised the projection. I sent a carbon of this article to Fort Worth, and Joseph H. M. Smith has the following to say:

> I have no doubt but that Warren (he has not given you the right name, the correct dope is Werran) was in our city, but he must have not been feeling well. As to the Gem and Healy, which the gentleman criticised severely, I have nothing to say. They don't hire union men, therefore I do not care to comment on their projection. I am glad to know Werran agrees that the Hippodrome, Egypt, Philips and Orpheum have high class projection, and let me say that, with the exception of a few, every operator in Fort Worth gets above the scale. As to the number of reels run, why I cannot vouch for any except the Egypt and Philips, which run three reels for ten cents. If more than three reels are run the price is twenty cents, this being for features of not more than six reels. There is something wrong with his comment on the Odeon. The manager of that house is a man 42 years of age and a prince to work for, too. I, myself, worked for him three years and he leaves it to the operator to purchase anything needed, but demands high class results. What Werran may have seen was the assistant manager, but I do not believe he saw what he claims, because the manager does not allow that, and neither does the operator. I also want to say that ever since I worked with Archie Shephard first in 1896 I have seen no better projection than there is in the union theaters of Fort Worth. Show me any city in the country where the men get more than the scale and I will undertake to show you high class projection. A critic should be very careful to be just and fair, and to always consider the conditions under which the operator is obliged to work. I have handed the carbon copy to the business agent, and he is going to look carefully into the faults complained of.

I agree with Brother Smith. I regard the Fort Worth boys as a high class, progressive lot of men. I published the criticism, however, because it does all of us good to get a little jolt once in a while. It may hurt our feelings, but it invariably makes us sit up and look around and examine ourselves for faults. The Fort Worth boys may feel a little angry and hurt, but, even so, I venture the assertion that the effect will be beneficial.

Visit Us Again.

J. L. Beck, Faribault, Minnesota, says:

> I was one of the first to get a Handbook, and it is the best investment I ever made. Also have a set of "Hawkins' Electrical Guide." If any operator wants real knowledge on electricity he will not go wrong by purchasing set of these books. I also have a set called "Cyclopedia of Motion Picture Work," in two volumes, put out by the American School of Correspondence; concerning them all I can say is I wish I had my $9.80 back. I certainly get my share of benefit out of the department, therefore feel it my duty to help a brother out if I can, and that is the real cause of this letter. Page 512, January 25th issue, Charleston, Ill., is having trouble with his Powers A friction drive. I had the same with mine for the first couple of months, and here is what I did: Removed the motor and friction plate. Back of this I found three washers, the center one being a ball bearing. I took the balls out, filed the washer smooth, put the washers back minus the bails, and my machine has been in use fourteen months, and I have not had a particle of trouble. It works perfectly smooth. I believe the balls cut a groove in the washers on either side, which, of course, cause trouble. I find that by using resin on the fibre gear about once a week very little pressure is required.

Of course, if the balls of the bearings cut into the washer it would probably cause trouble, since ball bearings seldom wear metal evenly. Undoubtedly removing the ball bearing and substituting a washer of equal thickness would be an effective remedy, but it would require more power to drive the machine. I believe the resin proposition is a good one. I will call the Nicholas Power Company's attention to this matter. Later: The Powers Company informs me that there was some little trouble of this sort with ball bearings at this point, but that it has been entirely eliminated.

Light Rays.

T. H. Williams, Buxton, Iowa, writes:

> With relation to "Light Ray Action," page 514, January 23d issue, one is led to think from the contents of Mr. Griffiths' article that the diameter of the lens (its effective aperture) has nothing to do with the amount of light it will transmit. From the article one is led to believe that a lens is not really needed, since a pin hole would carry all the light that passed through a lens. Such is not the case. The amount of light transmitted by a lens, all other conditions being equal, depends entirely upon the size of the opening in the lens, as compared to its focal length, which brings us to the consideration of the most important qualification, and to one of the most important items in a photographic lens, viz.: its "speed." Take two motion picture cameras, close the lens diaphragm until it is as small as it can be made, which will still be larger than a pin, but will serve. Open the lens of the other full, run a piece of negative through each, taking the same view with the same light, develop these samples and you will find that the pin hole dope, as set forth by Friend Griffiths, is not the pure stuff. If the full opening produces a rightly exposed negative the pin hole one will most likely be entirely blank, which shows that the light don't get through in the way it should have done according to Griffiths, and this, in turn, shows that at least some light passes through a lens without being brought to a focus before entering. In speaking of pin hole photography, perhaps Brother Griffiths refers to the photographer. I admit there are some photographers who seem rather pin-headed, though no one would, for an instant, think of applying that proposition to Griffiths, so he need not get insulted.

Now, do not believe you have caught Brother Griffiths' idea at all, but I have not time to look up that article, read it and dope it out, preferring to leave the matter to Griffiths, who will attend to your criticism in any event better than I could.

Light Rays.

Simon Arkin, New York City, says:

> Referring to Friend Griffiths' article, February 13th issue, I will say, poor man, "geometrical optics" has got the best of him, and led him astray. In simple language, this is the course the light takes from the arc to the screen. From the crater rays of light radiate in all directions, but most strongly forward, forming a sphere of light of varying intensity, which means that certain portions of the sphere are brighter than other portions. The relative brightness of this sphere is shown in photometric charts made by electrical testing laboratories. The first principle of projection is to place the brightest portion of this sphere perpendicular to and facing the condenser. The rear condenser receives the rays which diverge from the arc, and sends them forward in cylindrical shape to the front condenser. When the slide carrier and hood are not used the rays from the front condenser form a cone, the base of which is at the surface of the condenser and of equal size with it. The cone converges towards the aperture, and the diameter of the cone at the aperature should not be more than 1.20 inches. when slide carrier and hood are used, the cone at the front condenser takes the shape of the slide carrier and retains this shape for a couple of inches, when they strike the sides of the hood, and some of the outer rays are thus deflected and lost. Incidentally I have seen no projection machine to date in which the hood was designed on scientific principles. I am willing to take this matter up with any manufacturer and design a hood which will not cut the rays of light. From the hood to the aperture the rays have the shape of a cone, the base of which is at the hood when the smaller end is at the aperture, this latter being called "the spot," and the smaller the spot the brighter the light. The importance of concentrating the light on the spot is illustrated by the following fact: the light intensity on a 15-foot picture is only 1 ÷ 40,000 of the spot intensity, without considering the absorption of light by the film and lens. From the film to the objective the light travels in the shape of a pyramid whose base is at the aperture and whose apex, as well as apex of the big pyramid, called the "throw," is at the center of the objective, the base of the big pyramid being the picture screen. From the lens to the screen we have not one or two cones, as Mr. Griffiths says, but one pyramid of light, called the throw, which is similar in shape to the small pyramid whose shape and base is the aperture. It is not necessary to take my word for this. Just examine a ray of light as it leaves the operating room. The shape of the lens has nothing to do with the shape of the light beam, because the rays do not touch the edge or perimeter, but pass through its center. I hope I have thus proven that Mr. Griffiths is on a limb of a tree, whence we will help him to descend as gracefully as possible.

Well, I don't know, Griffiths is a pretty good climber, all right. But you wait until we get this experimental plant installed and we will see who is who, and what is what, where is where and which is which, or we will know the reason why.

Well, I Don't Know.

New York City contributes the following:

I have been an operator for eight years, two on the road and six in New York. Have been reading the department ever since you started it, also I have your Handbook. I will admit they are both a great help to the operator, but a condition exists in New York at the present time for which remedy you will have to do some hard thinking. I have no axe to grind. I neither condemn owner, manager, or operator. Take the Hamilton theater, for instance, for the reason that it is near you. (You have another guess coming. I have my wigwam within one mile of Coney Island.—Ed.) This theater is one belonging to a circuit controlled by B. S. Moss. It is situated at 146th street and Broadway, Manhattan, one of the best sections in New York. It cost approximately $170,000. Show consists of pictures and vaudeville. Manager, E. Blockhaus. There are two operators; and a Simplex and Powers machine, both hand grind. One operator is also house electrician, taking care of the whole theater and the dance hall above. He receives the tremendous salary of eighteen dollars weekly, and the other, who does nearly all the actual operating, receives twelve. Now here is the point: I don't blame the manager. Why should he pay more when the projection he gets at this price is as good as in other houses which pay the union scale. See it for yourself. Don't take my word for it. After studying this proposition, I have come to this conclusion: the public cannot see the difference between a good picture and a fairly good picture. So far as the projection is concerned, they are satisfied as long as the picture is steady, in focus, has no flicker or travel ghost, fair light and fair speed. Yesterday I, myself, ran a part of the "Master Key," two reels, to about three thousand people. It was way out of focus, except the titles, of which there were many, therefore I could not focus the whole picture. My manager always asks our steady patrons how they liked the show, and, would you believe it, not one remarked about the picture being out of focus. It is the same with Vitagraph reels of late. They move up and down, owing to being improperly dried at the factory. (No. Trouble was with a perforator. It has been located and eliminated.—Ed.) Yet not one person has complained, which proves that so long as the story is there they don't seem to care. There seems to me only two ways, either use force to stop these operators from working for such ridiculously low salaries, or else stop issuing licenses for awhile. Now, don't imagine I am one of those don't-care kind, for I am not. Have been operator in about the fifth largest picture theater in New York City for the past three years, and believe I can compare my work with anyone's in the city. I am getting a good salary, but, between you and me, I do not think my work is appreciated, at least, as much as it ought to be. For instance: I am sorry to say, that if my light was not as well handled, nor my speed as well attended to as it is, the audience would be just about as well satisfied. Of course, there is a limit. I understand that. Also, please don't give me the Strand for an example of what good projection will do. There are many other reasons for the success of this house, also let us wait for a couple of years and see if the novelty don't wear off. I hope you will be able to offer some suggestion, but, first please look at it from all angles, that is, the exhibitor, manager and operator's viewpoint.

This is a big proposition, and the worst of it is, there is a lot of truth, or near-truth, behind what the brother says. However, I personally don't take quite the view he does. In the first place one of his remedies is being pretty well applied now, the shutting off of licensing. There is only about one applicant in ten passing. As to using force, why it is possible in a small way that method would succeed in the end, but it is not a good proposition just the same, nor is it one that could or would have the support of this department, except that I would certainly support the New York operators, or any other body of operators in striking for better conditions, provided there was nothing unreasonable in their demands. The inclination of the manager is, of course, to get the operator as cheaply as he can, but many of the managers carry this to the extent of making the question of wages paramount to the question of ability, and that is exceedingly bad. The work of this department has been very largely educational, in the sense that it has induced many, many managers to very largely abandon that idea, and has modified the extreme views of a host of other managers. In other words, it has sought to teach and has taught many managers the idea of extreme cheapness is not a good idea as applied to the operator, and I believe I can conscientiously say that the department has, in many hundreds of instances, convinced managers that the well paid operator is, in the end, the best operator from a purely business point of view. It is not the time to become discouraged. Five or six years ago ninety-nine managers out of every hundred had only one idea as applied to the operator, and that was how cheaply will he work; the item of ability, to all intents and purposes, cut no figure at all. I have already said that idea has been considerably modified. The department does not claim by any manner of means all the credit for this. In very many places the union itself has done a big work in educating managers to the fact that low salaries are not a thing to be altogether desired, but in other places unions have (I am glad ot say these instances are few) by their strong-arm tactics antagonized managers unnecessarily, and while in some instances they have raised wages, still all and more than they have accomplished could have been done by other and better tactics. Mind you, I am not referring to strikes, but to what is known as "strong-arm" tactics. As to the public: I do not believe your statement is true, though it may appear to be true. You need not tell me your audience did not notice that out-of-focus effect, nor that it was not annoyed by the same; they simply did not know what to do about it, but you can gamble your last summer underwear they would have been far better satisfied if it had not been present. Of course, we must grant that the public does not discriminate between perfect projection and fair projection, as you say, but remember this, old man, just a very few years ago right here in New York city projection which would be howled down by an audience now was accepted as the real thing, because there was no other kind, therefore, you see we are making progress, and we are making lots of it, too, so don't be too badly discouraged. If the facts set forth by you are true, the operator and the manager of the Hamilton ought to be ashamed of themselves. The idea of a man in charge of the projection in a $170,000 theater working for twelve dollars a week in these days of high cost of both living and loving is outrageous. I cannot excuse the manager for taking advantage of a man to that extent, any more than I can excuse the man himself for taking a job at such a ridiculous figure. I suppose the manager would reply by saying: It is a vaudeville and picture house and he does not have many pictures to project. That is not the point at all. The man has to make his living at his work, and, while twelve may be considered a "living" by the newly-arrived emmigrant wop, who cannot even speak English, it is NOT a living, at least, here in New York City, for a decent American citizen. I, personally, would as soon think of offering a man twelve dollars a week, when the cheapest eggs are forty cents a dozen and the cheapest meat something like twenty cents a pound, as I would of asking him to work for nothing. The New York operator who works for twelve dollars a week ought to have a couple of long ears glued to his skull, have hoofs instead of feet, and a black stripe extending across his back just abaft where his front legs join his body, for he is an ass, in fact, if not in form.

Flash in Lamphouse.

Levi NaVarre, Flint, Michigan, says:

With regard to the item in February 6th issue, the flash is in the lamphouse. What gets me is that it does not happen when I use my compensarc. When I put in a new trim, bring the carbons together and strike the arc the flash occurs when I spring the arc quickly.

In this connection I have a letter from A. L. Chocklett, Roanoke, Virginia, which says:

With regard to Mr. NaVarre's trouble, February 6th issue, I have found two causes for the flash and smoke on new trims. One, as you say, is caused by carbon being grounded to the lamphouse; the other is the top carbon being slightly in advance of the lower, with result that when the arc is struck there is a flash and smoke.

Well, I do not see why the second cause would obtain. I never struck anything of that kind myself, and never heard of it before, and—there you are. I don't mean, Brother Chocklett isn't telling the truth, but that I don't see any earthly reason for the thing.

From a Traveling Man.

W. P. Hayes, a traveling salesman, writes from Pensacola, Florida, as follows:

I am a traveling man and a picture fan from the heart out. Just recently my territory was changed and I arrived in Pensacola, Fla., the morning of February 8th. There are only two picture shows in the town. I was told there had been three, but one had closed. Directly across from the hotel was the Isis theater, and a very beautiful house it is. The picture, "Cabiria," which was billed for that day, I had already seen at the Lafayette in New Orleans, and a most wonderful piece of photography it is. Anxious to see the interior of the Isis, I decided to view "Cabiria" once more. The doors did not open until 8 P. M., and if you had seen the crowd waiting to pay their admission you would have thought Barnum & Bailey's Circus had struck town. As already said, "Cabiria" is a most wonderful production, and at the Isis the projection was also wonderful. The way that picture was put on the screen was really a marvel. Clear, bright, and steady as a dial. The show started at 8.15, and so steady was the picture and so perfectly was it projected that when I thought I had seen only one reel when I had seen four, and it was 9.20 and intermission time. The operator (Rubin, by name, as I later discovered) had made the changes without my being able to detect it. I had been fooled, and I sat through the rest of that show in wonder. Never for an instant was there a flaw in the projection of the eleven reels. I am still ignorant as to when the changes from one reel to the next were made. Had I been told projection could mean so much I would not have believed it. I wonder how many other people in that audience gave Mr. Rubin a thought. Both Mr. Fichterberg, the proprietor, and Mr. Daveson, the manager, should be proud to have a man like Rubin in charge of their projection. Men of his kind are worth their weight in gold to the moving picture exhibitor. I especially recommend people with sore eyes to take the Isis treatment. If I don't stop I will write a book, but I feel as though I cannot praise Mr. Rubin too highly. I intend to open a show myself soon and will probably be in a town where the power house refuses to furnish me with D. C. What converter is, in your opinion, best to change A. C. to D. C.? You can bet when I open my house I will search far and wide for Mr. Rubin's duplicate.

In the first place I, too, must compliment Friend Rubin. A man who can put on projection that will bring forth this kind of letter is a man after my own heart. Shake, Brother Rubin! You are the real goods. I will be glad to hear from you when you feel disposed to write. I do not think, Friend Hayes, you will have any large difficulty in finding an operator who will duplicate Brother Rubin's performance, provided you are willing to pay for that kind of work, and also are willing, not only to allow the operator to do his best work on the screen, but to encourage him to do it, and, in fact, insist upon his doing it. As to the converter, why you will have to write me personally. I could not answer questions of that kind in the department without creating a riot. There are a number of good machines on the market, both motor generator sets and mercury arc rectifiers.

Amount of Light Needed.

A. M. Ericson, manager and owner, Palace theater, Hector, Minnesota, says:

> Am projecting a 12-foot picture 66 feet, using a. c. through a compensarc, the maximum output of which is 60 amperes. Am under the impression that this size picture, at the distance given, would require 67 amperes, in which case I would be unable to properly illuminate the picture with the equipment at hand. Will direct current in all cases produce a noticeable effect in the light and by lessening the so-called flicker give more general satisfaction in projection than a. c.? This is, no doubt, of too elementary a nature to be of value to the department, but I shall be pleased to have your opinion of the matter and thank you in advance for the same.

Brother Ericson, without any intention of offending you, I will say that if I made replies by mail, accepting thanks in payment, I would very quickly be called upon to handle an enormous correspondence, therefore, replies by mail are one dollar. Don't overlook that little item. Now to get down to brass tacks. No, this is not of too elementary nature for the department, by reason of the fact that there are constantly new men entering the business as managers, owners and as operators, and to these men this question is by no means elementary. The policy of the Moving Picture World is to serve all branches of the industry to the best of its ability, and we don't forget the fact and don't intend to forget the fact that the new men are entitled to due consideration and help. We can remember the time when we were new to the business, and would have felt mighty bad, and terribly injured, if we had been refused knowledge. Some of the present operators, for instance, who object to the new men being told anything, would have put up a howl that would have waked up the recording angel in Heaven, and have disturbed the slumbers of his Satanic Majesty in the other place had they been refused the right to "learn how to operate." Having learned, however (possibly not any too well, but still sufficient to get by after a fashion), they promptly and very conveniently proceed to forget the time when they were new and needed knowledge, and put up a vigorous protest against anyone supplying the "new men" with any knowledge whatever. Rats; and likewise raus mit 'em!

Yes, direct current is always better than alternating for projection. There is a purer and more mellow tone to the light produced by d. c. The flicker is not caused by the kind of current, but by the revolving shutter of the mechanism. Strike your arc, open the gate of the machine and turn the crank of your projector very slowly, without a film in, projecting a clear, white light to the screen. This will show you where flicker comes from. Also, you will find the matter explained very carefully in the Handbook, a copy of which you should have. This, however, must be qualified by the fact that where 25-cycle current is used the cycle is so low that there really is a perceptible alternating flicker on the screen—a flicker due to the use of very low cycle a. c., and not to the machine shutter. This, though, is not the case with 60-cycle current. You can get a very good illumination of a 12-foot picture with 60 amperes, but if it is not sufficiently brilliant to suit, and you are using a plaster or cloth screen, I would advise you to substitute a metallic surface screen of one of the types advertised in our columns.

New Lubin Machinery.

A few days ago we wrote the Lubin Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, concerning complaints as to their film splices. We now have a letter from Mr. Lowry, general manager, which says:

> We have shaken up our inspection department, and will certainly see if something cannot be done. With regard to the number of splices in our films, we now have in operation our new printing machine, which is the most marvelous mechanism of the kind ever made, or at least we think it is. It is a continuous printer, which necessitates only the making of six to eight patches in a thousand feet. We expect very shortly to put out our entire production on this kind of machine. We have just finished making our new six-reel feature, "The Eagle's Nest," on the new machine. The entire six reels only contain sixty-six patches, whereas the first copy made on the old machine has four hundred and sixty-six splices. We know this will be good news to the exhibitors and to yourself as well.

All of which is indeed good news. The Lubin production is too high class a proposition to be marred by excessive and poorly made splices. Our compliments to Brothers Lowry and "Pop" Lubin. We have never known them to not make good when a fault was called to their attention.

Nashville Examination.

The Nashville American's issue of February 23d contains an article a portion of which reads: "An examination of applicants for license for moving picture machine operators will be held at the office of the building inspector beginning next Monday morning. The examination, for which a list of fifty questions have been prepared, will be conducted by a board consisting of Mr. Yeamans, building inspector, A. A. Rosetta, chief of the fire department, and C. P. Cochrane, city electrical inspector."

Now, really, I do not like to criticise. The very fact that a license is required is a step in the right direction, but might I, provided I approach with cap in hand, pull my forelock, and make a deep bow, inquire of the "building inspector" and the "chief of the fire department" how much they know, if anything at all, about projection, and wherein they feel themselves competent to pass judgment on the competency of a moving picture operator? The proof of their incompetency as examiners lies in the fact (provided the paper states matters correctly) that "a list of fifty questions have been prepared." An examination that starts off with a list of questions to be asked is not worth much more than the value of the match it would take to set fire to the paper the questions are written on. If the examiners don't know enough to formulate their own questions impromptu, then it's a cinch they don't know enough to hold an examination upon the result of which depends the right of men to earn their daily bread.

Film Renovator.

The Gitchil Chemical Company, New York City, has presented to the department their product, the Gitchil Film Renovator, for examination and approval.

The renovator consists of a liquid which sells at $7.00 per gallon. I have examined, made test, and find the liquid may be used in conjunction with felt pad cleaners, such as the Mortimer Film Cleaner, or it can be used successfully simply by holding the film between a cloth moistened with the liquid in process of rewinding, but this should be followed by an application of a clean, dry cloth. I find that the renovating liquid is not inflammable; that it evaporates very rapidly, therefore the film is dry almost instantly; that it has no tendency whatever to curl the film; that it cuts oil and dirt off and cleans the film thoroughly, but that in the case of very dirty films they should first have a heavy application, or two or three applications. I find the renovator has no effect whatever in softening the emulsion, nor any other apparent ill effect of any kind whatsoever.

There is no question but that the intelligent use of this liquid would very greatly improve projection. If film exchanges would liberally use it their films would not be full of rain in a few days. The first application to a very dirty film would be comparatively expensive, say something between five and ten cents, but once the film was cleaned future applications would be very cheap, probably between two and four cents a reel, or, possibly even less.

To sum this whole matter up, I find that the Gitchil film renovator is good. It is an article to which I am glad to say I can give the hearty approval and recommendation of the projection department. It is a thing which ought to be used by the exchanges every time a film comes in. In my opinion it would more than pay for the cost and trouble if the theater itself put in a stock, and used it liberally.

Condensed Questions.

W. L. Henderson, Reardan, Washington, uses a 1912 motiograph; four reels three nights a week; town 900 population; 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C. through economizer; 8 foot 10 inch picture at 56 feet. Thinks he has a 6½ and a 7½ condenser, but when placed in mount they touch. On light scenes there is a blue streak across the screen and instead of one spot there are two.

Measure your lenses as per page 357 of Handbook. Probably two 6½; try 7½ next screen. Be sure lenses are square with each other and that your optical system of projector is in line. See page 227 of Handbook, and that your carbons are properly set. See page 209.

Comments on the Films

THE BOOB AND THE MAGICIAN (Biograph), Feb. 26. Burlesque with settings intended to represent a theater in which a magician performs wonderful tricks until the boob comes to his assistance. Then everything goes wrong. While the action is hardly sufficient for a full reel, it is enlivened every once in a while by touches of broad comedy that please an audience.

ROSE O' THE SHORE (Biograph), Feb. 27.—Rather a pretty bit of romance acted in the picturesque seaside locations near the Biograph western studio. A girl drops a flower over a cliff, promising to marry the fisherman lover who returns it. For the first use of this idea one may turn to the pages of ancient history. The present version is satisfactory as unfolded by May Malatista, Jack Mulhall and Charles Perley.

BRONCHO BILLY'S BROTHER (Essanay), Feb. 27.—Playing the hero, as usual, Broncho Billy is falsely accused of shooting his ne'r-do-well brother. Guilt finally is fastened on the true culprit. As in many of the Essanay subjects, sub-titles are omitted entirely. The story here is obvious enough without them. A well produced melodrama in which G. M. Anderson is assisted by Evelyn Selbie and Ernest Van Pelt.

THE OPEN DRAWBRIDGE (Kalem), Feb. 27.—The sixteenth episode in the "Hazards of Helen" series offers at least three thrills—a man being dragged by a train and two perilous dives—and a very fair melodramatic story in the bargain. There can be no question about the interest with which this reel is followed from beginning to end. The excitement is nicely distributed and the production in its entirety shows the result of careful direction.

THE MILLINERY MAN (Lubin) Feb. 27.—Ethel Clayton deserves better material than Nobert Lusk offers her in this scenario. The story of the man who becomes a milliner and ruins the business of his rival across the way misses fire as a comedy. The acting of Miss Clayton, however, is pleasing and there is no fault to be found with others in the cast, including Joseph Kaufman, Mildred Gregory and William Turner.

HEARTS OF THE JUNGLE (Selig), Feb. 27.—A leopard and two leopard cubs attract first attention in this film. The apparent intention of the story is to present the animals on the screen and in that it is successful. Scenes in which the leopards figure are well contrived.

HYPNO AND STRANGE SUBJECTS (Edison), March 2.—Hypnotism is the base upon which this one-reel farce is built. It contains a number of very amusing situations, but the action can be quickened to advantage—the waits are too long between the laughs.

THE DANCE AT ALECK FONTAINE'S (Essanay), March 2.—Richard Travers, Ralph Johnson and Ruth Stonehouse are in the cast of this fairly dramatic one-reel film, which is well acted and introduces a number of striking winter scenes, the backwoods of western Canada furnishing the locale. The story does not present any novel features, but grips the beholder by its steady progress and strong climax. One situation is lead up to too quickly: where the "heavy" thinks he sees the ghost of the man he supposes he had murdered: he should show feelings of remorse and apprehension, prior to this scene.

FLIRTATIOUS LIZZIE (Kalem), March 2.—One of the rapid-fire farces that the Kalem Co. produces so successfully. The laughs in this "comic" are as thick as plums in a Christmas pudding. All of the parts are played with the real farce "punch."

WHEN MOTHER VISITED NELLIE (Lubin), March 2.—The complications in this one-reel comedy have served the purpose of all kinds and conditions of playwrights, but in this case have been handled with such deftness—so much of the "touch-and-go" of farce, without its irresponsibility of motive—that they have all the freshness and novelty of a newly discovered theme. No audience, in a normal state, will fail to find amusement in generous measure as the story on the film is rapidly unwound. The staging and acting are artistic to a high degree.

THE MAN FROM TEXAS (Selix), March 2.—A one-reel western drama that makes its strongest appeal through the sincere playing of the actor intrusted with the name part. The story of a brother's love and his revenge upon his sister's wronger, it clings closely to its theme, and is lifted out of the plane of melodrama by the artistic work of the entire cast. Not since Dustin Farnum made playgoers familiar with "The Virginian" has anyone approached quite so close to the hero of the Owen Wister novel, as the man from the Lone Star State.

THAT HEAVENLY COOK (Edison), March 3.—Lou Gorey is the star of this comedy by J. E. Hungerford, which is a domestic tragedy to the people concerned and a laughable affair to everyone else. The play remains within the boundary lines of comedy all through, and is cleverly acted by Harry Beaumont, Bessie Learn, and Dan Mason, in addition to Miss Gorey.

A COUPLE OF SIDE-ORDER FABLES (Essanay), March 3.—A pair of George Ade fables, illustrated on one reel. The first is called "Fastidious Fanny;" the second, "Azalea and Her Celebrities." Two very human phases of woman's nature, satirized after the approved and highly amusing Ade manner. An out-of-the-ordinary offering.

THE MISSING RUBY (Selig), March 3.—Another lady-detective drama—without the crooks. Nevertheless, a very valuable ruby disappears from a jewel case belonging to a young heiress, and a female Sherlock Holmes is called in to solve the mystery. This she does, with neatness and dispatch. Bessie Eyton, as the detective, continued to look like a lady, even in her maid's costume.

THE GIRL AT NOLAN'S (Vitagraph), March 3.—The old and always reliable mortgage bobbed up bright and early in this one-reel comedy-drama of the West. However, the adventures it lead to are quick of action, often novel and amusing, and never devoid of interest. The laugh and the thrill follow hard upon the other's heels, and the playing of the company is full of vigorous skill.

THE WARD OF THE MISSION (Biograph), March 4.—Author, producer, and actors are to be congratulated upon this film, which is one of the finest achievements of the photo drama; strongly contrasted in motives, sincere during every second of its unswerving action; gripping, and beautifully human. In point of fact, it rises to the dignity of a tragedy, and should be ranked with such gems of the dramatist's art as "The Light From St. Agnes'," and kindred works. A film classic, in one reel.

SLIPPERY SLIM'S WEDDING DAY (Essanay), March 4.—Humor of the broadest type has full play, as usual, in this one-reel of Slippery Slim's venture upon the stormy sea of matrimony. Victor Potel's grotesque antics will earn their customary reward of unrestrained mirth on the part of his large following among patrons of the photoplay. (One reel.)

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 18, 1915 (Selig), March 4.—Sailors of the Argentine warships guests of the American Navy; children of New York paying tribute to Washington; American women helping wounded soldiers in Paris; clay bird shooting in New York; loyal British women forming a reserve force to defend their country; and Grace Darling leaving Jamaica for Colon, are the live topics shown on this reel.

PEGGY OF FIFTH AVENUE (Vitagraph), March 4.—Charles Reade's "Peg Woffington" is the foundation of this modern drama of high life. The interest would be maintained more strongly, however, if the secret of the Russian's marriage were not disclosed so early in the story. Lillian Walker looked a picture in the title role, and was especially good in the portrait scene.

THE DEPUTY'S DUTY (Biograph), March 5.—Gun play and a number of thrilling situations are contained in this one-reel story of the West. The plot calls for quick action, and shows the termination of an outlaw's career. The work of the actors gave full value to the material furnished them.

HOW IDA GOT A HUSBAND (Kalem), March 5.—There is good fun in the unfolding of the plan by which the young woman of the title enters the married state. She endeavors to capture a husband by mailing the gentleman who advertises for a wife, the picture of her mistress, a much prettier woman. An old device! Perhaps! but still vigorous, and capable of exciting honest laughter in the hands of experts of the Kalem calibre. The table scene, as played by Ida, Slippery Jim and the Westerner, is farce of the merriest and swiftest kind.

THE GOOD IN HIM (Lubin), March 5.—The West again furnishes the background for the exploits of an outlaw who tries to square his account by doing one good action before he dies. The story starts off with a rush and keeps up the same fast pace to the end. The scenes of the fight and the death of the bad man are especially well done. George Routh, Velma Whitman, and Marvin Mayo, have the leading characters.

THE KIDNAPPED LOVER (Selig), March 5.—Farce comedy of the quick moving and diverting sort is to be found in this one-reel picture. The incidents are funny without being foolish. The young man who enacts the lover is a nicely built chap, but his bathing suit is rather scanty.

TWO AND TWO (Vitagraph), March 5.—The suffragette cause receives a comic handling in the one-reel play, "Two and Two." The domestic strife that agitates two households, and the efforts of the wives to rule at any cost, furnish a series of laughable mishaps, during which a clever doctor and a bottle of supposed poison help on the fun-making. Flora Finch is one of the comedy better-halves, and is assisted by Kate Price, William Shea, and Nicholas Duneaw.

LOVE AND LIMBO (Mina), March 4.—The only drawback to this one-reel comedy is the title. The story, acting, staging and photography leave nothing to be desired. More artistic work by everyone concerned in the making of a picture, has seldom been shown on a screen. The comic adventures of two brothers who look alike and are mistaken for each other, leads up to a hilarious climax.

THE GUARDIAN'S DILEMMA (Selig), (Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal Comedy), March 6.—Children will find this one-reel comedy a treat, as all the wild animals of the Selig Zoo have important roles in the conspiracy against the heroine's guardian. The story allows the animals to be introduced naturally, and the four-footed actors never miss a cue.

SOCIALLY AMBITIOUS (Lubin), March 6.—One of the popular farces of the Mid-Victorian period was known to that motion-pictureless age as "Cousin Joe." It was considered capital fun, and can now claim cousinship with the Lubin one-reel comedy in which Lottie Briscoe gives a meritorious portrayal of a country girl and her introduction to city society. Arthur V. Johnson plays a country boy, and ranks with Miss Briscoe in the truth of his impersonation.

THE DEATH TRAIN (Kalem), Seventh of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series, March 6.—Quick action, that reaches railroad speed at times, is maintained while the girl telegraph operator defeats the attempt of a gang of counterfeiters to get a trunkful of bad bills out of her custody. Being swung like a pendulum from a bridge while a train dashes by overhead, is but one of the exciting moments in reel seventeen. Helen's existence is just one hair's breadth escape after another, but like all good heroines of melodrama, she holds the winning hand, at the end of the reel.

BRONCHO BILLY'S VENGEANCE (Essanay), March 6.—The many admirers of G. M. Anderson will be delighted at the latest exploits of their favorite moving picture hero. As usual, Broncho Billy poses as the champion and protector of the opposite sex, and starts to take a terrible revenge upon an unworthy rival, who steals his wife and leaves her to die alone. Just as Billy is about to brand the man's forehead with the word "Cain," he is stopped by a vision of his dead wife. The incidents leading up to this situation are not many, but the repose and quiet force of Mr. Anderson make this one-reel drama a thing of life and strength.

THE PORTRAIT IN THE ATTIC (Edison), March 6.—Viola Dana, who created the title roll in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," has the leading part in this well acted and nicely staged drama. Wm. Bechtel, Miriam Nesbett, Robert Conness, Mrs. Wm. Bechtel, Margaret Prussing and a knowing Boston bull assist Miss Dana in working out the story of a young girl who resents the coming of a stepmother into her life. Although somewhat older than the right age for the character, Miss Dana brings out the different moods of the willful little miss with skill, and makes her surrender at the finish with charming conviction. It is rather difficult to understand, however, why the portrait of a man's first wife should have been lugged up into the attic and thrown into a corner, just because he is going to bring home a new wife.

BLOWN INTO CUSTODY (Biograph), March 6.—The stage bank robber is cleverly burlesqued in this split-reel comedy, the exciting adventures of the handsome villain, which commence at the opening scene, causing much laughter. A bank president who refuses to stop a game of cards with a messenger boy, even when a robber is carrying off the contents of his strong-room, is one of the amusing situations. When it is taken into consideration that the cast is made up from members of the regular Biograph company, players who do not make a specialty of burlesque acting, the result of their efforts is quite commendable.

NEAR EDUCATIONAL SERIES—THE SOUP INDUSTRY (Biograph), March 6.—On the reel with "Blown into Custody." Some people will find no end of fun in this broad caricature of the soup industry; others will not relish it at all. Many a man has surrounded a bowl of soup; the spectacle of a number of human beings swimming in a tank of Mulligatawny or Chicken Gumbo, is quite a different matter.

Licensed Specials.

THE LOVE OF WOMEN (Lubin), Feb. 24.—The story of a youth's infatuation for an actress and his ultimate regeneration has been extended into three reels with some skill by Director Joseph W. Smiley. The picture's chief defects are the lack of an idea meriting extended treatment and some scenes which might be curtailed without sacrificing anything vital in the plot. Lillie Leslie, Jack Standing, William Cahill, Justina Huff and Mr. Smiley play leading parts.

A DAUGHTER'S STRANGE INHERITANCE (Vitagraph), Feb. 27.—Norma Talmadge, first as a woman addicted to drink, then as the daughter who inherits an ungovernable nature and with it a taste for liquor, does some capital acting in this three-part drama directed by VanDyke Brooke. It is a strong picture, particularly in the opening reel, and profits by the presentation of an idea which is at least open to discussion—the idea that a child inherits intemperate tendencies. Telling performances are given by Donald Hall and Director Brooke, and the production is thoroughly artistic.

COLOMBA (Biograph), March 2.—A spirited and skillful two-part adaptation from Prosper Merimee's romance of the time of Napoleon. The interest is caught at the start and held to the finish. Lighting, costuming and grouping are all excellent. The scenes which introduce the character of Napoleon are the only ones in the picture that are not thoroughly convincing. Almost the entire cast show to great advantage; Gretchen Hartman, Joseph McDermott and Edward Cecil being particularly effective. This photoplay should command the respect of audiences of every class.

THE SILENT PLEA (Vitagraph), March 2.—Written to aid the movement for granting pensions to mothers. A strong argument in favor of the widow and her children being helped by the state to keep their home, and shield the little ones from the half-hearted care given them in public institutions. The plea receives point and force from a vital and moving three-part drama that shows the struggles made by one devoted mother when poverty sends her out to work in a factory and her children are left to run the streets. Edith Story, Mary Anderson, and Harry Morey play the chief characters.

JARED FAIRFAX'S MILLIONS (Kalem), March 3.—(Episode No. 6 of "The Girl Detective Series.") A strong-room in the cellar of a millionaire's home, figures very prominently in this film. The doings of the lady-detective, in her battle with a band of crooks, supply plenty of excitement, but reflect small credit upon the opposite sex. Every male spectator will be gallant enough not to resent it when the young woman demonstrates her possession of all the brains in her party—which includes three strong men; but, when she exhibits all the courage as well—the masculine trio permits her to lead the attack on the safe-robbers—it is time for the rest of mankind to enter a protest. Ruth Roland's impersonation of the dauntless damsel is as spirited as ever.

A WOMAN WENT FORTH (Lubin), March 3.—"Into the Land of Dreams" would be a better title for this two-part drama. The plot is refreshingly original in many of its incidents and is well articulated, except that the housekeeper's child should have been given more prominence at the opening. The atmosphere of wealth and refinment that pervades the scenes, reflects credit upon the producer. Ethel Clayton, Joseph Kaufman, Walter Law and Florence Hackett, set an excellent example for the rest of the cast.

THE HERMIT OF BIRD ISLAND (Lubin), March 4.—A romance, almost fantastic in theme, that moves along pleasantly and placidly to the usual happy ending, this three-reel picture belongs to the Anthony Hope school of fiction, and will delight maiden ladies of every age. Scenically, it is a delight. Earl Metcalfe invests the title role with the true spirit of a Hope hero. A competent cast throughout .

A TRAGEDY OF THE RAILS (Edison), March 5.—A new handling of the railroad drama, resulting in a very successful two-reel photoplay. The characters are drawn from life, and the rivalry of the engineer and the section boss for the hand of the pretty telegraph operator leads to a situation that take a strong hold on the spectator. Five minutes are devoted to a race on the rail that has never been surpassed, for tense interest. Gertrude McCoy, Augustus Phillips, Carleton King, Julian Reed and Edward Lawrence are in the cast.

ROSELYN (Vitagraph), March 6.—A beautiful actress who is loved by an ambitious young lawyer; the marriage of the lawyer to another woman, whose father can further his interests; the accepting of the lawyer's rival by the actress in a moment of pique; and the near wrecking of the four lives later on when the lawyer tries to again make love to the actress and both families are saved by her sense of honor; these are the salient points of the drama. A familiar theme, that is given no great moments by the author, but plenty of interesting ones. Naomi Childers makes the actress a beautiful woman and realizes her acting possibilities. Charles Wellesley, Edwina Robbins, Joseph Halpin, George Stevens and Mae Halpin complete the cast. (Two reels.)

Independent

THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK (Essanay), March 5.—A modern version of Ibsen's "Ghosts," without its terrible ending. A son inherits the drug curse from his father, and is helped by his mother and his sweetheart to conquer the habit. The theme is handled powerfully, and with excellent judgment. Some of the winter scenes are very beautiful. Bryant Washburn, Greda Holmes, Helen Dunbar, Lester Cueno, and Camille D'Arcy, all do fine work.

SHE NEVER KNEW (American), Feb. 24.—Only moderate praise can be given this one reel drama. The story is that of a mother, who, believing that she is shooting at a burglar, shoots and kills her own son who has been a wanderer from home. The body of the son is quickly removed by friendly hands, and the mother never discovers the terrible truth.

PATHE NEWS NO. 16, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), Feb. 24.—Interesting items of this issue are: The Panama Fair opened by President Wilson by the pressing of a button at Washington; old newsboys sell papers in Chicago for Charity; Harvard Oarsmen row amid floating ice; Pathe cartoon "Hands Across the Sea"; the Mardi Gras at New Orleans, and interesting war items, including some scenes in British East Africa, when the troops were called to the colors.

THAT SPRINGTIME FEELING (Keystone), Feb. 25.—One of the Keystone comedies that has special laugh-getting qualities. It has plenty of strenuous action, and abounds with good situations. Syd Chaplin is the funny man, supported by various other funny people.

HOGAN OUT WEST (Keystone) Feb. 27.—An acceptable number of the "Hogan" series, wherein Hogan meets with difficulties in the shape of a tribe of Indians on the war path. Plenty of western color helps to make the production an attractive one apart from its comic attributes. In this film Charles Murray as Hogan is his usual comical self.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 8, 1915 (Mutual), Feb. 25.—President Poincaire reviews the French troops at the battle front; Rampscapelle after bombardment; annual winter sports carnival at Dartmouth College; submarine tender "Bushnell" taking the water at Seattle. These are interesting items of this number.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 17, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), March 1.—The Staten Island "Prairie Schooner" starting on its trip across the continent with a message from Mayor Mitchel to the Mayor of San Francisco, Madame Sarah Bernhardt as she appeared in "Queen Elizabeth," by courtesy of the Famous Players; a new type biplane tested in Ithaca; British recruits starting for the front; German prisoners being brought to England, and other items of interest comprise this number.

KRITERION COMIC CARTOONS (Kriterion-Pyramid), March 1-6.—Showing "The National Industrial Show visited by Mr. Common," "The Fishing Season for Presidential Nomination Will Open Early This Year," "The Baseball Training Season, North and South." On the same reel with the "Coronation of the Shah of Persia."

CORONATION OF THE SHAH OF PERSIA (Kriterion-Noglege), March 1-6.—On the same reel with the foregoing is this interesting illustration of the homage paid to the Shah of Persia by his subjects on the event of his coronation, showing the street parades, the Shah reviewing his troops, etc.

BOBBY'S BANDIT (Majestic), March 2.—Fred A. Kelsey has made this comedy with Bobby Fenhrer, Teddy Samson, Tom Wilson and Fred Burns playing. Bobby's over-anxiety to win the $500 for the discovery of the Bandit's lair, leads him through rough ways at last to the coveted prize. The production is a good one and will be accepted by any audience.

THE DERELICT (American), March 3.—The thread of the story of "The Derelict" is not very clear, and is therefore somewhat difficult to follow. The production is not what would be termed a strong one. Winifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen, George Field, and John Steppling do their best with a rather weak story.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 156 (Universal), March 3.—Photos of the jitney bus, San Francisco Exposition, Mardi Gras at New Orleans, war manoeuvers and Hy Mayer's drawings are included in this number.

YOUR BABY AND MINE (Reliance), March 3.—An Arthur Mackley production that is a good one. George Hennesy has written the scenario, and has made good comedy out of an old situation, which has been produced by the director with some new clothes by way of adornment. An accidental exchange of babies affords much amusement. Mrs. Mackley, Baldy Belmont, and Mae Gaston figure in the cast.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 9, 1915 (Mutual), March 4.—One of the most interesting of current events in this number is the opening of the Panama Exposition, showing a part of the street parade, and also a panoramic view of a portion of the grounds. It is interesting also to see a group of evidently happy nurses at the battle front. Other interesting items are: Breaking through the ice jam in the Columbia River, Belgian volunteers testing a captured gun, and N. Y. Guardsmen learning campaigning under the guidance of U. S. Army.

HIS RETURN (Majestic), March 5.—This is an exceedingly good one-reel drama, which has been developed with a pretty Colonial atmosphere. Mirian Cooper, Elmer Clifton and Howard Gay play the leads in a manner that is above reproach. The story is of a young man, who, having developed the drinking habit, becomes piqued at his father's admonishments, and interference with his plan to marry his father's pretty ward, and leaves home. When he has sunk to the depths of his drunken career, one day he sees a newspaper notice with regard to his father's death and fortune, which is left to the ward in the event of the failure of the son to put in an appearance. On his return to the old home he sees the young woman in the grounds, and realizing his own miserable condition, and what life might mean to her in the event of their marriage, he steals away without letting any one know that he has been there.

FROM PATCHES TO PLENTY (Keystone), March 6.—Murphy is the leading character in this number. He steals a grip full of bonds and proceeds to enjoy life. He plays polo and entertains his friends on a yacht. All goes well till the theft is discovered. There are funny spots in this and the final scenes are of the knockabout type.

BILL GIVES A SMOKER (Komic), March 7.—No. 18 of the "Bill" series. Bobby Fuehrer and Fay Tincher are again very pleasing in their familiar character parts. Bill creates no end of trouble by placing the watch and cigarettes in Ethel's bag. This is full of good humor and nicely pictured.

THE HEN'S DUCKLING (Reliance), March 8.—The story of a neglected child who climbs out of her bed at night to carry money to some poor people. The mother becomes alarmed and when the child is recovered realizes that she has been too indifferent. Not very strong in plot, but has a good human touch at the close.

THE DOCTOR'S STRATEGY (Beauty), March 9.—A light comedy number, with Irving Cummings, Joseph Harris and Virginia Kirtley in the cast. The doctor scares Mr. Jones by telling him he has alopecia, which turns out to be a simple disease of the scalp. This is fairly successful and has a laugh at the end.

A TEMPERANCE LESSON (Majestic), March 9.—This is rather a difficult picture to define. It is, of course, a comedy, and it has the semblance of a moral in its makeup; yet to some minds it might not appeal as being the best sort of comedy on account of the scenes showing the servants all dead drunk through sipping too freely at a bottle of wine which has been presented to their master. With one or two eliminations, however, it will no doubt pass as a good comedy.

THE ECHO (American), March 10.—Based on a pleasant theme, "The Echo" is pretty sure to please. The picture opens with two children chasing an echo through a pretty wooded valley. Later in life when the little girl has grown to young womanhood in the city, and the boy has become a country school teacher, the echo of the childhood days in the country comes back to the girl, and responding to its call she goes to the companion of former years, and at the edge of the lake in the valley they plight their troth. Vivian Rich and David Lythgoe, Reaves Eason and Byron Thornberg are noticeable in the cast.

THE LUCKY TRANSFER (Reliance), March 10.—The story of a girl reporter, with Mary Alden in the leading role. She discovers the facts in a jewelry store robbery and procures the release of an innocent clerk. The story is well-photographed; the plot is of average interest and leads up to a stirring close.

DO UNTO OTHERS (Princess), March 12.—The Kidlet finds a playmate in the poor ragpicker's son. The boy takes her home and they have a series of interesting adventures. This is a good little story with a touch of heart interest in it.

MARTIN LOWE—FINANCIER (Laemmle), March 14.—A Frank Lloyd number, telling a well-rounded story and with some good character work in it. Mr. Lloyd, Mrs. Benson, Marc Robbins, Helen Leslie and others are in the attractive cast. The story tells how the tricky broker changed his mind about fleecing the old man after he had saved his daughter's life. A pleasing story, excellently put on.

LITTLE BOBBY (Thanhouser), March 14.—The Kidlet starts out in this number to collect money for the new home her parents want to build. She is dressed in boy's clothes and has many adventures. She puts out a fire, catches a burglar and finally finds a necklace for which a large reward is offered. This makes a pleasing story of its kind.

THE REFUGEES (Joker), March 15.—Ernest Shield and his pal appear as two hoboes who palm themselves off on the unsuspecting ladies of Hicksville as Belgian refugees. They are finally run out of town. This idea is quite amusing at first but does not develop much novelty later in the reel.

AT HIS OWN TERMS (Big U), March 16.—A film story featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as a squatter on some land desired by a lumber company. He stays in spite of the evacuation notice, defending his cabin with a shotgun. Later he saves the lumber president's child and is allowed to remain. This is picturesque in its outdoor scenes, well-photographed and quite pleasing in its story.

THE MIXUP AT MAXIM'S (Nestor), March 16.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Victoria Forde appear as employes in a restaurant. The men clash over the girl and the whole place is turned upside down in the subsequent happenings. This is a slapstick number without much plot and proves fairly strong.

ROUGH BUT ROMANTIC (L-KO), March 17.—This eccentric comedy number deals with the matrimonial adventures of Mr. Nappy and his son. The chase scenes with an auto and bike are funny and the acrobatics with ropes over the side of the cliff combine laughter and thrills. A good low comedy offering.

ALL FOR PEGGY (Rex), March 18.—A pleasing number in which Pauline Bush appears as the daughter of a groom. She takes her brother's part in a big race, when the latter has been doped, and rides the horse to victory. The scenes lack the suspense they might have had, but the characterizations and action are good.

DOWN ON THE FARM (Nestor), March 19.—Billie Rhoades and Jack Dillon appear in this as a couple of burlesque country lovers. Neal Burns plays the squire, whose suit is favored by the girl's father. There is an elopement and a chase. The humor in this is only fairly strong.

THE GOLDEN SPIDER (Victor), March 19.—Charles Ogle appears in this as a white slaver. He makes away with the younger sister and the older one, portrayed by Mary Fuller, goes to prison for attempting his life. Upon her release she renews the attempt and frightens her victim so that he dies of heart disease. This is well handled but the plot is sordid in character and not of very great appeal.

THE REJUVENATION OF 'LISA JANE (Joker), March 20.—A low comedy number with poetical subtitles. Gale Henry appears as an old maid whose heart is set on marrying Hezekiah, portrayed by Max Asher. She fails to attract his attention strongly until her sister comes from the city and transforms her into a beauty. This is well-photographed and proves quite amusing.

DOGGONE IT! (Royal), March 20.—A comedy number featuring a correspondence school detective very similar to a character appearing in a series of stories written by Ellis Parker Butler. There is humorous material in this but it is handled here with only a fair degree of strength.

EMMA JANE MAKES GOOD (Kriterion-Alhambra) March.—An exceptionally pleasant comedy made by H. C. Matthews, in which Baby Early appears to advantage. Baby Early plays the role of a little girl taken from an Orphan Asylum to a farm where the mistress, disappointed at her spouse bringing a girl instead of a boy, to do chores, insists that she be returned at once to the Asylum. The man in the case pits his wits against his wife's, and dressing Emmy in boy's clothes, works a deception with a satisfactory result.

IMA SIMP HAS A DREAM (Pathe Exc.) March.—The first of a series of four or five comedies in which Simp will figure. In this number his dream mingles with reality in the most marvellous fashion. Considerable trick work has been utilized in the making of the film. The series promises to be a good one, and evidently will supply something original in the way of comedy.

THE HORSE INDUSTRY IN FRANCE (Pathe Exc.), March.—Constituting a general demonstration of the Percheron breed of horses, including their importation to America.

THE TALE OF A SHIRT (Pathe Exc.), March.—This is a bit of farce comedy that is rather good. In fact most audiences would consider it particularly laughable. The story is about a bridegroom whose wedding clothes failed to put in an appearance even up to the hour set for the ceremony. The mad search for a shirt implicates many others, and causes considerable amusement.

WASHINGTON RELICS (Pathe Exc.), March.—Showing Washington's birth place at Wakefield on the Potomac River, the sword and scabbard used by him when he served in the British Army, Independence Hall, Philadelphia, where the Declaration of Independence was signed, the Betsy Ross house, Philadelphia, his camp kit, Mount Vernon, and the entrance gate that he always used, the uniform worn by him when he bid farewell to his soldiers, and other interesting relics of the life of this great man.

THE GIRL AND THE BUTTERFLY (United-Premier), March.—About the commencement of this picture there is something prettily spontaneous; but its ending is extremely tragic. It is a well staged film, produced among the orange groves of California; and it contains a lesson for hasty but well-meaning fathers. The tragic point of the story is that the father, angered at the persistent attentions of an easterner to his daughter, a pretty girl who is pictured frequently in the course of the production chasing butterflies with a net, one day shoots at the young man and kills his daughter instead.

Independent Specials

A DAY THAT IS DEAD (Majestic), Feb. 28.—This two-reel production founded on Tennyson's "Break, break, break" is somewhat of a disappointment. Some very beautiful coast scenery is shown in the course of the picture; but apart from this the production is not a particularly strong one. The players, Charles Clary, Signe Auen and Olga Gray do well with what opportunity is afforded them.

EXPLOITS OF ELAINE NO. 10 (Pathe Exc.), March 1.—"The Life Current" supplied by the Electric Resucitator, a rare instrument recently invented, is the scientific significance of this episode. Elaine is stolen away and placed in an old sewer where the poisonous gases have suspended life which is restored by the wonderful "Life Current." This episode may seem to lack the snap of some of the previous numbers, but we are evidently being prepared for something especially startling to follow in the next issue.

IN RAW COLOR (Kriterion-Trump), March 1-6.—Alex Frank has made this picture, which, although it lacks merit in subject matter, at the same time reflects credit on its producer. It is artistic in almost every particular, but the story is sentimental to the point of impossibility in these days of practical things. Neither is it exactly healthy in color. Craufurd Kent and Justina Wayne play the leads. The story treats of the lover of a woman artist who has already a young woman of good family, in the shape of a model, hovering about him, and also of the artist, whose father insists on her marrying another. The affair results in the young wife leaving her husband to follow the artist, only to be stabbed to death by the model.

THE CRUMPLED LETTER (Kriterion-Monty), March 1-6.—Not out of the ordinary, but, nevertheless, of fairly good quality, is this two-reel production made by Frank Montgomery. It is the story of an attempt to shift the blame of a safe robbery on an innocent party. The young man goes to the Nome gold fields and comes back just in time to save the home of his former employer and his daughter (his sweetheart) from the sheriff.

THE SAND RAT (Kriterion), March 1-6.—A two-reel Robert Daly production, featuring Fritizi Brunette and Edward Alexander. The story of this film has rather an original turn, and is in many ways interesting. It is, of course, primarily a love story, and the Sand Rat is a woman bandit, the mother of the younger woman, the sweetheart of the sheriff. The holdups in the picture have not been especially well done, and there is an oversight in the matter of the Sand Rat's house being light instead of dark when the sheriff carries her dead body into the empty house at night. With these two exceptions the production is well made and attractive. Florine Garland plays the role of the Sand Rat, and Joe Massey appears to advantage in one of the minor roles.

THE GREEN IDOL (Reliance), March 6.—A two-reel production, with J. E. Henneberry, Francelia Billington and others in the cast. The story is comparatively simple in plot. It shows how a young girl falls under the influence of a Hindoo prophet who sells her a fake idol. She returns to get her money back and is rendered unconscious by a narcotic. The latter scenes show her lover coming to the rescue, followed by the police. The Hindoo and his accomplices escape but are killed in a fall in an auto down a high cliff. This latter scene was very realistic. Not very new in plot but has numerous entertaining qualities.

MINERVA'S MISSION (Majestic), March 7.—The cast in this excellent two-reel comedy-drama are Dorothy Gish, Cora Drew, W. E. Lawrence and James Gorman. Minerva, back from college, has peculiar ideas of propriety, which results in the suffering of all with whom she comes in contact. Her chaperone is converted by her into a veritable old woman by way of hair dressing and attire, the gardner must chew no more tobacco, the plumber must drink no more beer, the housemaid must chew no more gum. Eventually Minerva's self-assumed mission leads her into the slums where she lives to rue her demonstration of interest in plumbers. Said interest misconstrued makes it necessary to dispatch a temporarily well-meaning crook to bring the much-despised, cigarette smoking Harry, Minerva's cast-off lover, to the rescue. The final shock strikes Minerva when Aunt Jane is discovered indulging in a quiet smoke in the parlor. Probably the last scene might be easily be dispensed with, but this would be a matter of opinion entirely.

THE TRUTH OF FICTION (American), March 8.—This two-reel production contains some splendid western color, presenting truly delightful perspectives on a cattle ranch. The story, however, does not amount to much, although it is played with a good cast who are worthy of better things, namely, Winnifred Greenwood, Pete Morrison, John Steppling, George Field, Anna Kromann, Frank Nicely, Karl Morrison and William Bertram. The story treats of how a young woman novelist in search of inspiration for a new novel finds it on a cattle ranch. Through the book, which is published shortly afterward, a couple of lovers whom she has met on the ranch are made to understand their own love story.

$20,000.000 MYSTERY, EPISODE NO. 16 (Thanhouser), March 8.—This episode of the usual two parts is entitled "The Battle of the Bridge," and holds considerable that is interesting. Photographically speaking, it may be felt that better effects might have been obtained with more attention paid to the illumination and camera work. In this number Zudora's room is entered in her absence by Captain Radcliffe, and in the false bottom of the half-burned trunk of Zudora is found a map made by Zudora's father showing the location of a rich deposit in the South African diamond fields. Meantime Baird and Hunt are planning to discover the secret of the Duval band. Following a ruse through which Hunt in disguise enters Madame Duval's home a thrilling struggle takes place between Baird, who is waiting outside, and members of the gang, which ends in Baird and one of the men falling from a bridge. Baird is rescued by Storm, and so the episode closes.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Reliance), March 10.—Instalment No. IX.—This number shows the manner in which Blye and his friends finally induce June to accompany them to Bermuda. He tells her of the many beauties of the place and some splendid scenic features are shown prior to their departure. The number also contains many references to the domestic affairs of the Villards, and Villard himself tries to make love to June. She is saved by the dog, and promises to maintain silence only in the event that Villard remains behind. This he agrees to and they take the steamer without him. The instalment is a characteristic one and holds the interest fairly well.

THE BLACK BOX (Universal Special), "The Apartment House Case," March 14.—This first instalment of the new Oppenheim serial opens in a decidedly interesting manner. It has been carefully staged by Otis Turner and the cast includes Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, Wm. Worthington, Frank Lloyd and others. The story commences with thrills and they continue with absorbing complications through both reels. Sanford Quest, the expert criminologist, unravels a murder in an apartment house, employing various modern methods, such as a secret explosive, electro thought transference and the like. The series promises to be frankly sensational, but is handled carefully and excellently photographed.

THE TWO SENTENCES (American), March 15.—A two-reel story of love and politics. The hero is a young lawyer, Jim Rodgers, in love with a girl named Helen. He goes to the city and she promises to wait for him. But she falls in love with another and marries him. Five years later Jim is a judge and the husband is tried before him for murder. He sentences him to twenty years in prison for manslaughter. Later he repents and runs for governor in order to be in a position to pardon him, feeling that his sentence was unjust. The election scenes at the close are put on in spirited fashion and are the strongest feature of the production. The photography is good throughout.

THAT LITTLE BAND OF GOLD (Keystone), March 15.—A two-reel farce comedy subject which finds Ford Sterling again with his former associates, Fatty and Mabel. The men take their ladies to the theater, Fatty and Mabel having been married but a short time before. Ford then lures his corpulent friend into a restaurant where they wine and dine Ford's friends, to the neglect of Fatty's wife. When Mabel appears there is trouble. A divorce follows and then both repent and they marry again. This is a breezy number, but escapes anything of a decidedly risque character. The photography is very fine.

THE STORM (Victor), March 15.—A two-reel number, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson. The construction is odd and a little involved, though the story is there and quite entertaining in its way. The hero is seen musing over the pages of his mother's diary and scene after scene is pictured in this desultory way, all leading up to his determination to kill the man who wronged his mother. A stroke of lightning saves him from committing this act. This sort of construction is novel but interferes with the natural suspense of the story. George Periolat did some good work in the part of the father.

THE MASTER'S MODEL (Thanhouser), March 16.—A two-reel photoplay by Nolan Gane, who plays the role of the artist. Fan Bourke plays the part of the girl model. He picks her up in the slums where she is living a fast life, and poses her as the Blessed Damosel. The picture wins a prize at an art show and is presented to a church by the artist. The chief interest in the story is in the way the posing for this picture changes the girl's life. She deserts her former companions and finally saves it from destruction by Tony, her former lover. This makes a fairly strong offering.

A CASE OF POISON (Broncho), March 17.—The two-reel story of a jealous young wife who sees her husband at a matinee with another. She is overcome with anger and tries to kill herself in many ways, something preventing each time. The druggist substitutes salt and water for the poison ordered, and both she and her husband, who appears later, are foiled in their efforts to commit suicide. This is well put on and has some laughable moments; its worst fault is that it has a familiar plot and the humor has a rather grewsome note in it. The photography and acting are good.

SAVED BY TELEPHONE (Eclair), March 17.—A two-reel western offering of about ordinary interest,with Norbert A. Myers, Edna Payne and H. Stanley in the cast. The hero is a telephone repair man and the plot hinges upon crossed telephone wires. The girl has taken a position as substitute teacher in a country school and is annoyed by the young ne'erdowell and his gang. She overhears her mother's prayer over the wires. The photography is not very clear in places and as a whole the offering is only fairly strong.

THE FUNNY SIDE OF JEALOUSY (Big "U"), March 18.—A two-reel farce-comedy, with Jefferson De Angelis, the comic opera comedian, in the leading role. He plays the part of a jealous husband following his wife and another man with a bomb. He impersonates a waiter on board the yacht in order to be near them. He spills the soup, squirts seltzer water on them and does a multitude of farcical stunts of a familiar and somewhat old-fashioned sort. The man turns out to be his wife's brother. The plot has been worked over numerous times and much of the humor seemed forced, but will amuse those who have particular liking for farce.

THE MILL BY THE ZUYDER ZEE (Domino), March 18.—A remarkably attractive two-reel production, with Dutch settings. The action occurs during a war between the Dutch and Spanish. Many characters participate, all in good costume; the village settings are also fine. While the Spanish are in temporary control of the Dutch village one of the officers makes advances to the pretty wife of Dereck. The latter leads a surprise attack upon the invaders and rescues his wife after some intensely dramatic scenes at the mill. The photography is clear and altogether this makes a very pleasing release.

THE BLACK PEARL (Imp), March 19.—A two-reel story by Stuart Paton, with Frances Nelson, Howard Crampton, Alan Holubar and Hobart Henley in the cast. The plot concerns the theft of a valuable jewel by the brother and his pal. The hero is suspected, but found tied upstairs. The turning on of the water made an interesting feature, though not a very probable method of summoning help. The cast and photography are the most pleasing features in this number, though the story has quite a little interest.

PHANTOM OF THE HEARTH (Kaybee), March 19.—A two-reel circus story with a number of thrilling moments. The pastor's daughter succumbs to the lure of circus life, as her mother had done, and runs away to join the young balloonist in his act. The father follows and arrives during the balloon ascension. This feature is put on with striking effect and has strong suspense. The balloon is struck by lightning and falls to earth, but the father discovers that after all his daughter was not making the trip. The circus atmosphere is very apparent throughout this offering. It is very successful in its way.

THE MOTHER INSTINCT (Bison), March 20.—An unconventional story of two lovers on an island, in three reels. Cleo Madison, Joe King and Edward Sloman play the leading parts. The girl is at first engaged to Curlew, who has a mistress from whom she receives an indignant call. Later she goes on a yachting party. Gordon, the hero, is on board and becomes interested in her. The yacht is wrecked in a realistic manner. They are cast on an island. He wooes her, against her wishes, and their child is born out of wedlock. Later Curlew and some friends show up, but she decides to remain with Gordon and the child. This is strong in interest, but the plot is lacking in delicacy and may shock some observers. The scenic features and photography are good.

THE SHADOW OF DOUBT (Pathe Exc.).—March.—Gabrielle Robinne of the Comedy Francaise, Paris, France, is featured in this three-reel production, which was made at the Paris studios of the Pathe Freres. The story, which is one of the "eternal triangle" sort, has been beautifully developed in the film. The picture conveys little that is in any way suggestive, and care has been taken to develop the cleanest and best principles. Much of the story is made to center around the child of two of the triangle. Special attention should be drawn to the beauty of some of the sets of the picture, and the exquisitely beautiful exterior locations which have been chosen.

UNCLE SAM'S MONEY SHOP (Pathe Exc.), March.—This interesting subject released by the Pathe Freres in two instalments of two reels each is well worth the seeing. The first instalment illustrates in detail the manner in which the coin and paper money of the Union is made at Washington, D. C., and also the blank checks used by the Government. From the molding of the metal, the preparation of the paper, the making of the ink, the sizing, cutting, sorting and counting of the paper money, to its transportation in policed conveyances to the Treasury Building. The second instalment shows how the postage stamps is made by machinery which has the capacity to turn out 45,000 sheets of 200 stamps each per day. This is one of the most complete and best photographed subjects of the kind ever turned out.

THE COST (United-Lariat), March.—This two-reel western is not by any means a masterpiece. It has, however, some interesting points. Its chief fault is that the story is not clearly defined. It does not lack action—there is in fact almost a super-abundance of it. The theme of the story is based on a disagreement between two brothers in the western wilds, which brings considerable sorrow to all concerned. It would be difficult to give an intelligent outline of the story on the impression received by the reviewer.

THE DEVIL (New York Motion Picture Corp), March.—This five-reel screen production of Franz Molnar's well-known play by the same title is even better than the play in certain respects. The appearance of the devil, as impersonated very cleverly by Edw. J. Connelly, gains a certain sinister quality in the pantomime. He flits from one character to another sowing the seeds of jealousy and unhappiness. The production is not one for prudish people; Bessie Barriscale's abbreviated costumes makes a very free exposure of the upper portion of her anatomy. But it is all artistically done and free from vulgarity. The moral is easily seen and it carries a lesson to those who are inclined to play with the fire. Particularly the latter scenes, which occur in the infernal regions and rival Dore's paintings in realism. This is a strong production, beautifully pictured.

Miss Kathlyn Williams, the Selig star, will enact the role of Mrs. Van Courtland, in Rex Beach's "The Ne'er Do Well," to be released by the Selig Company.

A. Warner

Founder of Warner's Features, the First Feature Exchange, Again Starts Business For Himself.

IT IS hardly necessary to introduce Abe Warner to the motion picture men of this country; he has been in the business for so many active years that he is known personally to most of them. From the proprietor of a film exchange in Pittsburgh, Pa., in the early days he has grown with the development of pictures until he stands among the few men who are credited with knowing the "game" in all its ramifications.

Abe Warner.

After selling a prosperous exchange to the General Film Co. a few years ago, Mr. Warner came to New York and got into the feature business when "state rights" were first offered. After placing several features on that plan he realized that there was an opening for a "feature exchange" and Warner's Features was the first organization formed for the purpose of renting feature subjects direct to the exhibitor. Under Mr. Warner's management the plan was successful and soon had many imitators, in fact, the most startling development of the motion picture business during the past year has been along the lines laid down by him.

Developments during the past year have led Mr. Warner to sever his connections with the corporation he organized and now that the management has changed he has decided to make another start for himself, beginning at the beginning as he did about three years ago when Warner's Features was launched, regretting only the time that has been lost.

In making a new start Mr. Warner has an unblemished record to recommend him to consideration. His plans have not been fully determined, but it is his purpose to handle feature productions. He wishes the trade to know that he has severed all connection with the United Film Service, the name by which the old Warner's Features is now known, and that he will do business in his own name. He will have something interesting to say to the trade soon.

BILLIARDISTS APPROVE SELIG FILM.

The National Billiard Protective League has written to 80,000 proprietors of billiard halls in the United States, commending the forthcoming Athletic and Physical Culture films which will be released every Monday by the Selig Polyscope Company beginning with April 5. Among the films to be shown are scenes showing the scientific shots in billiards exemplified by Schaefer, Hoppe and others. These films will do much to popularize and further elevate the science of billiards.

"The Spanish Jade"

A Strong Drama Set in the Quaint Environments of Spanish Life of Fifty Years Ago.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

WHOEVER delights in what is quaint and novel and far removed from the well-trodden path will be greatly charmed and entertained by this feature which has been acquired by the Paramount Pictures Corporation from a newly formed producing company called the Fiction Pictures, Inc.

The film is based on a book entitled "The Spanish Jade" and written by Maurice Hewlett. The novel has been dramatized by Louis Joseph Vance and the filmed version closely follows the lines of the original dramatization.

Few film plays have a stronger, more consistent and more gripping plot than "The Spanish Jade." If the production had no other merit than the strength of its plot it would deserve to rank high, but the strength of the plot is not its only point of merit. The types and the atmosphere in the film story measure up to the highest expectations. One cannot run through ten pages of Spanish literature without encountering the very types and the very atmosphere which make this film so different from the general run of film plays. There are many of the exterior scenes which are obviously "faked," but the imitation is always clever, and though we all abhor artificial exteriors in a film we must admit that the designer worked with a good original before his eyes. Nor are all the exteriors artificial. Some are wonderfully fine; so much so that one regrets that there was any necessity for artificial props anywhere in the film.

The elements, mystery, adventure and pathos have been most skilfully woven into a story which is bound to hold the interest of the spectator every part of the way from start to finish. The visualization of the characters is perfect in every detail. This means first that the acting is brilliant and second that the spectator is able to understand the character almost the very instant it appears on the screen. The Spanish grandees feeding on dry bread and an onion and spicing the frugal meal with recollections of past glory, the cringingly faithful servant, the unbridled youth scorning discipline and flattering impulses of passion, the blond Spanish beauty (there are such beauties), graceful with a womanly dignity all her own, the Englishman disappointed in love and traveling in Spain to forget his disappointment—all these are figures that might have stepped from the pages of any old Spanish book of fiction. It must be noted, too, that all the minor characters—and there are many of them, are as finely drawn and as true to life as the leading parts. In this perfection of detail lies one of the great charms of the picture; the other is the powerful, well-developed plot, which never lags or halts or digresses for a moment.

LUBIN PRODUCES "THE DREAM DANCE."

The production of "The Dream Dance" at the Lubin Western Company at Los Angeles marks a new era in the history of that studio. The play is an unusually strong one dramatically, and in order to produce it it was necessary to spend several days with an extra force of workmen preparing the special staging and scenery. L. C. Shumway and Miss Velma Whitman have the leading roles.

Tom Terriss Heading Own Company

Well Known Actor to Make High Class Photoplays for Organization Capitalized at $50,000—Will Adapt from Big Successes Which He Controls.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT of unusual interest to motion picture people in general which has been made within the past few days is to the effect that Tom Terriss, well known English actor and producer, has embarked in the business of motion picture production on a large and high class scale at the head of his own company to be known as the Terriss Feature Film Co. Articles of incorporation have been prepared and the statement filed shows that the new organization not only has particularly strong financial backing, but also has the support of some of the shrewdest and best known business men in New York City. Mr. Terriss is named as president, L. T. Smith as vice president, and James H. McLean as secretary-treasurer. The capital interested is for the most part that of men who have achieved success in lines of work other than the motion picture business.

Tom Terriss.

Tom Terriss is easily one of the most widely advertised actors of the present generation and that he has turned his attention exclusively to the picture field will be gratifying to motion picture exhibitors throughout the country who will see at a glance the benefits to be derived from the association of his name and talents with feature pictures to be produced by the new company. Within the past few years Mr. Terriss has been particularly active in the delineation of characters drawn from the intensely human narratives of Charles Dickens and with such results that he is conceded to be the foremost Dickensian exponent of the present day. Lovers of Dickens—and these number practically every lover of books—have enjoyed Mr. Terriss' work in vaudeville and in more pretentious offerings on the so-called legitimate stage. At the head of his own company Mr. Terriss has but recently concluded a successful tour of the important cities in the United States and Canada under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger.

By reason of his lengthy service on the legitimate stage and his association with his father, the late William Terriss, who came to the United States from England as leading man with Sir Henry Irving, Mr. Terriss not only has a splendid knowledge of the better things in the way of theatrical entertainment which are popular, but also controls the rights to many plays which have proved their worth in this country and in Europe. It is from these big successes controlled by Mr. Terriss that some of the early feature photoplays planned by the Terriss Feature Film Co. are to be adapted.

Mr. Terriss is, of course, no stranger to the motion picture field in view of the fact that he has made a number of important productions under the direction of big producing companies, including the World Film Corporation and the more recently organized Cort Film Corporation. His present venture, however, is the most pretentious thing in the picture line which he has attempted and the organization of his company has been effected for the purpose of providing something entirely new—and, Mr. Terriss thinks, better—than has yet been done in the line of high class photoplay production.

The company of players who will support Mr. Terriss has about been completed and the first releases are expected to be ready within the next six weeks. The company is making a particularly careful investigation of the releasing field with the idea of selecting the best possible organization to place their finished product on the market and announcement as to this matter is to be made in the near future.

"The Woman Who Dared"

A Powerful Story in Five Reels, With the Talented Actress, Francesca Bertini, in the Titular Role, to Be Released by George Kleine, March 17.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I WAS deeply impressed and all the time much pleased while viewing two private presentations of "The Woman Who Dared," a photoplay in five reels that will be booked by George Kleine's various exchanges throughout the country on March 17. The story has a powerful grip, and is so well constructed that interest never wanes until the final fade-out.

The production is marked by fine acting, costuming, settings and photography. A nice regard for art is always apparent, and I can commend it as a model of its type without reservation.

The acting of Francesca Bertini is always admirable. I remember seeing her for the first time in the character of the rural Egyptian maiden in "Rameses, King of Egypt," and still have clear recollections of her beauty and nice histrionic art. I saw her also as Pierrot in "The History of Pierrot," and that characterization was as delicately and gracefully poised as a butterfly on the petal of a flower. She has also scored hits in "The Song of the Soul," "Venomous Tongues," and other film subjects. As the Countess Bertrand, she appears at her best; for the calls on her talent are complex. As the loving wife in the happy days of home life, she is exquisitely charming, and when the dark days come and her innocent husband is condemned to twelve years' imprisonment, she is a very tigress in her fury and courage to set him free. Contrasted with this aspect, she appears in melting emotional scenes where the normal woman's heart is laid bare in the most appealing sense. I shall always remember Signorina Bertini for the apparent ease with which she simulates the varied whims and passions of human life. And her depictions are not confined to types of her own sex; for Pierrot was a man, and a very complex type of man at that.

Alexander Ivanhoff, the spy, is well impersonated by Emilo Ghione. The makeup assists materially in the virile characterization. Count Bertrand has a worthy double in Albert Collins, and Signor Ciaffi is to be complimented for praiseworthy character work in the role of Alexis, the servant. One of the best sustained parts in the cast is that of Naida, the gypsy wife of Ivanhoff, by Leda Gys. The costuming and makeup are beyond criticism.

The story is by no means new, but it is better told than any other of this type that I have read. Count Bertrand is a lieutenant in the army of his country, and is entrusted with mobilization plans by the major general for the purpose of preparing a full report. Ivanhoff, a spy in the service of a neighboring state, assisted by his wife, Naida, drugs the Count and secures the plans. Count Bernard is commanded to return the plans to headquarters and discovers that they have been stolen. He reports accordingly to the Major General and is placed under arrest. Court martial follows and he is condemned to prison for twelve years.

The Countess determines to clear her husband. A clue is obtained when Alexis finds a cuff button near the safe from which the plans had been stolen. He takes it to his mistress, who, after much thinking, remembers that the initials on the button are those of Alexander Ivanhoff. Immediately she plans to place him in her power. She is a fearless and accomplished equestrienne and appears as one of the riders in the Hippodrome, in the capital of the country where Ivanhoff resides. She wears a mask and attracts many admirers by her striking appearance and feats of horsemanship. Ivanhoff becomes her slave, but is held at arm's length. Finally she prevails on him to lend her the key to his house, where she has promised to meet him on the pledge that he will send all his servants out of his home on the appointed evening. She unmasks at his urgent request, and before he recovers from surprise he finds himself covered with a revolver and given just one minute in which to produce papers that will prove his complicity in stealing the plans from her husband. She secures these papers and rushes out of the house, the faithful Alexis being stationed at the door to prevent pursuit by Ivanhoff. As she rushes past her servant, one of the papers drops on the threshold of the door. Ivanhoff attempts to rush out, but is thrown back by Alexis, who again stands on guard. At this juncture Alexis sees the piece of paper and places it in his pocket.

Ivanhoff escapes through a window and after securing papers from a high official for the arrest of the Countess on the border, he starts off in an auto of high motor power to intercept her by outracing the train on which she travels. He succeeds in doing this and regains the papers.

The paper held by Alexis, however, turns out to give sufficient proof that the Count is innocent, and husband and wife are reunited.

Ruth Blair

MISS RUTH BLAIR, whose photograph appears below, has been selected from among over a thousand applicants as leading woman of Smallwood brand comedies, shortly to be released through the United Film Service.

When the Smallwood Film Corporation decided that it was ready to secure a feature lead for its new brand, a contest was conducted with the idea of getting the typical American girl. The requirements demanded were that she be beautiful, have ability as an actress and screen well.

Of over 13,000 photographs secured from all parts of the country, a selection of eight girls was made who were called to New York City for the final test. A well known artist, a sculptor and a representative of the Smallwood Film Corporation made the final selection.

After all points were carefully weighed, Miss Blair was offered a contract for a period of three years, which she accepted.

Ruth Blair.

The new leading woman is five feet six inches in height, weighs one hundred and thirty-five pounds, and is a blonde with large brown eyes. She was born in Williamsport, Pa., twenty-two years ago of American parentage. After graduating from boarding school four years ago, where she was a recognized leader in amateur theatricals, she decided to make the stage her profession and with that end in view, spent a season with Mme. Courier, the well known dramatic coach, who, by the way, is the same Mme. Courier who taught and arranged for Julia Marlowe's debut. Miss Blair later spent two years in stock playing ingenue leads.

Miss Blair is an expert horsewoman, a good swimmer and in addition is considered an exceptionally good dancer. She is fond of all outdoor sports and takes especial delight in golf and tennis. Her beauty, ability and versatility are sure to make her popular with photoplay fans.

"Sunshine Molly"

Five-Reel Bosworth, Featuring Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley in a Stirring Tale of the Oil Fields.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE photographing of this production in the place where it belongs has a great deal to do with its enjoyment, although not by any means all. Nor is it the first time that the work of the "Smalleys," as we are wont to call them, has been looked upon with admiration.

Lois Weber has herself written the story of the film which classes favorably with some of the more pretentious of the red-blooded types that have gone before; and it is certain that not any one of them has given a truer portrayal of the human passions nourished by the strong, free air of the Western wilds. It is particularly pleasing to note the finesse with which the different types have been outlined; it is also interesting to note the psychological effects which occur in perfectly natural sequence throughout the course of the story. The story of the film represents what might be termed one of the rare selections of screen literature.

"Sunshine Molly," the role in the picture which has been played by Lois Weber, represents a splendid type of woman, one of those adamant types upon which the morality of our nation depends. "Bull" Forrest, on the other hand, is the great-hearted, passionate sort of child-man who knows no law of restraint, and whose spirit is quashed only by his evidently total failure to gain possession of the woman whose will proves equal to his own.

Then there is Pat O'Brien who strikes a "gusher" and takes his aspiring family to town, leaving Molly and the Widow Budd, a lovesick type, in charge of the eating house; and there is Old Pete on whose dying days Molly sheds her sunshine, giving "Bull" the sometimes irksome task of carrying the feeble old man into the chair set for his comfort at the door of the cabin. There is comedy, too, interspersed with the frequently tragic outlook of the story. Its placing has been tactfully done, and often aided by a fitting subtitle. The spectacular portion of the picture occurs when the old man who had formerly insulted Molly, and for whose chastisement she had spent some time in jail, appears on the scene and tries to mar her character. In revenge for her public denouncement of him, which prevents his gaining possession of Pat O'Brien's daughter and money, he sets the oil fields on fire. This is a remarkably realistic bit.

It would require too much space to mention all the points of interest in the picture, the scenes in the eating house and those at the town house of Pat O'Brien being especially interesting in their comic element. The subtitles of the picture are frequently reverberant with excellent moral teachings in the shape of useful maxims, and the opening of each reel of the picture has been introduced by slowly turning the pages of a book, upon whose pages are written a simple synopsis of what is to follow. The production has been staged by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, the latter presenting in excellent style the character of "Bull" Forrest. Dal Clawson has done the photographic work, and others of the company, all of whom do good work, including the numerous supers, are Adele Farrington, as Widow Budd; Margaret Edwards, as the daughter who "can't grow up"; Herbert Standing, as Pat O'Brien; Vera Lewis, as Mrs. O'Brien; Roberta Hickman, as Patricia, Pat's daughter; Frank Elliott, as the society man, and Charles Marriott, as Old Pete.

The production was released on March 11 by Bosworth, Inc., in association with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

Five-Part Adaptation of Bayard Vieller's "The Fight"—Three One-Reel Comedy Films.

OUT of Bayard Vieller's underworld melodrama, "The Fight," George W. Lederer made a five-part picture which will be released by the World Film Corporation on March 15. In the total impression created; in the strength of the situations and the unpleasant light in which crooked politicians are placed, the photoplay is akin to the stage production. Two characters in particular are finely drawn—John E. Kellerd's Vance, the deformed, crafty owner of an illegal resort, and Jane Thomas, the woman reformer played with dignity and feeling by Margaret Wycherley. A third member of the cast deserving of mention is Katherine La Salle, and a fourth is a remarkably well-trained collie.

The producer of the film showed commendable ingenuity in working up to moments of dramatic force—the attempt to compromise Jane, for one, the kidnapping of the Senator's daughter for another—and the plot development, from the time the militant young woman determines to rid the town of grafters until she is elected mayor, is sufficiently clear. The most elaborate settings are found in the home of Vance, connected with the dance hall by an underground passageway. It is in this passageway that the king of the grafters is laid low by a bullet and the story is brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

World Comedy Star Series.

First in the World Comedy Star Series of one-reel pictures will be Richard Carle in "The Dancing Beetle," a brightly played subject, ludicrous in idea and the manner of its development. Carle does very well as Professor Bugg, an erratic person who acquires a beetle whose bite causes the victim to dance violently and incessantly. When he thinks the beetle is lost and searches for it among a party of fashionably dressed ladies there are opportunities to admire the latest styles in hosiery. This film, to be released March 15, has enough humor to carry one reel.

Mark Swan wrote the scenario for "Health by the Year," in which Jefferson DeAngelis has a role of small novelty and limited comedy possibilities. According to the contract signed with a young physician, he must obey orders or forfeit his daughter and a considerable sum of money as well. The picture has little to offer beyond the personality of the famous comedian.

In "Housekeeping Under Cover," featuring Katherine Osterman, Mark Swan prepared a more original story, narrating the experiences of a family trying to live moderately without allowing others in an expensive apartment hotel to know of their economies. Smuggling provisions into the hotel is not an easy matter; but the greatest embarrassment is reserved for the morning that the rooms are set on fire when breakfast is being prepared. Of the three comedies this is the most human.

THE wrecking of a locomotive and three passenger cars while crossing a high trestle, on which are defective railroad ties, provides the highly sensational incident which deserves and will win applause for "The Juggernaut," and the scenes leading up to the disaster arouse high suspense. There is also a live theme in the play, something unusual in stories constructed around mechanical accessories. The vital motive and the characterization, particularly that of Philip Hardin, raise "The Juggernaut" above the melodrama class to which it naturally belongs. It is directed against the greed and graft so rampant in railroad properties run as stock-jobbing propositions rather than in the public interest.

The central figure is Philip Hardin, the dissipated son of an old railroad magnate. The latter's death brings some of life's sweetest rewards to Phillip, including wealth and a beautiful wife. She dies and leaves him a daughter who becomes a maternal replica some twenty years later, at a time when Phillip has accepted a railroad presidency as the tool of a stock manipulating syndicate. Meanwhile, growing in the legal profession to become District Attorney is John Ballard. The lives of these two men are strangely interwoven at the beginning of their active careers when they were classmates at college, Ballard assisting Phillip to pass his examinations and extricating him from a manhandling experience in a gambling joint. Though the rescue was made at the peril of Ballard's own life, the death of one of the gamblers, supposedly at his hands, puts a weapon in the hands of Phillip in case he clashes with his friend.

There is nothing heroic about Phillip; he is very human; he accepts the wealth his father earned and the lovely girl his friend gave up as two of the prime essentials of happiness on earth. He loves his wife while she lives, and loves his daughter after the mother's death. He would even be scrupulous in business in response to District Attorney Ballard's personal pleading, but he is dominated by the Wall Street clique, and he reneges in favor of the clique at a time when public opinion runs high against the deadly economy of his road. He menaces the attorney with exposure of his supposed crime only to have his daughter reveal to Ballard that no such crime was committed.

The end is tragedy. A train bearing Phillip's daughter is wrecked in consequence of his business policy, and he dies of heart failure in sight of the wreck. Ballard is also on hand, and he attempts the rescue of Phillip's daughter, but she expires, and the attorney's closing act is to lay the girl, beautiful in death, by the side of her erring father—an artistic conclusion.

Frank J. Howard

VERY few states in the union to-day are able to boast of an exhibitor who has followed the wonderful growth of the moving picture industry from its infancy. Massachusetts can justly claim such a distinction in the person of Frank J. Howard, who is not only the pioneer exhibitor of the Bay State, but regarded by all as the dean of New England picture men. Mr. Howard's first connection with the industry was established in 1894, when he traveled throughout the country exhibiting the Kinetoscope at fairs and in stores. While engaged in this work he learned that a system of projecting pictures upon a screen had been invented. In 1896 he opened the first moving picture theater in New England in a store on part of the site now occupied by the Hotel Brewster, in Boston. In those days films ranged in length from fifty to one hundred and fifty feet. An admission of ten cents was charged for a show comprising six hundred feet of film. Among the films shown were "The May Irwin Kiss," "A Railroad Train Coming Out of a Tunnel" and "The Seminary Girls."

Frank J. Howard.

Within a few years after this Mr. Howard opened the first film exchange in Boston, with offices in the Jefferson Building. In 1910 he sold out his interests to the General Film company and is now president of the Olympia Theaters company, of Lynn and Gloucester, and Gordon's Olympia company, Boston. During the period that he was engaged in the exchange business Mr. Howard was responsible for many of the improvements in that line, most notable of which is the use of leatheroid for film-carrying cases.

The use of these cases was brought about in a most peculiar manner. Mr. Howard noticed that the theater managers were not very prompt in returning reels of films which they had booked. When he would call them on the telephone they would inform him that the reel was in their house, but they did not have any string or wrapping paper in which to return it. Then the idea came to him of supplying the exhibitors with a leatheroid case for the reel. A few of these cases were made and after that time all reels were promptly returned to the exchange. Mr. Howard was the first man in the country to make use of the magazine on a picture machine. He admits that he made a great mistake in not having this improvement patented. Frank Howard is undoubtedly known to the majority of exhibitors in the East. His fair and square methods of doing business made many friends, and although he retired from the exchange field five years ago, a large number of the exhibitors are often heard to ask whether he will ever return to that line.

"Poison"

Two-Part Kalem Picture Made in Co-operation With the Westfield Pure Food Movement.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

MADE in co-operation with the Westfield Pure Food Move, best known through the writings of Lewis B. Allyn, and intended to assist in the campaign of enlightenment being waged by The Ladies World, this two-part Kalem production is distinctly a picture with a purpose. In full, the title reads, "Poison, a Story of Food Fakers." The story prepared by the Kalem Company, done into fiction form and appropriately illustrated will be published in about 150 newspapers that housewives throughout the country may be impressed by the importance of looking for the endorsement of the Westfield Pure Food Movement when they purchase canned goods. The picture, to be released March 29th, will synchronize with the newspapers spreads.

Scene from "Poison" (Kalem).

Of the story not a great deal need be said. As acted by Tom Moore, Marguerite Courtot and others, it presents the danger of using carelessly preserved supplies. It shows how a poor woman is in danger of death after swallowing too much poison contained in one of the relishes prepared at the plant, and how the little daughter of the owner of the concern is made dangerously ill by coal tar dyes used to color jams. Finally the old buildings are burned and others of a very different type are to be erected in their stead. The manufacturer is no longer unscrupulous, for the lesson brought home to him in his own family is remembered.

Mr. Allyn, the pure food expert whose face is familiar to most readers of magazines, appears in a number of scenes as the representative of an important association whose favor cannot be purchased. The producer of impure foods believes otherwise; he maintains that money will buy anything and attempts to bargain for the Westfield endorsement; but Mr. Allyn tears his check in two and tells his visitor that he need not call again until he is able to show a complete change in factory methods.

Some of the foregrounds presenting a plant as it should not be conducted are vivid enough to take away a normal appetite for some little time, and then, by way of contrast, come views of model buildings where everything is neat and systematic. The latter pictures were photographed in the establishments of two New York manufacturers where the surroundings give every evidence of clean food. "Poison" offers a useful warning against buying tin cans and bottles without examining their labels.

ALL STAR CAST IN NEW THANHOUSER SERIAL.

The great popularity with which the new Thanhouser serial is meeting is due to three things. The elaborate scene plots, the phenomenal number of thrills and the great all star cast acting in the piece. The complete cast of the "Million-Dollar Mystery" are now working at the Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle, producing this new thriller under the direction of the same director that produced "The Mystery." Howell Hansel, the chief producer of the "Million-Dollar Mystery," is now supervising the production of "The $20,000,000 Mystery," and has as a cast James Cruze, Margaret Snow, Sidney Bracy, Frank Farrington, Harry Benham and Mary E. Forbes.

Harry Myers

HARRY MYERS, director and leading man of the Victor (Universal) company, was born thirty-two years ago. He comes from Yankee stock and has no record of having inherited his ability as an all around actor from any one but Harry C. Myers. He's a six footer, has blue-green eyes and weighs—but never mind what Harry weighs. He has been in pictures almost six years, being one of the first legitimate players to enter the picture field.

Harry Myers.

After graduating from the public schools of New Haven, Conn., Mr. Myers became a student at the La Salle College in Philadelphia. Soon after graduation he joined the old Girard Theater Stock Company in Philadelphia, played with it two years, and then joined the Forepaugh Stock Company in the same city, for a similar period. Then "rep" beckoned him, and for another two years he played through New England being featured in the company of Maude Hillman, who was the teacher and early sponsor of Edmund Breese, Edwin Arden and other prominent American actors.

This training proved of splendid advantage to the ambitious young actor, and after a period with Mamie Fleming, the prominent repertoire star, in which he played everything from "Uncle Tom" to Shakespeare on short notice, Mr. Myers played the leading role in "Graustark" for one season.

For ten months Mr. Myers directed with the Lubin Company, and for five years he was a Lubin leading man. "A Deal in Oil," his first picture straightway established him as a director but his chief laurels were won through his seven-reel picture. "The Drug Terror," which he produced in three weeks, and to which he brought a wealth of knowledge of the seamy side of life which evoked surprised interest and comment from sociologists the world over.

Since joining the Universal Mr. Myers has produced innumerable single feature productions, each one of which has borne the stamp of his own artistic conceptions of photoplay construction and staging. His latest production is "A Romance of the Backwoods," which he directed and played in himself with Rosemary Theby as co-star. "A Romance of the Backwoods" will be released under the Victor brand on March 13.

STORIES WRITTEN ON ALLIANCE FEATURES.

Grossett & Dunlap, the well known New York publishers are the first concern in the book business to reissue the novels from which successful photoplays have been made.

The first of these, "The Carlyle Blackwell" edition, of "The Key to Yesterday" is already upon the booksellers' shelves, and the Blackwell edition of "The High Hand" is now on the press and will shortly be placed before the public.

"Jack Chanty," another feature on the Alliance program, will be reissued in book form during the course of the month in a "Max Figman" edition. The books are profusely illustrated by "stills" from the photoplays.

HORSLEY NAMES YOUNG SON.

After much pondering and debating over a name for the latest arrival in the Horsley family, whose first view of the world was last Monday, the proud parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Horsley, have at last decided to call their young son George William Horsley, Jr. This young man, although he has had very little time to show his prowess except for the occasional testings of his lungs, bids fair to follow in the tracks of his grandfather, who built the new Universal City, and his uncle, Mr. David Horsley, in becoming a prominent moving picture magnet and a great asset to the MinA productions.

"The Boston Tea Party"

A Spirited Two-Reel Edison Drama of Colonial Times.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

QUITE timely, in view of present disputes with our dear Mother Country about shipping, is this portrayal of the spirited way in which our ancestors dealt with high-handed British methods. Far from being peace apologists, our Colonial ancestors had iron in their blood—they dared fight for their rights. "The Boston Tea Party" was one of the incidents immediately preceding the Revolution—it occurred December 17, 1773—which led to a war for the redress of wrongs and to a struggle for complete independence. The methods of Great Britain were so repressive that they became oppressive; with a result that we all now enjoy on ocean-to-ocean empire with no other emperor than a sovereign people.

Factors of merit in this release, aside from its historical value, are the attractive ensembles, particularly that of the Governor's Ball, and the spirited action of Maxine Brown. As "Barbara" in the story, she learns that her sweetheart, Ethan Ward, is in deadly peril. It is he who has been fomenting a rebellion among the Colonists, and his conduct has come to the attention of Captain Crews. From the moment that she learns of her sweetheart's danger, Barbara gives expression to all the energy and intelligence in her nature; she is a thoroughbred American girl. She is in ball dress when her suspicions are aroused that there is something in the air, but she ignores the hardest thing in the world for one of her sex to forget, particularly with her best clothes on, and spies on a meeting where her loved one's fate is under discussion. Before an order for his arrest can be put into the hands of British soldiers, she is away in her carriage with her maid under pretext of sudden indisposition.

Barbara reaches the home of her sweetheart in time to warn him, and she resorts to a strategem to pass him through the cordon being drawn around his house. He is sent on in her carriage disguised by her hood and cloak, while Barbara shifts to a boy's suit and rides away to divert pursuit. The dashing ride of Barbara, over hedges and stone fences, part of the time closely followed by British cavalry, is a fact, not a motion-picture presumption. Maxine Brown is not only an actress who can convey on the screen the state of her mind and heart in a characterization, but she is an accomplished equestrienne, handling her mount almost as if to the saddle born.

Ethan Ward escapes, rouses the Colonists, leads a band of them aboard the Monmouth, and we all know what happened to the chests of tea. That this country, of the people and for the people, is the social and political creation of true hearts and noble minds in days gone by we also know, but it is well to be reminded now and then "Lest We Forget."

FRANZ AND MORLEY MAKE CHANGE.

Jos. J. Franz, who has been directing for Premier, has left that company and is now with the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company. Jay Morley has also closed with Premier, going over to Lubin Western.

Enid Markey

ENID MARKEY, the gifted young leading woman of the KayBee company, heads the strong cast that will soon be presented in "The Spirit of the Bell," a thrilling depiction of an incident in the Mexican revolution ready for release by the New York Motion Picture corporation on the Mutual program April 2.

Miss Markey interprets the part of Dolores De Oro, with whom Miguel Galvez, a sympathizer with the Federal cause, is in love. Dolores does not love him, because she is in sympathy with the rebels, but is in love with Pedro, her father's young ranch foreman. Refused the hand of Dolores, Miguel fires the ranch and kills Dolores' father, but not before the girl had been sent to the Mission for protection. Miguel compels a peon to reveal Dolores' hiding place. The padre refuses to deliver Dolores and Miguel threatens to destroy the Sacred Bell of Santa Maria and fire the Mission. Dolores leaves the Mission and conceals herself behind the bell. At sunset she arises like a spectre and the peon soldiers, thinking it the spirit of the bell, cease fighting. Dolores surrenders herself to Miguel, but an escaped peon prisoner warns Pedro of the danger and the foreman, with his men, kill Miguel, rout the band and rescue Dolores.

Enid Markey.

The production contains a number of sensational battle scenes in which five hundred men appear at the same time. Historic spots in the vicinity of the international boundary line also are prominent. Miss Markey is supported by Charles Ray as Pedro, Jack Nelson as Miguel and Herschel Mayall as Don Pasquale De Oro. The scenario was written by Thomas H. Ince and William H. Clifford. The production was directed by Jay Hunt.

FACTS ABOUT "THE JUGGERNAUT."

"The Juggernaut," a modern railroad drama, in five parts, written by Donald I. Buchanan and Ralph W. Ince, and produced by Mr. Ince, was the first picture, in the making, to attract the attention of the entire press of the city of Greater New York, every paper sending a representative to South River, New Jersey, where the principal scenes were taken, to get a picture and story of the big scene, the wreck and destruction of a fully equipped express train. Besides the newspaper men, Vitagraph officials and players—several thousand persons—witnessed this thrilling scene, which cost the Vitagraph Company over $25,000 and nearly cost the lives of a number of the actors engaged in its enactment. "The Juggernaut" is destined to be one of the big things in the film world and will add additional prestige to the reputation of the Vitagraph Company and to Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Julia Swayne Gordon, who portray the principal characters.

AN ATTRACTIVE production in two parts marks the introduction of the American Eclair product known as the Ideal brand into the program of the United Film Service. This two-reel subject is thoroughly western in atmosphere, has an unpleasant as well as a pleasant side, but is undoubtedly scheduled for a successful run.

Among the cast are players familiar to most of us, namely, Norbert Myles, H. Stanley, Edna Payne and Clara Horton. The story of the production centers about a jealousy, and contains the lesson of the old maxim of heaping coals of fire. A pretty school teacher is the bone of contention between a young widower with a child, and one of the men working under his guidance in the mines. Between these two men there occurs an excellent fight, which will prove an acceptable sensationalism to most audiences. There is one exceptionally effective perspective in which is told a tale of deep anxiety mingled with excitement. And there is the big thrill of the picture, which is father to the previously mentioned scene, when, with his child in the tunnel with her cat and its new kittens, as well as several of the miners, the foreman accidentally discharges the blast, which by its force fills the mouth of the tunnel, shutting off all means of escape for the imprisoned victims.

Special attention may be drawn to the nicety of many of the details of the production, which, in spite of a few faults, is at the same time an attractive one.

"The Juggernaut" Repeats.

Big Feature Will Run Second Week at Vitagraph Theater—Other Interesting Subjects.

FOR the week commencing Sunday, March 14, the Vitagraph Theater will depart, temporarily, from its usual policy of presenting a new feature every week and continue the five-part modern railroad drama, "The Juggernaut." While the wreck scene is essentially the big feature of "The Juggernaut," the various scenes depicting the development of the story are strong enough to hold the undivided attention of the audience and it is this gripping interest and the expressed desire of numerous Vitagraph Theater patrons to see this picture a second time, that has induced the management to retain it for a second week's showing.

A complete change of shorter pictures embracing three comedy subjects will add variety to the program: "The Lady of Shalott," a one-part comedy, with an all-star cast, including Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea, Jay Dwiggins and Constance Talmadge. A two-part comedy, "Janet of the Chorus," or how the art of making-up wins over a woman-hater, presenting Van Dyke Brooke, Norma Talmadge and S. Rankin Drew, and No. 3 of Roy L. McCardell's famous Jarr Family Series, entitled "Mr. Jarr and the Lady Reformer," in which Mr. Jarr is accused by a suffragette of trying to abduct a three-hundred-pound lady. Harry Davenport, as the inimitable Mr. Jarr, Rose Tapley as his spouse and Julia Swayne Gordon as the lady reformer, are the headline fun-makers.

IT LOOKS now, with two more episodes to come, to complete the first intention and a decision to continue the Pathe-Hearst serial indefinitely, and with Edwin Arden introduced in the 15th episode in a startling characterization which will add color to coming events, as though the success of "The Exploits of Elaine" had been something more than a dream.

Episode 11, designated as "The Hour of Three," has more than its allotted share of suspense, for in it Craig Kennedy becomes for a few brief moments master of the situation, with the master criminal shivering at the point of his revolver. The danger in which, he learns from his cunning victim, Elaine is at that moment placed, causes him to desert his post, and rush madly to tear the wrist watch, supposed to be a present from the family lawyer, from the wrist of Elaine.

One concisely worded subtitle at the start might be made a serviceable guide to the characters and an indication of whether they are on the side of good or evil. For the benefit of those who do not carry the story in mind from week to week, some such an explanation is needed.

But, granting the preparation possible in an introductory title, the plot unfolded in "The Island of Mystery" might easily fall short of becoming convincing. It is so frankly artificial that interest in the picture must depend upon one's readiness to follow a succession of swiftly moving scenes without bothering to question their likelihood. There is, however, an abundance of action and physical conflict in which Zudora is kidnapped and a number of men seek wealth in a diamond mine in South Africa, and towards the close of the second reel there comes a startling scene that may be the making of the picture.

In his handling of a train wreck—the plunging of a traction engine and six cars down a high embankment—Director Howell Hansel accomplished a thrilling accident that must have been photographed under considerable difficulty. Apparently the cameras were not far from the track when the engine jumped the rails and rolled over and over until it lodged in a cloud of steam at the foot of the elevation. These scenes are the strong feature of the production.

Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Harty Benham continue in a cast that is in all respects equal to the demands of the story.

FLAMINGO BEGINS PRODUCTION OF SERIES.

The Flamingo Film Company on Monday next begins the production of twelve two reel farce comedies under the general title of "The Feats of Felix." Each comedy will be complete in itself, although several of the leading characters will appear in each. The series will be released through the World Film Corporation.

J. A. Murphy, formerly of Lubin, has been engaged as director and has secured a number of clever comedians and comediennes for interpretation of the comedies. These include Charles Mason, Youna Laudowska, Elaine Ivans and Millicent Thomas.

The Imperial Studio in East 48th Street has been leased by the Flamingo Film Company and the finishing touches are being made to the plant this week. Everything will be in readiness for camera work Monday morning.

General Manager Hallett is enthusiastic over the value of the coming productions. He says "We have taken considerable time in preparing for the production of a series of unique farces that we believe will measure up as the funniest screen productions of the time. The stories are all from the pen of Frederick Upham Adams, the noted author and inventor and who, incidentally, is the president of the Flamingo Film Company. Mr. Adams has devoted several months of closest effort to the "Feats of Felix" and they represent his best work. The story of each farce radically differs from those familiar to the public.

WHATEVER of success is accorded "The Bridge of Sighs," the latest output of the Broadway Film Co. Jeff Davis, that amazing gentleman, who seems to find little difficulty in rising to the top in whatever profession he elects to follow, will undoubtedly be justified in asseverating that his wide reputation and loud acclaim in the mouths of all men has been the chief factor in securing the ear of the public and directing its gaze at this four-reel film.

Not that "The Bridge of Sighs" is devoid of merit, on its own account. Quite the contrary! It is a melodrama of slum life, which it depicts with vigor and a reasonable regard for the truth. Aside from the Hotel de Gink, none of the scenes is novel, but they are all authentic and will hold the close attention of that class of theatergoers that are interested in the trials and struggles of the submerged Tenth.

The story opens with a prologue. Bill Stevens is beating his way to New York City on a freight train. He is thrown off by a trainhand, meets Jeff Davis, and is advised by the King of the Hoboes to head for the Hotel de Gink. Stevens does so. He next obtains a position as porter in a saloon; and is the means of preventing Tom Carroll, a yeggman, from making a victim of Mollie Browning, a young girl, out of work and the only support of her dying mother.

Aided by Davis, Stevens and Mollie keep out of trouble with the police, and so avoid a trip across "The Bridge of Sighs"—that famous passageway to the Halls of Justice. The king is also pleased to smile upon their prospective union.

A fight between Stevens and Carroll, that is spoken of in the vernacular of the Bowery sometimes as "fierce," is one of the best things in the drama.

Although the advertised star of the photoplay and entitled to all the prerogatives of the position, Davis does not attempt to monopolize the center of the stage. While on the boards, however, he compels attention to himself by his dominant personality. His self-possession is a source of wonder, and he gives a good account of himself as an actor. Well, actors have turned tramps—if there be truth in the old jest about "counting the ties"—it will be but fair if Jeff reverses the condition.

Dorothy Welsh is an earnest and appealing Mollie, Richard Carlysle plays Bill Stevens in the right spirit, and Stephen Reardon makes Tom Carroll a most despicable but a very determined crook.

HOTALING TRIAL JUDGE.

Arthur D. Hotaling, of the Lubin staff, has closen the Jacksonville studio temporarily and is in Philadelphia trying out players for a new company. He has already completed double reels with Billy Reeves and Pat Rooney in the leading roles and is now at work on a third production. As soon as a selection is made he will return to Florida. Meantime the Jacksonville mechanical staff are building new sets and repainting old ones, against the coming of the stars. Mr. Hotaling manages to get over to New York a couple of times a week to give the place the once over.

"The Black Box" Ready For Release

Universal Special Serial Written by E. Phillips Oppenheim and Produced by Otis Turner With a Strong Cast.

THE next Universal serial is ready to be released and will make its first appearance on March 8. It is called "The Black Box" and will be released outside the regular Universal program as was "The Master Key," whach has just closed its fifteenth and last installment. "The Master Key," by John Fleming Wilson, was the best serial the Universal has ever produced, but "The Black Box" has ninety-nine chances out of a hundred of surpassing it.

E. Phillips Oppenheim.

"The Black Box" has many positive advantages of a decided character. It was written by E. Phillips Oppenheim, who is one of the world's greatest living novelists and writers of exciting stories. He excells in mystery situations and stories and he has outdone himself in "The Black Box." His name alone has been the means of making the newspaper syndicating proposition one of the easiest and most thorough pieces of business ever attempted. In New York it will commence in the Evening World on Monday, March 8, following a clever and effective teaser and advertising campaign. The papers of largest circulation in every city—more than 2,000 of them—will run it co-incidentally. With it there will appear one of the cleverest advertising campaigns ever put together. This advertising campaign is now complete and may be obtained by any exhibitor who has not already received a copy, either from his exchange or from the Advertising Department of the Universal. Posters on "The Black Box" have been made especially by the Morgan Lithograph Company and are of the most striking and effective character.

Herbert Rawlinson.

To moving picture sharps one of the greatest guarantees of the excellence of "The Black Box" is the fact that it is being produced by Otis Turner, one of the cleverest men who ever commanded "camera." It was his master hand which produced "Damon and Pythias" and he has a string of unbroken successes extending over almost as many years as pictures have been in existence. There is a Turner touch in every scene which marks the master hand; there is a Turner twist to every situation which stamps it as individual. And into "The Black Box" Otis Turner is putting every ounce of that ability and ingenuity which have made him famous.

The principal character is Sanford Quest, Criminologist, a modernized Sherlock Holmes. But where this world famous character detected crime and apprehended criminals by the force of his logic and observation alone, this new creation of the fertile brain of Mr. Oppenheim and Mr. Turner is far better equipped as far as moving pictures are concerned. Deduction and logic are difficult to represent on the screen. Sanford Quest brings to his aid all the modern and ultra-modern inventions of science. By an invention of his own he is able to see over the telephone wire the person who is talking to him. He has at his command the pocket wireless telephone; a compact and powerful explosive which balks any attempt to confine him, and a hundred other contrivances which will interest and thrill those who will see "The Black Box." Sanford Quest is a detective de luxe.

This central character will be played by Herbert Rawlinson. The role gives him an opportunity seldom held out to a moving picture star. Mr. Rawlinson came into prominence by his work in "The Spy," the Cooper novel which was filmed as a special feature by the Universal and was put on by Otis Turner. He also played the part of Pythias in "Damon and Pythias."

Herbert Rawlinson will be ably assisted by Anna Little, one of the most talented of screen stars, Frank Lloyd, who is now the director of the new Laemmle Brand of films, William Worthington, who played Damon and a number of other strong parts, Laura Oakley, Frank MacQuarrie and Mark Fenton. It is a cast of wonderful completeness and balance, and one which has proved itself in every way.

The title of the first episode is "An Apartment House Case,", a synopsis of which will be found on another page of The Moving Picture World, and from this episode to the last, there is a world of interest and suspense.

"The Black Box"

Big Universal Mystery Serial Begins—First Two Reel Installment Leaves Spectator Full of Interest and Still Guessing.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE latest serial offering to be released is the Universal mystery story, "The Black Box." There are to be fifteen installments of it, each of two reels, and issued once a week. The first installment has been run off for us and, judging by these two reels, we confidently expect that it will be perhaps even more popular than "The Master Key," or "The Trey o' Hearts." The author is E. Phillips Oppenheim, and Director Otis Turner has had charge of putting it on the screen.

One of the noticeable things in it is the scientific methods of its most certainly up-to-the-minute detective. He even compels one of the criminals whom he has captured to tell him all about what the worst villain of all is doing, and does this by electrical thought transference under hypnosis. The victim of this gives secrets away she doesn't know she knows. When the detective puts the apparatus on her head she tells him what her pal is doing at that very moment. Many people are deeply interested in such things as this, for such things give one something to wonder about and speculate over as to their probability. Such things seem to picture a mysterious background-life joining us all together. Things that do this are effective elements in stories. We believe that Rider Haggard was among the very first to make use of them.

Anna Little.

The good quality of the directing and staging usual in offerings made by Otis Turner has long been recognized. One is apt to find in them now and again scenes that wake one up with a prod to his attention and of such is a scene in the first reel where Lenora (Anna Little) is seen after the murder backing down the stairs with a face of terror and vague apprehension.

Another feature of the picture is the mechanical contrivances. For example, the criminal seeing the detective on his front door step, pulls a lever and lets him drop into the cellar. This detective is not the kind that lets his clothes be rumpled by a little thing like that. He brushes himself off and when he gets ready puts a little pocket bomb with electric detonator against the cellar's trap door and blows a hole through the house and so escapes.

Hypnotism is worked a good deal and serves to help out the mystery the story weaves about its doings. The girl is hypnotized by the detective and told to do certain things at a certain time and then wakened from the trance. She is awake, walking about and conscious, but when the time comes she does just what is expected of her and obeys the detective's injunctions to the letter.

The cast of players indicates the quality of the acting. It is not quite even; but much of it is very well done indeed. Some of the types, for example, are fine. These are varied and though it can not be claimed that the leading roles are real characters, the lesser parts promise to be full of humanity. Staging, photographs and sets are worthy.

The cast is as follows:

Sanford Quest	Herbert Rawlinson
Lenora	Anna Little
Laura, Quest's assistant	Laura Oakley
Prof. Ashleigh } Lord Ashleigh }	Wm. Worthington
Lady Ashleigh	Helen Wright
The Lord's daughter	Beatrice Van
Ian MacDougal	Frank Lloyd

During the year 1915 the Selig Polyscope Company is planning the release of a number of special pictureplay feature films. The public has learned to appreciate that the name "Selig" attached to multiple reel pictureplays is synonymous with realism and elaborateness. Here are some points and punches in forthcoming specials:

A real sandstorm, real streets of Cairo, real caravans of camels, a real prayer rug valued at thousands of dollars, figure in "The Carpet from Bagdad."

Tyrone Power, star of the spoken drama, who has supported Irving, Faversham, Mrs. Fiske and others, assumes the role of "Maverick Brander," in Charles Hoyt's comedy of true American life, "A Texas Steer." Critics say his work in this picture play is the best in a long and distinguished career.

Kathlyn Williams headed a special company of players who went to the Panama Canal Zone to film scenes called for in Rex Beach's great novel "The Ne'er Do Well." Interesting scenes along Uncle Sam's great waterway were filmed. Government officials afforded every facility.

Edward E. Rose himself wrote the film adaptation of "The Rosary," his world-noted stage play. Action starts in Ireland and the Middle West and lower East Side of New York are presented. Wonderful lighting effects and beautiful scenic backgrounds.

In "The Crisis," one of Winston Churchill's most popular novels, scenes in old St. Louis immediately preceding and during the Civil War will be realistically presented. An all-star cast of players will portray many interesting character types.

Arthur Leeds

IN LINE with the infusion of new blood, the enlargement of the stage facilities and the addition to the weekly program of a three-reel feature, Edison has departed from its customary way of handling scenarios and has installed as its first scenario editor Arthur Leeds, well known as an authority on the photoplay and a man of much allied experience.

Heretofore Manager Horace G. Plimpton has acted as chief scenario editor with the associated help of all of the directors who, in weekly meetings, passed upon possible available scripts. But it is expected that with the centering of the editorship on one person—and one of such undoubted ability as Mr. Leeds—will enable that company to make more sure that no play with even an idea will slip through the net and also promote greater speed in handling of the scripts.

Arthur Leeds.

Manager Plimpton is enthusiastic about his good fortune in securing Mr. Leeds, as the latter brings to this new duty an uncommonly wide experience as actor, director, lecturer and writer on the scenario and photoplay and is a successful dramatist himself. He came to his new position from the position of editor of "The Photoplay Author," the well known monthly magazine devoted to photoplay-writing. Perhaps Mr. Leeds is best or most widely known as the author of "Writing the Photoplay" in collaboration with Dr. J. Berg Essenwin. Mr. Leeds is also a writer of short stories, many of his having appeared in the leading magazines. He is, therefore, broadly experienced and fully equipped to pass upon and prepare for production the class of photoplays which all thinking manufacturers now agree are demanded if the photoplay will fulfill its indicated function.

From the very beginning, Mr. Leeds started out with the predetermined plan of getting the broadest foundation for a bigger future, so we see him, some years ago now, as model scene maker and scene painter with the Cummings Stock company in Toronto, Canada, in which company he later became an actor. Leaving that, he then spent the summer of 1905 in stock, travelling throughout Canada and two seasons in repertoire. He then came upon what he declares to be the first real photoplay in motion pictures, the Edison "Great Train Robbery," in a middle western company with which he travelled, lecturing on the then marvelous new method and the story itself while it was being pictured. Mr. Leeds then went back into repertoire for about two years, acting also as stage manager until he returned to the motion pictures as a lecturer and manager of a motion picture house in Titusville, Pa. He again returned to the stage in musical comedy with the Mittenthal productions. He was, however, all the time devoting his spare time to writing for the stage and cinema.

About this time he entered the motion pictures as an actor with the Essanay and Selig, also writing plays for them. It was an article on the evolution of the motion picture that attracted Dr. Essenwin, then editor of Lippincott's magazine, that brought forth the offer from the Doctor for Mr. Leeds to co-operate on writing a book for the photoplay which resulted in "Writing for the Photoplay." Mr. Leeds aims to read every manuscript that comes into the Edison studio—a monumental task, but to one who knows Mr. Leeds' earnestness and conscientiousness, a task that will be faithfully performed.

UNIVERSAL NOT IN MARKET FOR SCENARIOS.

Under date of March 8, the Universal Film Mfg. Co. advise us that they are not in the market for scenarios and will not accept any, until further notice.

"The Broken Toy"

An Attractive Two-Reel Production Made by the Universal, Featuring Violet Mersereau.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE subject of this picture which will be released under the Imp Brand is one that could easily have been converted into a more pretentious story; and the fault of the production is that of many two-reel features that are being made today, namely, the attempt to cover an expansive story with an inadequate number of feet of film, which necessitates clumsy jumps, recourse to the vision idea, or the relating of a life story by the chief character of the main story, which gives excuse for the omission of a great deal.

Regardless of the fact that the picture may be technically or constructively faulty, a tribute is due somebody from the fact that it holds interest from first to last. Lucius Henderson has done much toward carrying the story over by tactful direction; and the appealing personality of Violet Mersereau protrudes another reason why we are bound to like the production.

The story has been written by Olga P. Clark and her idea is a good one. The symbolism of the broken toy has been made clear and although the primal thought in the story constitutes what is now one of the universal themes for picture plays, it will be found in this instance to have taken on another fresh hue.

The introduction of the story opens a question in the mind of the spectator as to the identity and relationship of the young woman and the child. The interpolation of a street scene with an organ grinder to whom the child runs with pennies, at the same time dancing to the music, affords an opportunity for reminiscences, which, in their turn, bring on the recital of the woman's early days, to a man who is enamoured of her dancing. Then the story drifts into its main theme, showing how the dancer listened to the wooing of the man, who, be it to his credit, weds her. One day she has a fall through which her foot is injured and her dancing capacity permanently destroyed. The man grows careless of his broken toy, and the woman in dispair from his neglect leaves him. Then we are brought back to that stage of the story to which the opening scene belongs, where we find the mother ill, and the little one evidently endowed with premature intuition, dressing in a ballet dress and going to find work in order to aid her mother. It so happens that she enters a ballroom where her father, whom she has never seen is enjoying himself. He recognizes the child as his own, and so the close of the picture leaves the spectator satisfied with the idealistic solution of the problem.

CARNEY WITH UNITED.

Augustus Carney, who is known to motion picture audiences throughout the country as "Alkali Ike," and who was for years one of the featured stars of Essanay, has been added to the all star roster of the United Film Service. He is making his first appearance under United auspices in a new release, a double-reel farce comedy entitled "Hickville's Diamond Mystery." That Hickville should possess such a luxury as a diamond is certainly a mystery, and Hickville being synonymous to "country town," the comic possibilities of the plot are easily discernible. That Alkali Ike takes full advantage of these possibilities for creating laughs is fairly certain to those who have watched his unfailing resourcefulness in the past.

Brabin Directing "Judge Not"

BESIDES being one of those once-in-a-lifetime instances where a play, complete and dramatic, can be lifted directly from real life, for the drama is produced without an iota of change, the story of how the forthcoming Edison "Judge Not" came into being as a play is as interesting as the drama itself.

Edison Director Charles Brabin best tells it in his own words: "I doubt if I ever saw an actor who had such control of his emotional powers as Charlie Ogle who could stop in the very height of a strong scene and in the most prosaic way ask whether, perhaps, 'Am I in the right place?' He didn't seem to feel at all, though he could thrill you. I said one day, 'Good Lord, Charlie, did you ever cry in your life?' 'Yes, once,' was all he said, and then he told me the story that so affected him. It was the simple, powerful story of a sweet, simple village girl who was lured away. Charlie Ogle's father was the minister who brought her back to her mother's home and her tragic death, it developed later.

Charles Brabin.

"The story so affected me that I was one day telling it at the Republican Club, New York, in company with the editor of the Metropolitan Magazine, the editor of The Ladies' World and James Oppenheim, the writer. When I had finished, Mr. Oppenheim asked me whether he could write it. The editor of the Metropolitan Magazine bought the story on the spot, and it has since come out as 'The Stoning,' later selling it to Edison. Strange to say, it so affected both Charlie and myself that we never thought of it as a play."

"Judge Not" will be something of a departure from the usual pleasant endings of plays as Viola Dana, who will play the village girl, is shown drowned and in her coffin, providing a simple but powerful play in its rugged simplicity. Director Brabin, realizing this departure, is putting his best work into it to prove that the public will like a play which is drawn so close to life, even if tragic in the ending.

LILLIAN ELLIOTT IN MOROSCO PHOTOPLAY.

Lillian Elliott, one of America's foremost character artists, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company to appear before the motion picture camera in "Help Wanted," which is now being prepared for the screen at the Bosworth-Morosco studios. Miss Elliott is recognized as the leading exponent of German dialect on the American stage and it was on that account that Mr. Morosco selected her to create the part of Mrs. Mayer in the original production which met with such success at the Cort Theater, Chicago, where it held the record for attendance and receipts. The success of this production at the Maxine Elliott Theater, New York City, a little over a year ago, as well as all over the country, is an item of note in theatrical history, and the fact that this able actress has been secured among others of the original cast, to appear in the picture speaks well for this release.

S. T. REYNOLDS PRODUCES PRISON FEATURE FOR CITAGRAPH CO.

The Citagraph Company of New York and Los Angeles, has recently completed the four reel feature "Life in a Western Penitentiary." The scenes are laid inside the walls of the Arizona State Prison through permission of Gov. W. P. Hunt and were produced by S. T. Reynolds. The Citagraph Corporation recently completed films of the trans-continental highway route from Los Angeles to Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the American Automobile Association and the United States Good Roads Department.

"Shadows"

Punchinello One-Reel Comedy in Which Shadows and Reality Each Have a Different Version of the Story to Tell.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE excellence of this little comedy released through the Kriterion Service, wins for it a review all to itself. It has been produced by Henry Travers, with Kathryn Sheldon and Tom Ward impersonating distinctive types. The comedy is built around the tell-tale quality of shadows, emphasizing with comic effect their remarkable tendency toward stretching the truth. The idea is a clever one, and the treatment given the subject in this particular instance is original.

The play is, strictly speaking, straight comedy, which gets considerable of its fun out of a couple of eccentric types that have been introduced in the leading roles. Across from the Jones's there lives an old maid Busybody, whose window conveniently faces a window of one of the living rooms of the Jones's house. One evening Mr. Jones bidding his wife an affectionate goodbye hurries away to his club. Mrs. Jones shortly afterward accompanies a friend to the theater, thereby affording ample opportunity for the maid-of-all-work to entertain her beau who has been waiting patiently on the back doorsteps.

And now for the play of the shadows, which really starts at the departure of Mr. Jones. Busybody has witnessed the silhouette on the window shade, of the Jones's kissing, and being at the rear end of the house she has failed to note Mrs. Jones' departure. Hence the awful significance of the story of the shadows, which in the inflated imagination of Busybody is the prelude to a frightful matrimonial tangle. Her nerves withstand the shock of what the shadows tell, kissing, cigarette smoking, etc.; until the maid and the man rocking gaily back and forth, a sandwich in one hand and a glass in the other, accidentally topple backward off the couch, when propriety and the shadows part company altogether, and Busybody with a wild and ghastly glare reels from her seat by the window and falls in a heap on the floor. She recovers her equilibrium, however, in time to waylay Mr. Jones on his return, and reveal the dreadful truth. Following this are a series of incidents that can be easily imagined when Mrs. Jones is confronted with the debris of her supposed misdeeds, the real offenders are extricated, the one from the recesses of a box couch, and the other from a clothes closet, and angrily dismissed from the scene, and the shadows conclude their play with a duplicate of the opening scene, leaving Busybody to ponder on the idiosyncracies of human nature.

The production was made at the All Comedy studio, and is an early March release.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA TO SUPPORT INA CLAIRE.

Mr. Samuel Goldfish announces that the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. has engaged the famous Japanese photo-dramatic artist, Sessue Hayakawa, to play an important role in the production in which Miss Ina Claire is destined to make her screen debut. The title of this production and the entire cast will be announced in the near future.

Margaret Prussing

FROM the staid dignity of the acting of the old English plays of college dramatics to the dare-devil "stunts" of motion picture actress, is a leap, but one that Miss Margaret Prussing, the latest selected for leading roles in the Edison Stock Company, has successfully bridged with characteristic energy.

Her career is unique inasmuch as, after making a successful debut on the legitimate stage while still a college girl, she left the stage to go back to complete her course of two years more at Bryn Mawr. Eight or nine old English dramas are staged by the Bryn Mawr students for which they painstakingly prepare for during a whole year. The plays are given at the famous May Day spectacle. It was due to the marked talent for acting that Miss Prussing displayed in this exacting style of drama and acting that determined her stage career. During her college vacations she made her first stage appearance in Chicago as the stenographer in "The Gentleman from Mississippi," where she understudied the leading woman, and when the opportunity presented itself, played that role with accredited skill. That was five years ago. She dutifully spent the next two years in college when she left to join the Southern company playing in "Seven Days." Three months at home with an unsuccessful record as a housekeeper and she was back again in Belasco's "The Woman" as general understudy, where she gained a broad technical experience. Her first motion picture experience came in the summer with Eclair when she left to go with Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," later in "Loretty," and then a summer season with the Selig Stock, when Wm. A. Brady sent for her to play "Meg" in "Little Women," the stage drama.

Margaret Prussing.

She returned again to the screen to play leads with Kalem and various companies until she began with the Edison company last October where she did commendable work as the adventuress in "The Glory of Clementina," as "Priscilla" in "The Landing of the Pilgrims," and in the forthcoming "Arcadian Maid," where athletic agility is shown in riding. She is cast also for the lead in the Edison three-reeler, "The Deadly Hate," with Marc MacDermott.

Enthused still with all the direct and frankly engaging spirit of the college girl, and with a keen and quick susceptibility as to character values, there is good reason to believe that her large and expressive brown eyes and beauty will register well an individual personality and popularity.

GILLIGHAM PLANS $50,000 THEATER.

The United Theater Company of Grand Rapids, Mich., have had plans prepared for a big moving picture theater which it is to build in that city. It is estimated that $50,000 will be involved in erecting the house. Work on the building will begin early in next May, and the location of the structure will be on Monroe avenue, N. W. Both the interior and exterior will be handsomely decorated, and a big pipe-organ as well as an orchestra of several pieces will be used to furnish selections for the pictures. The United Company hope to have the theater in operation late in the summer or early in the fall. The Orpheum and the Columbia theaters are also owned and controlled by the United Theater Company.

COLUMBUS LYCEUM TO OPEN WITH "SATAN SANDERSON."

Anderson and Ziegler's Lyceum Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, will open as a motion picture theatre with "Satan Sanderson," the first release of the Metro Pictures Corporation. A magnificent stage setting, pipe organ and new projection equipment has been installed. Ten, fifteen and twenty-five cent admission prices prevail.

"The High Hand"

The Career of "Honest" Jim Warren from Foundryman to Governor Told in Six-Reel Favorite Players Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A PICTURE that we can safely term as better than the average has been turned out by the Favorite Players Company from Jacques Futrelle's story of political life. Its hero is a labor leader who makes a successful fight against entrenched graft and wins the girl of his choice from his dishonest opponent. That he himself feeling unable to cope with political conditions by open-handed methods stoops to do the same kind of dirty work that his opponents do, even with the clean purpose of doing away with bad conditions, is the story's most hampering burden. In real life the man might have done just that; but in this particular story our interest in him is the less on account of it; chiefly because we must count him less worthy of success and of the girl.

It is a beautifully staged picture, and there is very little of the acting that is not pleasing; much of it is good. The story does not convince one as more than perhaps possible; but it is free from foolish straining after melodramatic "effects" and, with its quite plausible love interest, its naturally directed, straightforward narrative holds interest. The plot is carefully constructed and builds up to the close without failure or anticlimax. One of the beauties of the offering is its convincing atmosphere, given by its well-chosen backgrounds and perfect sets. The lifelike, artistic photography helps not a little in the offering's final score of entertainment.

Among its specially interesting elements are the foundry scenes taken in some big steel plant and showing, as backgrounds for the early life of its hero, the great machine tools at which he works, the pouring of molten metal and the flying sparks that in the dusky shop scatter from the whirling emory wheels biting into the steel. There is a picture, in the later part of the story, of a millionaire's library full of dignified taste. The mob scene near the close was taken on the stone steps of the State Capitol at Sacramento, California. We also see glimpses of the legislative chamber. Seaside backgrounds and bits of mountain scenery add their bit to the whole. And all are perfectly in keeping and beautifully taken. An acceptable feature offering.

BECHTELS LEAVE EDISON.

After six years of work for the Edison company William Bechtel and Mrs. Bechtel resigned last Saturday, March 6, having given the customary two weeks' notice. Mr. and Mrs. Bechtel went with this company together in 1908 and formed the nucleus of the first stock company organized at this studio. They are the last of a notable list of actors working together at that time to leave the Edison company, including such screen names as J. Searle Dawley, Laura Sawyer, Edwin August, Guy Coombs, Charles Ogle and the late John R. Cumpson. After taking a much needed rest the Bechtels hope to begin work again about May 1, although it is not known that they have any definite contract in view.

Ouida Bergere in New Company

A NEW film company which is backed by prominent Wall Street banking interests has been incorporated to produce well known Broadway successes on the screen. Already two plays whose names are household words have been secured, and Walter Edwin, one of the best known directors in the field, has been engaged as producer. The organization will be managed by a woman, Ouida Bergere, who will be assisted by one of America's foremost authors.

Ouida Bergere.

Miss Bergere has been well known for some time in the picture field. For a long time with Pathe Freres as scenario editor she wrote stories in many of which she played leads and passed upon several thousand scripts. Since that time she has written special stories for such firms as Famous Players and Vitagraph.

Miss Bergere, who, by the way, is a southerner with a most delicious accent, is even better known on the speaking stage. She was the creator of several parts in the productions of Wilton Lackaye, with whom she appeared for several seasons and has appeared in a number of vaudeville sketches. She is well remembered by theatergoers in such plays as "The Brute," "Excuse Me," and "Via Wireless."

The name and plans of the new company will be announced shortly.

BABER RETURNS TO LONDON.

Sydney M. Baber, manager of the London office of the Famous Players Film company, who recently arrived on his first visit to this country to consult with the officers of the Famous Players on a foreign campaign for their product, sailed last Saturday for London on his return voyage. While in this country Mr. Baber accompanied Mr. Zukor to the Los Angeles studios of the Famous Players Film company, and for the first time saw some of this concern's features, which have enjoyed a tremendously popular vogue in England, in active course of production.

On his double tour across the continent, Mr. Baber was enabled to study film conditions in America from the exhibiting and exchange point of view at close range, and he returns to England with the mastery of the American film distributing and exhibiting principles that will undoubtedly culminate in many startling innovations in London motion picture circles.

While in California Mr. Baber, on behalf of hundreds of English exhibitors who authorized this request, invited Miss Mary Pickford to London, where they promise her the greatest reception ever accorded a foreign or native star.

FINE STELLAR CAST IN NEW ROBERT WARWICK PHOTOPLAY.

In the company selected to support Robert Warwick in the film version of the George Broadhurst story, "The Man Who Found Himself," a William A. Brady-World Film production, the following players are now at work under the direction of Frank Crane:

Arline Pretty, who has been King Baggot's leading woman in many productions; Douglas McLean, who is remembered for his playing in the "As Ye Sow" picture in which Alice Brady was starred; Ruth Finley, one of the most dependable actresses who had just finished an engagement in the William A. Brady organization, playing in "The Things that Count," and Paul McAllister, who has been starred in various productions, and whose most recent work has been with Clara Kimball Young in "Hearts in Exile."

Several scenes in connection with this production have been taken at Sing Sing, and as some one has said, "It seems that Bob Warwick likes his friends there." He spent three days in Warden Osborne's institution making "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

"The New Wizard of Oz"

Oz Film Company Presents New Wizard Picture in Five Reels.

THE first "Wizard of Oz" which had a long popularity on the stage created a demand for pictures of the fantastical characters born in that bit of Kansas fairy land created by L. Frank Baum. The Scarecrow, the Tiny Woodman, the Donkey and the Princess are loved for themselves. They will be found very much the same in this "New Wizard of Oz," a five-reel picture by L. Frank Baum. It would be a fair offering even if it were unknown; but its name is a call to attract people.

he can fully enjoy its peculiarities, being as it is a child-like fantasy. At the close of the first reel he begins to feel its spell, and from that point enjoys the story, just a fairy tale, but a fairy tale with a touch of poignant humanity. Its showing of the affectionate Princess in whose breast the wicked witch has frozen her heart from all human love is truly interesting. The best part of the picture is not the scenes at the court of King Kruel, but the corn field scenes where the queer creatures are helping the poor bewitched Princess to get back her soft heart and her lover, changed by the Witch into a kangaroo. The Donkey is her first valiant champion and has a most amusing series of rounds with her Satanic highness, the Witch. Soon the Scarecrow and the Tin Man are with her. The cowardly Lion, the Wooden Horse, the Great Crow will come in for a share of the commendation. And there are many decidedly pretty scenes. It is clearly photographed and will make an accepable offering of entertainment, but more especially for children.

MARTIN TO OPEN NEW HOUSE.

R. E. Martin, proprietor and manager of the Bonita Theater, Columbus, Ga., will open on March 15 next the Grand in that city. The new structure was given its name by popular contest, and represents an investment of $60,000. The location of the theater is right in the heart of Columbus, and it is one of the best appointed picture houses in the South. There will be accommodation for 1,050 persons. Music will be furnished by a big pipe organ and an orchestra of six pieces. The musical program will be under the direction of George L. Hamrick, formerly of the "Montgomery" in Atlanta, Ga. As evidence that the Grand will be fitted with up-to-date equipment a few of the furnishings are enumerated—they are two motor-driven Simplex machines, a Mirror screen and an automatic ticket selling machine. The indirect lighting system will be used.

OPEN BIG HARVARD WITH KLEINE'S "STOP THIEF."

The new Harvard Theater at 63d and Harvard Sts., Chicago, opened its doors for the first time Saturday, February 27th, with George Kleine's "Stop Thief." The Harvard seats one thousand people and is one of the finest examples of theater building in the United States.

Neva Gerber

NEVA GERBER, playing opposite to Carlyle Blackwell in "The High Hand," the next Favorite Players production, is the daughter of the late S. Nelson Gerber, for years the most prominent criminal lawyer in Chicago. Miss Gerber is a daughter of the Sunny South, and granddaughter of the late William Younge, Governor of Kentucky, and a direct descendent of John Wentworth, first Governor of New Hampshire, appointed by the English crown. She is closely related to General Benjamin F. Butler.

Driving high-powered autos and aeroplanes is Miss Gerber's hobby. She has to her credit having driven the ninety-horsepower Mercedes car which the great racer, De Palma, drove, and in which he has braved death several times. She is but a slip of a girl, but is one of the most daring automobile drivers, and is well known among the auto jockeys of California.

Neva Gerber.

Miss Gerber is a graduate of the Convent of the Immaculate Heart, and a finished pianist. She is very fond of her very famous thoroughbred bull "Brutus," who is her constant companion.

Neva Gerber played opposite to Carlyle Blackwell in the Kalem Co., opposite to Hal August in the Edwin August Feature Films and was leading woman for William D. Taylor's Balboa Company. George Melford, now directing for the Lasky Company, is responsible for Miss Gerber's being in motion pictures, and he is justly proud of his find. She played leads in "Criminal Code" and "An Eye for an Eye" under the direction of William D. Taylor with the Balboa and "The Detective's Sister" with Carlyle Blackwell in the Kalem Company; also "The Great Secret" and "The Awakening" in the Edwin August Feature Films.

Coincidentally Miss Gerber finds herself again associated with William D. Taylor as her director and Carlyle Blackwell as her "hero."

FORBES BUYS CLEM THEATER.

L. Forbes of Seattle recently completed negotiations for the purchase of the Clem moving picture theater on Sprague avenue, between Post and Walnut streets, Spokane, Wash., from Dr. H. S. Clemmer. The consideration was approximately $10,000, it ic understood, and includes lease, location and good will, but not the name. The trade value of the name and its similarity to that of the new Clemmer theater which Dr. Clemmer has opened, make it an asset which the former proprietor is anxious to retain. While its seating capacity is only 450 it has enjoyed an exclusive clientele. A pipe organ and motor driven projection machines are among its up-to-date equipment.

PEGGY BURKE IN THANHOUSER MUTUAL DRAMA.

Peggy Burke, the beautiful model who posed for some of the girl's heads drawn by Howard Chandler Christy, Harrison Fisher and other famous illustrators, has become a moving picture star. She is appearing in a new newspaper release, "A Newspaper Nemesis," a production of the Thanhouser Mutual company.

As the daring young newspaper girl, Molly Sayre, Miss Burke distinguishes herself by running down Spike, a burglar, who has made a friend of hers a widow by his activity with a revolver.

FIRST MUNICIPALLY OWNED PICTURE THEATRE.

Riverside, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago, has established what is probably the first municipally owned picture theatre in the United States. The theatre will be owned and operated entirely in the public interest. The Kleine Optical Co., of Chicago, supplied the projection apparatus.

"Road of Strife"

New Lubin Serial by Emmet Campbell Hall, Has a Notable Cast.

ROAD O' STRIFE," the new fifteen-part serial by Emmett Campbell Hall, which the Lubin Company will shortly release, will have the strongest all-star cast of any series of dramas ever made by the Lubin Company. Over five hundred players will be used in the production, and the important parts will be played by men and women who have been starred in some of the biggest Lubin productions.

When John Ince began making "Road O' Strife," he was given carte blanche by Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, to select any of the prominent Lubin players and cast them for parts. Ince did so, and as a result the various characters in the dramas will be interpreted by players whose names are known wherever pictures are shown.

The three main leading roles throughout the series will be played by Mary Charleson, one of the most vivacious little leading women in the world of photoplayers, and Crane Wilbur and Jack Standing, two of the best-known and most popular of the Lubin leading men. Among the other well-known Lubin players who will play important roles are Rosetta Brice, John Ince, George Soule Spencer, Mrs. Daly, Percy Winter, Bernard Seigel, Florence Hackett, George Clark, James Cassady, Frank Smiley, Bart McCullum, Francis Joyner, Walter Law, John Smiley, William Turner, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, William Cohill, Charles Brandt, Clarence Jay Elmer, Flora Lea, Howard Mitchell, George Trimble, Gilbert Ely, Mrs. Sterling, Peter Lang, Douglas Sibole, Frankie Mann, Jack Delson, Jack McDonald, James Daly, Eleanor Blanchard and Josephine Longworth.

THE BALTIMORE MOTION PICTURE MEN HAVE LUNCHEON.

An informal luncheon was held recently by the World Film corporation at the Hotel Caswell, Baltimore, Md. The affair was arranged so that the local exhibitors of motion pictures would be afforded an opportunity to meet Lew Fields, the star in the famous World Film production of "Old Dutch," who was then appearing at the Academy; Ben E. Drum, manager of the World Film corporation of Washington and Baltimore, and C. W. Swan, district manager of the corporation. Among the local exhibitors present were T. J. Bohannan, Harry Lewy, Frank Durkee, Walter Pocy, Guy Wunders, Paul Emmart, Jake Schaub, Irvin Levine, W. M. Tyler, Jack Levine, Harry Bleachman, Bernard Depkin, J. H. Walraven and Lewis De Hoff.

SHANNON FIFE IS PROLIFIC.

Shannon Fife, one of the most versatile of the Lubin photoplaywrights, has made quite a record for himself as far as the regular March program of the Lubin Company is concerned, as five of his plays are released between the third and the thirty-first. The plays are "A Woman Went Forth," two-reel drama, featuring Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman, March 3; "Winning Winsome Winnie," a one-reel comedy, featuring Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, March 9; "Here Comes the Bride," one-reel comedy, featuring Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman, March 16; "The Only Way Out," a three-reel mystery drama, with Francis Joyner and Rosetta Brice, March 18, and "The Unmarried Husband," a two-reel drama, with Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman, March 31.

H. H. Helbush

LAST week saw the addition of another new concern to to the producing units contributing to the Alliance program. Andrew J. Cobe, of the Alliance, remained in New York last week in order to personally conclude arrangements with the Pageant Film company. This concern has already completed its first picture, "The Pageant of San Francisco," which will be released through the recently organized special department of the Alliance Films corporation.

H. H. Helbush, a prominent San Francisco real estate operator, is the president of the new company. Geo. Albers is vice-president and William H. Gorgfeldt holds the offices of secretary and treasurer. Adolph Loessell has been retained as director-general.

Mr. Helbush made a special trip from the coast to close up negotiations and consult Andrew J. Cobe on subjects for his company's future productions. Several novels by notable American writers are under consideration, and as soon as a definite decision is made work will begin. Mr. Helbush is a keen business man and will be a valuable acquisition to the Alliance forces.

Will Be Distributed by the North American Film Corporation Beginning May 3.

The $20,000 prize photoplay, which the American Film Mfg. Co. is producing for the North American Film Corporation, will have its first release on May 3. The writer of the scenario from which the new serial is being made was successful in a field of more than 9,000 contenders. This lucky person will receive $10,000 for the winning scenario.

Another $10,000 prize will be awarded to the person who successfully evolves a solution, which will be presented later. This is the largest amount ever offered to motion picture fans for a test of skill. The winning of the $10,000 prize offered for a solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery," by Miss Ida Damon, an unknown St. Louis amateur, has demonstrated that the most inexperienced writers may try for the prize and have a chance of success.

The big serial will be produced in California, under the personal direction of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co. The North American Film Corporation, 222 South State street, Chicago, will have the booking arrangements, which J. R. Frenler will supervise.

The newspaper novelization, which will run in more than 300 daily newspapers throughout the country, will be written by one of the country's best known authors.

The "Flying A" brand has never been seen on a serial, although many have been offered Messrs. Hutchinson and Frendler. Letters from exhibitors have time and again been received urging the American to make a serial. It has always been the intention for the American to make a serial when the right scenario was obtained.

It required the $10,000 prize offer to bring forth such a scenario, and now that it is in hand no effort will be spared to make the new serial a standard for other producing companies to attain in years to come.

THE CLAM SHELL SUFFRAGETTES (SELIG).

In the Selig farce comedy, The Clam-Shell Suffragettes, to be released March 26, W. E. Wing has struck an entirely new vein of farce comedy. The cave-men and women of the stone age have after theater dinners and burlesque shows just as do the people of to-day. Lyllian Brown Leighton takes the role of Tootsie Strongarm.

New Horsley Printer Successful

Device With Many Advantages Now Devoted to MinA Films May Later be Placed Upon the Market.

DAVID HORSLEY'S latest invention, a duplex automatic step printer, was perfected on March 1st, three days before the inventor left for Los Angeles, and is now in practical use in the Centaur Film Company at Bayonne, N. J. Mr. Horsley's new device is a development of the Horsley printer which has long been in use. It shows many radical departures from the original machine, and has certain definite advantages over printers of foreign manufacture. It is a solid and substantial affair which does away with the long slide frame-up and eliminates many of the old style exterior adjustments making the operators' work exceedingly simple and the whole machine fool-proof.

The new device is to be known as the Horsley printer No. 4, being the fourth in the series of Mr. Horsley's printer inventions. It is duplex in construction with an automatic light shift and "trouble preventer," which work upon a principle entirely different from any now in use.

Owing to the simplicity of the mechanism, one operator is able to take care of the duplex or double printer with greater surety and ease than is possible with the old style "single." The printers are arranged on hexagonal stand with six positions. The negative is assembled in a complete reel and adjusted in such a manner that the slack from the first machine is taken up in the second machine and so on in rotation through as many machines, up to 12, as prints of that negative may be required. The same lamp centrally arranged supplies the light for all the machines, so that there can be no variation in the quality or strength of the light, each machine of course having its independent automatic shifts. The time saved by this wizard-like device and its ingenious arrangement is in itself a highly valuable gain, but the quality of the work, its rock steadiness, perfect registration and easy adaptability will win it a place of honor among the greatest patents of the motion picture industry.

Mutual Masterpieces.

A Series of Four and Five-Reel Mutual Features with Leading Players.

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces a series of features for release twice a week, beginning March 22. These will be known as Mutual Masterpictures and will be four and five reels in length. The first release will be an American distinctive creation, "The Quest," a story of love and romance, with the South Seas as the chief setting for its scenes. In this picture Margarita Fischer will be featured with Harry Pollard, Joseph E. Singleton, Nan Christy and Lucille Ward in important roles. A burning ship, blown up by dynamite, is one of the more thrilling scenes. "The Quest" is a picture of singular beauty and was selected because of its merit to lead off the series.

The second Masterpicture will be "The Lost House," by Richard Harding Davis, a four-reel Majestic product, featuring Lillian Gish, Wallace Reid, F. A. Turner, A. D. Sears and Elmer Clifton. The story is a vital, vivid action picture, different from "The Quest" in type but like it in its love theme.

The Mutual Masterpictures will be participated in by the American Film Manufacturing Company, the Majestic Motion Picture Corporation, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation and the Thanhouser Film Corporation. In these Masterpictures will appear a notable list of players, including Mae Marsh, Florence LaBadie, Francelia Billington, Marguerite Snow, Lillian Gish, Robert Edeson, Harry Pollard, Robert Harron, W. A. Hart, Sidney Bracy, Rhea Mitchell, Dorothy Gish, Lucille Ward, Thomas Jefferson, Margarita Fischer, James Cruze, Wallace Reid, John Emerson, Harry Woodruff, Joseph E. Singleton and many others well known to the screen.

The forthcoming releases include stories selected solely for their picture merit, and while great names are in the list of authors the "story" has been the thing in selection.

An extensive advertising and publicity campaign has been inaugurated in connection with Mutual Masterpictures in magazines, newspapers and the journals devoted to the film industry.

THE CLAM SHELL SUFFRAGETTES (Selig).

In the Selig farce comedy, The Clam-Shell Suffragettes, to be released March 26, W. E. Wing has struck an entirely new vein of farce comedy. The cave-men and women of the stone age have after theater dinners and burlesque shows just as do the people of to-day. Lyllian Brown Leighton takes the role of Tootsie Strongarm.

Clever Advertising

Crescent of Nashville Uses Attractive Display for Kalem Railroad Feature.

THE officials at the head of the Crescent Amusement Company, proprietors of a photoplay theatre down in Nashville, Tenn., are well aware of the advertising value which lies in novelty. This is proven by the accompanying illustration which shows the manner in which the theatre is decorated whenever an episode of Kalem's sensational "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series is on the program.

The most ardent advocate of "atmosphere," will admit that the Crescent Amusement Company has imbued its theater with much of the railroad spirit contained in the episodes of the Kalem railroad series. And it was done at a comparatively small cost. The railroad bridge and locomotive which extended across the front of the entrance are merely painted flats. This device possesses the advantage of being set up or dismantled in a jiffy. That it must add to the drawing power of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series can be readily seen.

All in all, the Crescent Amusement Company must be given credit for one of the most strikingly original attention-attracting devices ever evolved by any exhibitor. We venture to assert that the returns which have attended the use of this device have amply repaid the management of this theater for whatever outlay of time and money was required to bring it into being.

"The Red Signal," was the particular episode featured at the Crescent Amusement Company's theatre at the time the accompanying photograph was taken. In this story, a washout imperils the Midnight Flyer. Helen, the heroine of the series, saves the train after numerous exciting adventures. The management added to the value of its device by placing a figure representing Helen in front of the engine. A clever mechanical contrivance caused the "Dummy" to wave a red lantern. It is needless to state that considerable comment resulted.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRAVEL PICTURES FOR PARAMOUNT.

The Paramount Pictures Corporation is about to release its first instalment of travel pictures showing interesting phases of South American views and glimpses of South American life. The first film which will be offered to the exhibitors free of cost and which really serves as an introductory to the entire series contains some very interesting views of alligator and bird life in the tropics and a number of very clever cartoons done by Charles R. Macaulay who is considered one of the best cartoonists in the country. The cartoons show the skilful mingling of the humorous and the impressive for which Macauly's cartoons are famous. The film also shows the departure of the steamer Kroonland from New York, and her arrival in the port of Havana. Altogether, this film is a very attractive bit of work and will undoubtedly be greatly welcome to all Paramount exhibitors.

"The Last of the Mafia"

First Offering of Neutral Company a Five-Reel Melodrama, Produced by Sidney M. Goldin.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WITH a clear melodramatic story, speedy and well contrived suspense, the Neutral Company's five-reel picture, "The Last of the Mafia," is what may be termed a good offering. It will interest all, and the majority will be pleased. It is set among New York slums and the backgrounds are as good as the best; are perfect. The characters serve their purpose well. The situations are made sufficiently poignant and they are "old friends;" but let us mark it out, we are still friendly to them. If we know them, we like them; they don't bore us a bit and we still find it a pleasant experience to flatter them with real tears. One of the emotional spots is the respect paid to an Italian policeman, one of the story's characters, who falls while performing his duty.

It is not improbable that this picture will pay as well as many that a reviewer could legitimately give much more space to. It can safely be termed a "popular" offering. Among the players, all of whom do good work, are Jack Clark, little Catherine Lee (of "Neptune's Daughter" fame) and William Conrad. The mechanical work is serviceable.

"THE LONE STAR RUSH" (Alliance).

"The Lone Star Rush," a film version of Edmund Mitchell's widely read novel, is scheduled as the next offering on the Alliance program. The scenic background of the story is laid in the arid gold fields of the Australian desert and deals with the romantic adventures of a party of prospectors.

One of the striking features of this picture is the really remarkable perspective view showing the mad rush of the army of prospectors, down the parched mountain-side into the alkali plains, under whose dust run the veins of gold ore. They come afoot, on horseback and in antiquated vehicles of the country.

The production was filmed under the direction of Mr. Mitchell, the author of the novel, and the leading parts are played by Robert Frazer, late leading man for Henry W. Savage, and Charles Arling, formerly associated with Francis Wilson. Rupert Julian, who appeared as Marc Antony in William Faversham's production of "Julius Caeser," at the Lyric theater, New York, also appears in a leading role. May Gaston, until recently leading woman in the Eclair-American companies essays, the stellar female part.

EDITH WYNNE MATHISON MAKES HER DEBUT ON THE SCREEN.

By many critical authorities, Edith Wynne Mathison, Sir Henry Irving's leading woman during his farewell tours and considered to be among the foremost dramatic artists upon the English-speaking legitimate stage, will make her first appearance on the screen Sunday, March 14, at the Strand theater in New York City, assuming the title role in the great Lasky-Belasco photodramatization of Belasco's hit, "The Governor's Lady." It is gratifying to learn that Miss Mathison photographs admirably, and that her part, in its most supreme expression is therefore destined to be immortalized.

Donald Brian With Lasky

THE distinguished romantic star, Donald Brian, is to make his photodramatic debut under the Lasky management. Mr. Brian, who acquired world-wide fame as the Prince in "The Merry Widow," is now starring in "The Girl from Utah," but will positively pose for his first photodrama immediately after the end of his present season.

Donald Brian.

The contract between the Lasky Feature Play Company and Mr. Brian, like the other contracts recently made with renowned legitimate artists, gives the Lasky Company the right to Mr. Brian's services not only for the one photodrama which will constitute the initial release but for a period of years to come. Word has been sent to Mr. Cecil B. De Mille at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, California, and preparations have already begun for providing Mr. Brian with a vehicle of extraordinary importance, especially adapted to his genius. Donald Brian was born at St. Johns, Newfoundland, and made his dramatic debut at Boston in "Shannon of the Sixth." The list of productions in which he has assumed notable roles includes "The Man from Mexico," "Three Little Lambs," "The Supper Club," "The Belles of Broadway," "Florodora," "Little Johnny Jones," "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," and "Fifty Miles from Boston." One of his most noteworthy recent hits was the stellar role in "The Dollar Princess."

Elliott With World Film

PAUL B. ELLIOTT, the latest recruit to Lewis J. Selznick's New York Exchange forces, is to occupy the position of Special Representative on the road for the New York office, his territory, including New York State, Connecticut, etc. Mr. Elliott was formerly associated with the Indianapolis branch of the World Film.

Paul B. Elliott.

For a number of years Mr. Elliott gained experience in the show business, being identified with many well-known people. He managed theaters in Western New York and Ontario, and worked in stock and repertoire. Breaking into the motion picture game, he did some valuable work in handling state right and feature films, and became known to exhibitors in various parts of the United States.

Conceiving that he could best succeed in his aims by joining a big progressive and aggressive organization, making the highest class features, and marketing them in a business-like way, Mr. Elliott saw that World Film gave him the opportunity he desired. Mr. Elliott knows the motion picture business thoroughly and may be trusted to give a good account of himself amongst exhibitors.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE GOVERNOR'S LADY" (Lasky).

Edith Wynne Mathison, the distinguished international dramatic star, will make her screen debut in New York at the Strand Theater on Sunday afternoon, March 14, when the Lasky-Belasco photoproduction of "The Governor's Lady" will be shown for the first time.

"The Governor's Lady," which deals with the experiences of an ambitious man who suddenly rises from poverty to wealth, and his home-loving wife, is one of the most absolutely modern and American of all the successes ever produced by Mr. Belasco. This play, which was written by Alice Bradley, in the original dramatic form, has made a most excellent scenario, for the element of human interest is especially keen from beginning to end, and the direction of George Melford is worthy of comment.

Though this may be described as essentially a domestic drama, it nevertheless contains some truly wonderful outdoor scenes, especially the mob scene on election night and the scenes showing the explosion in the mine and the rescue of the entombed miners.

Miss Mathison proves herself to be on the screen a supreme artist, just as on the stage, a truly remarkable woman with a great dramatic genius. Miss May Allison, who also makes her debut in this production, shows distinct talent in the role of the ambitious girl who almost brings about a rupture between husband and wife.

"BRED IN THE BONE" (Majestic).

Dorothy Gish charmingly impersonates the part of Mercy, the beautiful foundling taken in by a well-to-do Quaker family, in "Bred in the Bone," a three-reel Mutual drama produced by Majestic. The story of this play was written by Frank Kinsella. The argument tends to show that the hereditary trait or atavism generally runs its course, with more or less severity, before early invironment and education can assert their influence in a corrective and salutary way. In this drama Mercy is the daughter of theatrical parents. When eighteen she runs away with a theatrical company, but in the end returns to her foster parents. Others in the cast are Mary Alden, Eleanor Washington, W. E. Lawrence, Al Fillson and William Hinckley.

FORTHCOMING SELIG RELEASES.

Selig Spectacular Specials to be released in the near future include: "The Carpet from Bagdad," "A Texas Steer," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and "The Rosary."

AMERICAN ORGANIZES NEW FEATURE COMPANY.

Under the personal supervision of S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Manufacturing Company, the organizing of a second Mutual company is rapidly nearing completion. Its activities will be directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Harold Lockwood, lately with the Famous Players, and Elsie Jane Wilson, who played the title role in "Everywoman," will be assigned to the leads. Irving Cummings, now with the Beauty company, will be transferred to this organization and cast in juvenile and character parts. Hal Clements, William Ephe and Lucy Payton will appear also. The first production will be a film adaptation of "The Lure of the Mask," by Harold McGrath.

KLEINE INCREASES SALES FORCE.

Steadily increasing business has caused the addition of a number of new men to the force of traveling Kleine representatives. All branch Kleine offices have been compelled to put on additional help to care for the large volume of bookings now being handled. The Chicago force has been recently augmented by the addition of W. H. Jenner, Edward Salter and W. I. Sturman, who are dividing the road work with Frank Rutledge and E. W. Biederstadt.

"THE GREAT SILENCE" (Essanay).

"The Great Silence" is a thrilling three-reel photoplay of a red-blooded character of the great silence, the Alaskan mining camps. This character is one of the rugged, broad-minded types bred in the great out of doors. Immensely rich from unusual luck in mining he goes to the city where he is the prey of sharpers. He falls in love with a girl, who is practically forced to marry him by her father, who is seeking to get control of the mine of which the Alaskan is President. The miner finally detects the capitalist trying to manipulate stocks and accuses him of it. Facing financial ruin and exposure, the capitalist is stricken with apoplexy from the shock. The Alaskan tells his wife of the plot, but she, mourning for her father, refuses to believe it. He returns to the great silence, where she finally follows him, after learning from her brother that what her husband told her was true. She finds peace and love in the open spaces which she never had known in the city. Francis X. Bushman takes the part of the Alaskan miner.

JOHN BARRYMORE IN "ARE YOU A MASON?"

The prominent star, John Barrymore, who attained phenomenal popularity throughout the world as an irresistible screen comedian, in the two Famous Players Films Co.'s comedy triumphs, "An American Citizen," and "The Man from Mexico," surpasses both his former screen successes in the five-part film adaptation of Leo Ditrichstein's excruciatingly funny farce, "Are You a Mason?" to be released March 22. This subject was selected as the vehicle for Mr. Barrymore's return to the screen because it represents, more than any other comedy of similar reputation, the type of dramatic humor best adapted to the inimitable talents of this star.

Scene from "Are You a Mason?" (Famous Players).

In "Are You a Mason?" Mr. Barrymore portrays the character of Frank Perry, a dashing young married man of exuberant spirits and vivid imagination. When his wife announces that her chief desire in life is to have him become a Mason, Perry grasps the opportunity it affords for staying out several nights, explaining his numerous absences from home by the logical statement that he is spending his evenings at the Masonic Lodge, undergoing the ordeals of initiation.

One night wifey delightedly announces that her father, Grand Master of the Masons, is coming to visit them. Perry's agonized efforts to keep his father-in-law from discovering his deception, and the fearful tangles in which he becomes involved thereby, culminating in a situation which is one of the funniest climaxes ever conceived, furnish the humor of the farce, which is further heightened by the fact that the "Grand Master" has also deceived his family, is not a Mason, and is constantly manufacturing other deceptions to safeguard his first falsehood.

How he is finally caught and cornered by his clever son-in-law, who emerges victoriously from the chaos he has created, ends the comedy in a roaringly laughable manner.

HEDLUND FILM COMPANY ORGANIZES.

There was formally organized in New London, Conn., on February 4, the Hedlund Film Company. At its head is Guy Hedlund, a well-known film player. Theodore Bodenwein, for two terms secretary of state of Connecticut, is vice president. Sidney H. Miner is treasurer and Philip Z. Hankey is secretary. The company is capitalized at $50,000. One of the stockholders is former Governor Thomas Waller. A studio is now in course of erection at Hadlyme, Conn., on property adjoining the residence of Mr. Hedlund. The company has executed a lease of several thousand acres of picturesque property in the vicinity and locally known as "The Devil's Hopyard." The land includes Chapman's falls, the fame of which is state wide, and much big rock formation. The company is also negotiating for several thousand acres in addition. An old-time ferryboat has been secured for river work.

Production will begin immediately. Among the players to be featured are "Eddie" O'Connor, whose splendid work as a comedian in Edison subjects is familiar to all picturegoers, and Walter Stanhope. Louis Geleng will be in charge of the camera work, and this in itself is a guarantee of the photography of the Hedlund product. President Hedlund will direct. He has had wide experience on the screen, and his work with several of the leading film manufacturers is well known.

"SAFETY FIRST" PICTURES.

The Motion Picture Special Corporation of New York has just completed several thousand feet of motion pictures for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company.

"The Price of Carelessness" is the title of the story portraying the daily life of a coal miner. All of the actors are coal miners or members of their families, which gives an added home interest throughout the entire picture. The acting throughout is surprisingly good.

The pictures were taken in and around Nanticoke, Pa., as well as about 2,000 feet under the town. Some twenty scenes were taken in the bowels of the earth, showing accidents and explosions due to carelessness and the violation of rules, and similar scenes in contrast showing how these accidents and explosions might have been avoided. These scenes, it is said, "contain more thrills to the foot than ever got clogged up in the aperture plate of any model moving picture machine."

The pictures will be used for educational purposes among the coal miners in the Pennsylvania coal regions.

"THE DOCTOR'S STRATEGY" (Beauty).

"The Doctor's Strategy," a one-reel Beauty release in the Mutual program, opens showing Mr. Jones preparing a will disinheriting his daughter, Lucy, if she marries Jack Bedford whom he has just kicked from the house. Dr. Clow suggests overcoming the old man's opposition by mental suggestion, and every one enters into a conspiracy to do this. Lucy spoils his breakfast by saying "How bad you look, Father." He is greeted similarly by his office force. They suggest a doctor, and he goes to Clow who tells him he has "alopecia." The old man takes to his bed, and is only convinced he is cured when Jack Bedford brings him a secret remedy. He then forgives Jack, and Jack and Lucy are married. Later Mr. Jones learns that "alopecia" is only dandruff, and he lays for the doctor with a gun. Virginia Kirtley, Fred Gamble, Irving Cummings and Joseph Harris are in the cast. The Release date was March 9.

RITA JOLIVET IN "THE UNAFRAID" WITH HOUSE PETERS.

Rita Jolivet, the beautiful young dramatic favorite of two continents, makes her film debut under the direction of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in the picturization of Eleanor M. Ingram's romance, "The Unafraid," with House Peters featured in the leading male role.

One of the interesting phases of this production is that it goes into new fields for "settings." Most of the important action of the photodrama transpires in the mountains and castles of Montenegro, that little Balkan country of warriors who have for centuries preserved their independence by almost continuous warfare. The leading character, interpreted by Miss Jolivet, is that of an American heiress, "Delight Warren."

Scene from "The Unafraid" (Lasky).

In addition to Miss Jolivet and Mr. Peters, the company includes Page Peters, Billy Elmer, Lawrence Peyton, Theodore Roberts, Al Ernest Garcia, Marjorie Daw, Raymond Hatton and Gertrude Kellar. Mr. Cecil B. De Mille directed the production.

"PATSY AMONG THE SMUGGLERS" (Lubin).

Becoming a member of the police force, Patsy is again a somebody and selected to assist a secret service man in capturing a band of smugglers. Dressed as a rube, he is made welcome at the lair and, being made comfortable, falls asleep. He has a wonderful dream, in which he is carried back to the sixteenth century. He and Jack as swash-bucklers rescue the virtuous maiden the band have captured. He and Jack, however, are caught and Jack is sentenced to walk the plank and Patsy to be hanged from the yard arm. With a yell he wakes up and is kicked out of the smugglers' den. He hastily gives information to the secret service men who capture the band; but in the battle he is shot through the leg. This sends him to the hospital without any glory of the enterprise. The setting of the act is extremely picturesque and the players eminently fitted to their roles. Of course, Clarence Jay Elmer, Percy Winter and Patsy De Forest are the features, with many others in support. There are only two or three more numbers of Clay Greene's excellent comedy, in which we hope to see Patsy Bolivar duly compensated for the many misfortunes fate and Sykesy have heaped upon him.

"THE GREAT BARRIER" A PIKE'S PEAK FEATURE.

The Pike's Peak Film company, which is responsible for the "Lariat" brand, recently came to notice among United releases. Lariat is a well chosen title for the series of pictures this new firm is manufacturing, inasmuch as these pictures deal with plays which have as their background the rugged mountains and the alkali-baked plains, the cacti and chaparral, the cloudless skies and the endless reaches that distinguish the abode of the miner and the cowboy. That Otis B. Thayer and George Gebhart, director and assistant director of the Pike's Peak company, have succeeded in reproducing the atmosphere of the west in their pictures is apparent when one views their latest output, "The Greater Barrier," which has just been released by the United Film Service. With Gebhart himself and Josephine West to maintain the dramatic interest in the story, a gripping drama, fairly pulsing with the virility of the west, is the result. "The Greater Barrier" is said to be the kind of a film which brings in the "repeaters" in hordes.

VITAGRAPH TO PRODUCE "THE SCARLET RUNNER."

The Vitagraph Company has purchased "The Scarlet Runner," or "The Twelve Adventures of Christopher Race," from C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the well-known authors of "The Lightning Conductor" and other popular books. "The Scarlet Runner" will be released in weekly installments in the regular service of the General Film Company in serial form. Each installment or adventure will comprise three parts or reels. Those who are familiar with the writings of the Williamsons can readily form conclusions as to the virility and intensity with which "The Scarlet Runner" will be studied, and the interest and enthusiasm they will create. Each adventure appears with more thrilling fervor and stronger dramatic action than its predecessor, working up to a tremendous and most satisfactory climax.

MOONSHINERS.

This one-reel MinA comedy, featuring Harry La Pearl, gives that notable funmaker many chances to show off his brilliant talent. The action is fast and one laugh follows another throughout the entire production.

Harry comes home rather late one night after having tried to get on the outside of all liquid refreshments in town. His servant meets him at the door and following many unsuccessful attempts finally gets his master to bed. Harry immediately goes into the land of dreams, where he encounters divers Moonshiners who all plot against his welfare. Harry has many hair-raising experiences with these lawless mountaineers, but owing to his deftness in handling his guns and his superhuman strength, by means of which he pulls up great trees by their roots, he finally gets the better of them and wins the woman of his choice.

As usual, Mr. La Pearl's interpretation of his part is excellent, and this clean comedy, while quite different from the slapstick brand the fans have been used to, is still very broad and farcical and stands out as one of the finest MinA films so far released.

METRO SECURES BIG FEATURES.

The New York Metro Film Service, Incorporated, distributing the service of the Metro Pictures Corporation, control the state rights throughout the Empire State of the big Selig features "The Spoilers" and "Les Miserables." The latter well remembered as having enjoyed a most prosperous engagement at Carnegie Lyceum. The former was selected as the opening attraction at the Strand Theater. In addition, this exchange has procured the rights in New York City and State of the Keystone Feature, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," all of which are now being booked in the territory controlled by them. "The Spoilers" is still one of the most potent box office attractions this office has handled and continues in great demand, as does "Tillie's Romance."

UNITED FILM SERVICE SCHEDULE.

The United Film service has made arrangements to release regularly certain brands on certain days of the week. The schedule, which will be adhered to will be as follows: Mondays, Ideal films; Tuesdays, Luna or Superba; Wednesdays, Premier; Thursdays, Grandin and Starlight; Fridays, Empress or Lariat; Saturdays, Lariat or Regent; Sundays, Jupiter. This arrangement will vary for a few weeks to come until sifted down to a settled order.

"RETRIBUTION." (Selig)

"Retribution" is the title of a Selig drama in two reels, to be released Monday, March 22. Edward J. Le Saint directed the production from the scenario written by James Oliver Curwood. Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver and others are featured.

"Retribution" is a story of political life in which Senator Cullom faces political and financial ruin, and finds himself in the power of the Governor. The Governor demands Mary, the Senator's daughter as the price of his assistance. Mary loves Jim Howland, a newspaper reporter, but agrees to marry the Governor to save her father. How, just as the wedding is being performed, Waldo, a hunchback, saves Mary from a living death and repays her for past kindness done him is convincingly shown. The story is replete with tense situations and exciting action.

"THE PAGEANT OF SAN FRANCISCO" AN ALLIANCE SPECIAL.

"The Pageant of San Francisco" has been secured by Andrew J. Cobe, President of the Alliance Films Corporation, and was released March 15 through the newly organized Alliance special department.

This picture, which is in five parts, opens with the discovery of the Golden Gate by Spanish adventurers, over 200 years ago. All of the events that have made San Francisco one of the greatest of American cities and aided materially in the development of the Pacific slope are shown in this film.

The first settlement, the lawless days under Mexican rule, the arrival of the hustling Yankee, the rising of Old Glory, the discovery of gold, and the rush of '49 follow in historical sequence. The terrible earthquake, the heroic rise from the smouldering ashes into a new city follows, and the picture is brought to a fitting climax with the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. Cobe, in commenting upon the picture, said, "I expect great things of this film. Its romantic appeal and timeliness ought to make it a big winner."

"THE ONLY WAY OUT" (Lubin).

An excellent and gripping story from the pen of Shannon Fife which tells of the experiences of a pretty stenographer in the toils of an unscrupulous roue. For a while the girl escapes him and marries her well-to-do employer and is blessed with a baby girl, is happy, but again the roue follows her and the girl in a struggle kills him. She confesses to the killing, but her husband denies it and takes the act upon himself. It is the only way out. At the trial the husband is acquitted and once more happiness comes to the worthy couple. The tale is well told by John E. Ince, Rosetta Brice and a very excellent company. The scenic setting is beautiful.

"BETWEEN THE TWO OF THEM."

The Vitagraph Company announces a three-part Broadway Star Feature, "Between the Two of Them," as one of the important April releases. Sidney Drew has just completed the production of the picture, which is described as a domestic drama, and, in the portrayal of the leading character, demonstrates his ability to enact roles of a serious nature. Mr. Drew's work in "Between the Two of Them" will be a revelation to those who have seen him only as a comedian, the story being full of dramatic episodes that require emotional and dramatic work of a high order. Mrs. Sidney Drew and Courtland Van Dusen, who have also become identified with comedy roles, will be seen in support of Mr. Drew, while other important members of the cast will include Mary Maurice and Paul Scardon.

"IN THE SWITCH TOWER" (Broncho).

"In the Switch Tower," released March 24, is a two-reel Mutual drama wearing the Broncho brand. It was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince, and produced by Walter Edwards with a cast including Frank Borzage, Lewis Morrison, Gertrude Claire and Lewis Dunham. Edwards plays the part of Bill Wharton, the crack engineer, who loses everything through his slavery to drink. The story is one of those dramatic and realistic railroad stories for which the Broncho brand is famous.

"THE CRIMSON CLUE." (Kleine)

"The Crimson Clue," Kleine's latest three-reel subject, scheduled for immediate release, is an unusually interesting virile drama of the Paris underworld. Doctor John Gray and his cousin George, an inventor, are both friends of Jim Bullard, a young chemist. A bad case of fever, the victim of which is an underworld character, is brought to the attention of Doctor Gray, who effects a remarkable cure. In this way he earns the undying gratitude of "Jimmie the Chink." George asks his uncle, a miser, for money to back an invention which the uncle refuses. About this time Doctor Gray finds himself in financial difficulties and hires "Jimmie the Chink" to do away with the old man, knowing that he will share, with George, the miser's fortune. George is thrown into prison for the deed and a detective is hired to solve the mystery. Blood stains on a broken window pane enables the detective to solve the mystery, but only after many adventures in the underworld and a long cross-country chase which ends in the death of "Jimmie the Chink." When the detective returns to confront Dr. Gray with the crime, he finds the doctor a suicide.

"TRICKED" (Domino).

"Tricked" is a two-reel Domino drama released March 25, designed for the Mutual program and interpreted by a cast headed by Edward Brennan, and including Jerome Storm, Elizabeth Burbridge, Virginia Philley and Gertrude Claire. The production was directed by Thomas Chatterton and the scenario written by William H. Clifford and Thomas H. Ince. The story deals with a rich and hard hearted brother's attitude toward his mother, who is taken care of by a younger son who is poor, and wants to marry. How the younger son's sweetheart saved him when he raised his brother's check from five to five hundred dollars makes a dramatic climax.

Notes of the Trade

"THE CHRISTIAN" is being booked in Ohio and Virginia by the American Booking Company, Roanoke, Virginia. They have an option on additional southern territory which may be closed in the near future.

In "The Magnet of Destruction," a Thanhouser drama designed for the Mutual program, a situation new to the pictures is skilfully developed. In the scene at the foundry the great magnet lifts the tons of rails into the air, and the audience sits spellbound, knowing Lyell's intention to drop that crushing weight on the head of an innocent young man and his father. Suddenly Mignon Anderson leaps into sight, pulls a lever and saves her menaced lover.

Tennessee Censorship

Drastic Bill Now Before State Legislature—Has Passed One Reading in Both Houses and Is in Senatorial and House Judiciary Committees—Governor Rye Said to Be in Favor of the Measure—Digest of Bill's Important Clauses.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture men of Tennessee are very much opposed to the censorship bill which has been introduced at the present session of the Legislature and is now pending. The exhibitors claim that the bill is very drastic in its measures and that, if passed, it would work a great hardship on the industry. Section 5 of the act is the one which is said to be the most drastic. The idea of creating a board to censor pictures and then make the exhibitor pay to have the films censored is not likely to meet with strong approval anywhere. The fees charged would be especially hard on exchanges handling large quantities of cheap reels which rent at prices ranging from fifty cents up.

The bill provides for the appointment by the governor of two persons, one male, who shall be known as chief censor, and one female, who shall be known as assistant censor, residents and citizens of Tennessee, to be known as the state board of censors, who shall be duly qualified by education and experience; who shall examine all moving picture films, to approve such as shall be moral and to withhold approval from such as shall tend to debase or corrupt the morals.

It also provides that the board shall keep a record of all pictures approved and not approved, with the reasons for withholding approval. It shall report annually, in writing, to the governor, and shall file a duplicate report with the secretary of state.

The chief censor shall receive an annual salary of $1,500, and the assistant censor shall receive an annual salary of $1,200, and be reimbursed for all expenses actually and necessarily incurred in the performance of the duties.

For each examination made the board shall receive, for the use of the state, a fee of $2.50 for each reel. No picture or view shall be examined until such fee shall be paid.

Any person, firm or corporation exhibiting or permitting to be exhibited any unapproved moving picture film, or reel, or stereopticon view, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than $50 for the first offense, and not less than $100 for each subsequent offense. Each unapproved moving picture film, or reel, or stereopticon view exhibited, and each day that the same shall be exhibited, shall constitute a separate offense.

This bill has passed one reading in both houses and is now in the hands of the senate and house judiciary committees. The measure is said to have the support of Governor Rye. According to section 5 the state would obtain its fee for examining reels whether the board passed them or not.

DRINKING CUP AND TOWEL.

Head of Memphis Board of Health Says Common Towel and Cup Must Go.

"The common drinking cup and common towel must go, and there must be plenty of free, pure air in all motion picture show houses," declared Dr. John C. Bell, superintendent of the city health department of Memphis, Tenn., who has renewed his campaign to secure these results. Dr. Bell says he regards the common towel as even more dangerous than the drinking cup. He was astonished recently upon finding a roller towel in a Memphis show house. This towel was used by guests and employes. Investigation showed that many were still used in picture houses, hotels and other public places, where a considerable number of people had access to them. "The most virulent diseases can be communicated by the common towel," said Dr. Bell. "It is only necessary for an infected person to have a running sore and for the one that uses the towel after him to have an abrasion of the skin to secure transmission of the disease." Orders have recently been issued to several places where common drinking cups were in use for the management to provide fountains or furnish individual drinking cups. Regarding the fresh air proposition, Dr. Bell said that while many provided all that could be asked in this connection, he visited a number of houses which are dangerous to patronize until better ventilation is provided. One house in particular, he declared, was so poorly ventilated that he and a fellow physician were compelled to beat a retreat.

MANY NASHVILLE OPERATORS GET LICENSES.

Only Three or Four Applicants Turned Down—Shows High Standard of Intelligence.

Licenses have been issued to fifty-five motion picture machine operators at Nashville, Tenn., by the board of examiners, consisting of the city building inspector, the chief of the fire department and the city electrical inspector, according to a recent statement of City Building Inspector James Yeaman. Among operators to whom licenses have been issued are a number from nearby towns. Inspector Yeaman stated that in the event an applicant failed to answer in writing the questions propounded by the board he was examined orally, and in a number of cases it had been found that applicants who failed to pass the written examination, owing to their unfamiliarity with technical terms, had sufficient practical experience to answer oral questions satisfactorily and become good, practical operators. Only three or four men were turned down and they have been ordered to read up and will be given another chance to secure licenses. Machine rooms in some of the theaters did not comply with legal requirements, but the managers have agreed to make the necessary changes according to Mr. Yeaman.

SHORTER TENNESSE NOTES.

The Bohemian Amusement company, of Cleveland, Tenn., recently filed articles of incorporation and asked for a charter to operate a moving picture house. The company is incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are W. C. Nevin, T. D. Sleed, G. A. Martin, M. L. Johnson, W. H. Stevens and others. Arrangements will be made whereby the company will start work on a new show house during the next few weeks

ATLANTA LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World by A. M. Bratty, Atlanta Correspondent.

ATLANTA is the distributing station for all film companies for the Southern states. There is no film company which is not represented in this city. The very best of first releases are shown in Atlanta's theaters.

The Fox Film Corporation has opened headquarters for the South at 618 Rhodes Building. The agency is under the management of Mr. O. P. Hall, who is known not only in Atlanta, but over the South, for his fine business qualifications as well as his popularity among exhibitors.

The Mutual Master Picture corporation, recently organized in New York, has opened branch offices at 40½ Luckie street, Atlanta, and will book through this branch from two to four reels each week, including productions of the American, Majestic, New York, Reliance and Thanhouser companies.

The Elite, on Peachtree street, the oldest moving picture theater in Atlanta, is undergoing complete overhauling and when finished will be one of the coziest theaters in the city. It will be known as Alamo No. 1 and be under the management of Mr. W. T. Murray.

It is reported the Atlanta board of censorship ordered a private reviewal of Bosworth's filmic masterpiece, "The Hypocrites," one night last week, but gave it their stamp of approval.

The Hesser School of Motion Picture Acting has grown to such an extent that it has become necessary to secure larger quarters than they have been occupying in the Forsythe Building. New quarters have been engaged in the Allfriend Building, 98½ Peachtree street. During the past week over a thousand feet of film have been made under the direction of Mr. Hesser, with Carl Roundtree as the cameraman. The title is "Husband or Lover?" Miss Elaine Ivey is featured in the picture, with Mr. Hesser playing the leading man's part. This company announces that within three weeks the first film will be ready for local showing. Others will follow.

Manager DeBruler, of the Montgomery, is enjoying an unusual run of business with special features. "A Gentleman of Leisure," "Stop Thief," "Rule G" are being shown at this popular theater during this week.

The Lyric theater, on Carnegie Way, after passing through legitimate burlesque and vaudeville, has given way to the "movie." It opened Monday, March 1 with Bosworth's masterpiece, "The Hypocrites." All seats are reserved, matinee and evening, at 25 cents.

William Oldknow, vice-president and general manager of Consolidated Film and Supply company, Atlanta, exclusive distributors of Universal films throughout the Southern states, left Tuesday for New York, where he will join a special party for California to be present at the opening of Universal City.

SOUTHWEST NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

DAMAGE of $5,000 covered by insurance was caused by fire at the Queen theater at Texarkana, Ark. Julius Hatcher, operator, was burned about the hands and face. A film being rewound caught fire.

The Texas Free Amusement company of Houston, Tex., has been incorporated with capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are A. E. Algelson, Edward Irvin and H. A. Wambold.

Lee Stroud, of Weatherford, Okla., opened his new picture show at Hydro, Okla., with a Saturday matine for which local merchants gave free tickets.

An outdoor theater, using pictures, vaudeville and athletic events, will be opened next summer at McGehee, Ark., by J. F. Avery, B. F. Miller and J. E. Hopson.

The Majestic at Little Rock, Ark., had Governor Hays and other state and city officials as guests at a special showing of the Arkansas films which go to the San Francisco fair.

Lina Cavalieri in "Manon Lascaut" was used by the Royal at Hot Springs, Ark., for a benefit show for the Moose. This house also had good business with some local films.

Manager William Meyer of the Queen at Brenham, Tex., has taken on the General Film service and plans a special comedy day each week.

The moving picture show at Devol, Okla., has been reopened.

IN CALIFORNIA.

A new theater is to be built at Modesto for W. B. Martin. Special care is being taken to have perfect projection and some novel features will be incorporated in its construction. The 725 seats will also be arranged to give a perfect view of the screen to each patron. It will be a much better house than the Star, at present owned by Mr. Martin, who has been in business in Modesto for two years. "I am very much interested," he says, "in pictures and can see a great future in the business." He is looking for the time of "strictly quality releases."

The Grand View theater at Daly City, Cal., is now being conducted by Mrs. Delia Mohr.

Gustave Bachstein will take charge of the Swastika theater at Sausalito, Cal., about April 1st, when Mr. Elliott, the present lessee, takes possession of a house now in course of erection.

H. M. Reece has disposed of the New theater at Colton, Cal., to Stanley Dyer.

A contract has been let by Joe Lewis for the erection of a brick moving picture house at Oak Park, Cal., to have a seating capacity of 650.

The Glazer-Webster Co. has been incorporated at Sacramento, Cal., with a capital stock of $10,000 by Dave and Sam Glazer of San Francisco, and W. S. Webster of Sacramento. The company has opened the Diepenbrock theater as a moving picture house.

The Comique Film Company has been incorporated at Santa Monica, Cal., by Julius Fried, John E. Brennan and Dorothy Fried. The capital stock is placed at $10,000.

Certified copies of the articles of incorporation of Features Ideal, Inc., of New York have been filled at Los Angeles, Cal.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, which maintains a large branch at San Francisco, recently installed a fine orchestrion in the Regent theater at Alameda, Cal., and another in the Page theater, Medford, Ore.

Al. Levin is now managing the Haight Street theater, recently purchased by his brother, Sam Levin.

Walter Evans, of the Mission theater, Dinuba, Cal., was a recent visitor here and while in town purchased a Powers No. 6A Cameragraph through the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

G. A. Ackerman, representing the Kansas City Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., was a recent visitor in San Francisco and is planning to remain here. Mr. Ackerman was formerly in business at Salina, Kan., and was vice-president of the Exhibitors' Association of that state.

The Berkeley theater, Shattuck avenue and Haste street, Berkeley, Cal., recently featured George Kleine's masterpiece, "Julius Caesar," with great success, despite the fact that rain fell throughout the entire engagement. This city is the home of the State University and the audiences were made up largely of university folks, tickets having been purchased in blocks of from fifty to three hundred by students. Prof. Fordyce P. Cleaves, A. M., who lectured during the performances, was the guest of Prof. William Dallam Armes, of the State University, during his stay in the College City. The Berkeley theater is now owned by C. W. Reavis and is under the management of M. N. Zar.

The Colonial theater, Oakland, Cal., is now known as the Alcatraz theater.

W. McCoy has opened a moving picture house at Dutch Flat, Cal.

A moving picture theater has been opened at Cottonwood, Shasta County, by Jesse Saunders.

Lopez & Daras plan to open a moving picture theater at Amador City at an early date.

C. L. Marford has opened a moving picture house at Roseville, Cal., and is giving performances four nights a week.

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., with a capital stock of $25,000 by John Rounan, Elizabeth Rounan and Joseph S. Edwards.

Exposition a Help

San Francisco Picture Men Find That Visitors at Big Exposition Are Flocking into the Theaters—Full Houses Have Been Rule During First Week—Scenic and Industrial Films at Jewel City Do Not Compete with Regular Offerings.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE opening of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco has not interfered in the least with the attendance at moving picture theaters, as was feared by some exhibitors. It was anticipated that for a few days the attendance at theaters would be light, but the very reverse has proved to be the case, crowded houses being the rule during the past week, despite weather conditions. The attendance at the exposition has surpassed expectations, a quarter of a million persons having passed through the gates on the opening day, with an average of over 80,000 daily for the first week. Many free moving picture shows are running in the various buildings, but the views shown are mostly scenic and industrial subjects and, therefore, do not compete with the programs of the regular moving picture theaters throughout the city. Thousands of visitors are arriving daily in the Jewel City and exhibitors are now confident that they will enjoy the greatest run of business in the history of the industry.

MAY PROHIBIT BILLBOARDS.

The Woman's Council of Sacramento, Cal., has commenced a campaign of beautification and will appeal to the city commissioners to pass an ordinance prohibiting the erection of billboards within the city. Failing in this an initiative petition will be circulated with a view of presenting the ordinance to the voters at the May election.

MUNICIPAL SHOWS AT BIGGS.

Theater as Community Enterprise—Has Paid for Its Equipment and Made Surplus.

For over two years the chamber of commerce and the municipal authorities of Biggs, Cal., have been conducting a moving picture show in that city and the report of the committee in charge indicates that the venture has been a success from the beginning. A careful selection of pictures has been made and all children under fifteen years of age are admitted free. Two shows are given each week, on Tuesday and Saturday nights, the admission price for adults being 15 cents. In two years' time the committee has been able to pay for the entire plant and accumulate a surplus, although the town is a small one. The committee in charge is composed of J. M. Brough, G. L. Harvey and S. H. Goodenough.

As between municipal ventures of this kind and regular shows, the chance of success is higher with the individual exhibition, but only where he is the right man. The community show can hardly have the drawing power of a popular showman.

MOTIOGRAPHS FOR JAPAN.

K. Y. Toda, of Honolulu, T. H., was a recent visitor in San Francisco and while here purchased a Motiograph projection machine from Edw. H. Kemp for shipment to Japan. This exhibitor has four machines of this make in use at Honolulu and has taken an option on the Japanese agency.

INSPECT PHANTOSCOPE.

A demonstration of the possibilities of the Phantoscope for educational work was made recently in East Hall on the grounds of the University of California, before a large gathering of professors. It was agreed that for certain lines of work the machine was very valuable and several will be used at the state institution.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATION AFFECTS THEATERS.

The board of health of San Francisco has issued an order that no children under the age of fourteen years shall be permitted to attend moving picture shows or other entertainments in the North Beach district until the epidemic of diphtheria now prevalent there is checked. A tong war is on in the Chinese quarter, keeping visitors away from this section, and this, in conjunction with Lent, is proving to be a combination not relished by exhibitors.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The opening of the Cosy theater, on Fillmore street, near Golden Gate avenue, has been delayed, as the proper licenses had not been secured for the date originally set.

The Alcazar is to have a season of moving pictures, "The Clansman" being booked for an early presentation there.

Harry Leonhardt, general Western representative of the William Fox Film corporation, as the Box Office Attraction company is now known, is in San Francisco to make an extended stay at the local branch.

Fred Frisk, formerly owner of the Florence, Oakland, Cal., but who has been in the Northwest for several months, has returned to San Francisco and plans to open a moving picture house here.

H. C. Stevens, of the Globe Amusement company, of Portland, Ore., and at one time manager of the General Film company's interests there, is making a visit to San Francisco to arrange for service.

J. Ray Williams, of Sacramento, Cal., was here this week and announces that he has disposed of Ray's Photoplay to F. A. Richey and plans to engage in other lines of work. Mr. Richey was also here arranging for service.

W. J. Morgan, of the Union Film & Supply company, was here recently and has since left to establish branch exchanges at Seattle and Portland. This concern is also planning to open a film exchange at Honolulu.

W. V. Crone, formerly special representative in this territory for the "Runaway June" serial, is now with the Sierra Motion Picture Manufacturing company, 948 Market street. This concern has just booked the "Exposition Special" over the entire Orpheum circuit.

Three Powers Cameragraphs No. 6-A have been sold by the Golden Gate Film exchange to the Kahn and Greenfield circuit for installation at the New Fillmore. The operating room in this new house is to be a model of its kind.

The Movca Film Service, Inc., has given up its offices at 928 Market street.

The Vita-Slide company has increased the capacity of its slide-making plant by fifty per cent. and is still behind on orders.

The Avenue, located at 2721 San Pablo avenue, Oakland, Cal., is now being conducted by J. W. Jespersen and A. C. Dippo, the other partner, M. Murphy, having retired from the firm.

George Ellery of the Colonial theater, Willits, is visting Eureka and is considering the proposition of erecting a moving picture house there. A. G. Hall is in charge of the Willits house during his absence.

The Pastime theater at Hopland, Cal., has been leased to the owners of the Novelty theater at Cloverdale and will be conducted for one night each week.

Kansas Legislation

Kansas Law Makers Living Up To Reputation But Latest Tax and Censorship Measure in that State Killed—Asked $300 a Year as License Fee for Each Theater—President W. B. Moore of Kansas League Lines Exhibitors and Public Up to Fight.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

WHEN the Kansas Legislature starts to do anything it goes the limit. The most drastic law regulating moving picture exhibitions that could be conceived was proposed in Kansas at this session of the Legislature. But the Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was right on the job. The bill was killed in committee, and did not reach a vote.

This bill provided for a tax and for eliminating alleged detrimental films. The tax provided was $300 a year on every motion picture establishment. This would have put out of business about ninety per cent. of the houses in Kansas. Many shows in small towns do not net much more than that in a year, those in small towns showing two nights a week especially. Numerous others have incomes of around a thousand dollars, net, and a tax of $300 a year on them would have reduced the income below the point where men would care to devote their time and energies to the business. The tax would have been unjustly onerous on practically all the houses.

The "regulation" feature was even worse. It provided that any film which contained even the slightest display of an unlawful act could be condemned in toto—the whole film must be eliminated. If in the course of the picture one man struck at another, such an act could be construed as assault, which is an offense under the law, and the whole film could be condemned.

As soon as the bill was introduced Mr. W. B. Moore, Galena, Kan., president of the Kansas Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, got busy. He wired many exhibitors, and sent special delivery letters to every exhibitor in the state, urging them to get in touch with their representatives in the Legislature and explain the onerous effects that such a bill would have. He outlined the plan of campaign, which they were quick to follow. Ministers, business men, citizens and voters were appealed to to assist in the defeat of the bill. And the public backed up the exhibitors heartily. Fred Savage, national vice-president, managed one end of the campaign for his hometown of Hutchinson, Kan. E. E. Frazier, first vice-president of the state association, worked around Pittsburg, Kan. Howard Dull, Augusta, Kan., second vice-president of the state body, was active night and day bringing his friends to the standard. The secretary, P. G. Concannon, Emporia, Kan., had his busiest month, and W. W. Willy, treasurer, Mulberry Kan., was a valuable officer in the war

All this activity and the representations to the legislators that the people saw evil in the bill had its effect. It became evident that the harm that might be done to the popular amusement, the one amusement in many communities, was tremendous; that it had not been fully realized when the measure was offered. The bill was killed in committee.

So pronounced was the demonstration of public favor for moving pictures that it is believed unfavorable legislation at least in the present session is unlikely.

PETITION FOR SUNDAY SHOWS IN HUTCHINSON.

There is being circulated in Hutchinson, Kan., a petition to allow the moving picture shows to operate on Sunday. The city recently had a special election, at which the amusement park was granted the privilege of keeping open on Sunday and showing pictures on Sunday also. The fact that the majority of citizens were willing to have the amusement park open on Sunday leads to the conclusion that the people would be glad to see the moving picture shows open Sunday also. So far the petition has met with strong support in the business as well as the residence section of the city. The exhibitors feel confident that if the subject is brought to a vote the ballots will be overwhelmingly in their favor. The state law puts it up to the citizens of a community as to whether amusement enterprises shall be allowed to operate on Sunday.

THEATER CONSOLIDATION IN HUTCHINSON.

Apparently the moving picture business of Hutchinson is under process of consolidation with a vengeance. Mr. Fred Savage, formerly owner of the De Luxe and Iris theaters, recently purchased the Elite theater. This adds up to three theaters. There are but five in the city.

TEN-CENT SHOWS IN WICHITA.

For many years Wichita, Kan., had the reputation among moving picture men of being a "cheap burg." Any suggestion that more than five cents was possibly obtainable as an admission charge was hooted at. Now it is quite different. Several exhibitors believe that the town can be raised to the ten-cent standard, and have the courage of their convictions. The Marple theater is running a Pathe feature every Friday afternoon and evening, charging ten cents. The Colonial theater is running a Box Office Attraction feature two days in each week at ten cents. The Holland theater is running Paramount program four days a week at ten and twenty cents. All have met with good success, and it looks now as though the improvement will continue.

NEIGHBORLY PICTURE MAN.

Mr. H. E. Herbert, Newton, Kan., has for several months been looking forward to opening his show in his new building about the first of March. But because Mr. Herbert has a great deal of "the milk of human kindness," and other kinds of unselfishness and fellow-feeling in his nature, he will not get into it until April 1. The explanation is well known to his friends in Newton, Kan., and is the kind of story that is a pleasure to circulate. Mr. Herbert's theater building was being erected by a contractor who was also working at the same time on a new store building for a hardware merchant. The hardware man's store was burned and he was left without a suitable place in which to do business. Mr. Herbert immediately instructed the contractor to expend all his time and energies on the merchant's store and let his go temporarily.

SHORTER KANSAS ITEMS.

Messrs. Hill & Miller, of Harper, Kan., are erecting a new theater which they will call the Gem. It will be admirably equipped and one of the best theaters in that part of the state.

Mr. J. A. Schnack, of Larned, Kan., is again on the job managing his theater after being laid up five weeks with the smallpox.

Belpre, Kan., is a town of 425 population, according to the latest census. However, one visiting the opera house managed by Mr. G. F. Clark any of the six nights a week that pictures are shown, would be confident that the town's population was at least a thousand or so.

The opera house at Spearville, Kan., is now running six nights a week, something that it has never done in the past. It is managed by Mr. H. F. Forbes, formerly a traveling feature man of Louisiana.

The Phoenix theater at Pratt, Kan., held a special matinee recently upon the presentation of the initial episode of "The Master Key."

Mr. John Beck, manager of the picture theater at Nickerson, Kan., has a unique way of advertising "The Master Key." Mr. Beck has a large cut-out of the master key hung in the middle of the main street of Nickerson.

GAS ENGINE PLANT FOR MISSOURI SMALL EXHIBITOR

Sibley Picture Man Finds That It Pays to Make His Own Electricity—What Can Be Done.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

WALTER HAINES, proprietor of a moving picture show at Sibley, Mo., has recently installed a "gas" engine burning a low-grade distillate, which can be run at full capacity for 10 hours at a cost of 20 cents, to operate a generator for the making of juice for his machine. The installation was due to the desire of Mr. Haines to provide his patrons with the music of a Fotoplayer, which is electrically operated. The picture show hall is now as up-to-date as any in the big cities—and Mr. Haines has the equipment for providing lights for other enterprises in which he is interested. There is also some negotiations for his supplying juice for neighbors and other business men in the small town.

The proprietors of the local picture shows in Missouri and Kansas villages usually keep quite as close up-to-date as anybody else—and in respect to electricity they keep a little ahead of the rest. If the municipality has no electric light plant, it is up to them to put one in. And they can usually arrange to make the sale of juice pay part of their own expenses of production. If the proprietor wants electricity he can see the advantage of a generating plant for many other purposes besides his immediate needs in the moving picture business. It is not drawing too long a bow to promise big possibilities along this line. A small generating plant may grow naturally to a big one that will light a whole town. A village with electric lights is apt to grow faster than one without. So the house and its patronage will in turn increase and the moving picture man may become the big factor of a thriving city.

MISSOURI NEWS ITEMS.

The Star theater at Columbia, Mo., recently had to sell standing room for the "Perils of Pauline."

"The Rose of the Rancho," the big Laskey release, is going to feature the program at the Majestic theater at Chillicothe, Mo., this week.

"Sealed Ordears" will be shown at the Calvin theater at Washington, Mo., this week.

The Star theater at Hannibal, Mo., has one of the best programs each week of any small town theater in Missouri. Last week the program contained the following pictures: The Jesse L. Laskey production, "After Five;" the Shubert feature, Lew Fields in "Old Dutch;" the Bosworth feature, "Buckshot John;" Mabel Taliaferro in "The Three of Us," and the World Film, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Howard E. Jameyson, traveling representative of the Pathe company, with headquarters at Wichita, Kan., was in the city last week. Mr. Jameyson reports that the conditions throughout his territory are very good.

The Broadway theater at 1027 Broadway recently installed a Wurlitzer theater orchestra.

L. A. Sheridan, who travels Kansas and Oklahoma territory for the Pathe company, was in the city last week.

N. H. Spitzer, manager of the Fox Film corporation, is going to Chicago this week to confer with moving picture men there. The nature of the conference was not disclosed by Mr. Spitzer.

Last week it was stated that M. H. Good had been sent to take charge of the Mutual office at Omaha, Neb. This statement was in error, as Mr. Good was sent to take charge of the Fox Film corporation's office at 301 Hansen Building, Omaha, Neb.

William Fox, of the Fox Film company of Kansas City, instituted suit in the circuit court last week against E. Winstanley, sheriff, for $1,000 and the return of the seven films replevined, and now said to be in Winstanley's possession. The films, it is set forth, were seized under attachment proceedings by Mrs. Ray Isaacs of New York. N. H. Spitzer, manager of the office here, says that he knows nothing about Mrs. Isaacs and that the films were never out of his possession more than one-half hour.

The Fox Film compnay has enlarged its inspection department because of the increase in business. Miss Myrtle Koontz, formerly in charge of the inspection department of the Mutual company's branch here, has been secured to take charge of the department.

WISCONSIN PICTURE MAN SUES FOR DAMAGES

Booked Williamson Submarine Pictures, But Failed to Get Them.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

PROCEEDINGS to recover $5,000 damages because of failure to secure the Williamson submarine films were started in the circuit court at Milwaukee by Sherman Brown, manager of the Davidson theater in that city. He named as defendants the Saxe Amusement company, Thomas Saxe, William Mick, manager of the Orpheum theater; Jacob Stearns, New York, owner of the Wisconsin rights to the films; E. J. Jacobs, representative for Wisconsin, and Manager W. C. Brimmer, of the Milwaukee office of the Universal Film company.

Brown alleged he booked the submarine pictures for the Davidson for the week of April 25 through Manager Brimmer of the Milwaukee office of the Universal. Stearns secured the Wisconsin rights for the pictures and the Orpheum, Saxe's Milwaukee house, secured a booking for the week of February 28. This, Brown contends, is a violation of his contract with the Universal and he declared the pictures were unusually valuable. The Saxe company had the films removed to the Alhambra theater, placed in a safe and a watchman assigned to guard them for a week.

WISCONSIN BRIEFS.

The Orpheum had a special morning show of these pictures for principals and teachers of Milwaukee schools.

The Palace Amusement company of Milwaukee has been granted a charter by the secretary of state.

J. E. Kubat, who has purchased the Empire theater at Chippewa from N. E. Cannon, plans to remodel the house, it is reported.

Pertinent slides enlivened the special show given by the Rose theater at Sheboygan Falls for the delegates to the meeting of the Sheboygan County Rural Letter Carriers' association.

The American Photoplay corporation of Milwaukee has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are Jean B. Olinger, Ben Ruben and Lewis B. Goulden.

"The Christian" was shown four days at Plankton hall in Milwaukee.

Association Amalgamates

Pittsburgh Chapter of Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association Ratifies Action of Recent State Cenvention Without Friction and Becomes Part of National League—Proposed Anti-Censorship Propaganda Plans May Be Dropped.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Pittsburgh News Service.

AT a recent semi-monthly meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania, the action of the recent state convention amalgamating the two organizations in this state, was ratified, and the Pittsburg Association is now a part of the national body. The amalgamation was effected without the semblance of friction.

A matter was discussed for providing a series of lectures and pictures opposing censorship, to be given in various houses in Western Pennsylvania, but seems doomed to failure on account of inability of the committee to secure theaters in which to give the demonstration.

NEW SHILOH STREET THEATER.

Plans are now practically complete for the construction of a new place of amusement on Shiloh street, Mount Washington, Pittsburg, Pa., on the site of the present Shiloh theater. The proprietor, Henry Polk, expects to have completed by October next a place of amusement that will seat 1,500 to 1,600 people, which will be, unless other moving picture theaters are erected before that time, the largest number of people that can be seated in a picture house in this part of the state. The theater proper is now on the second floor. The owner will have the first floor torn out and patrons will not be obliged to use any runway under the new arrangement. The present seating capacity of the Shiloh is 700.

MAX W. HERRING WILL OPEN EXCHANGE.

Max W. Herring, road man for the United Film Service Company, Pittsburg, Pa., last week completed negotiations whereby he secures the complete stock of films owned by the old Imperial Feature Film Company, which started in business in this city about four years ago. In all there are about 100 features, from two to six reels each, and a large number of single reels. He has rented the room at 404 Ferry street, now occupied by the Famous Players Film Service, film department, where he will open an exchange on May 1.

HEART THEATER OPENS.

Newest Downtown Picture House Is Beautifully Decorated—Good Organ Music.

The Heart theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburg, Pa., threw open its doors Saturday, Feb. 27, and the house was packed until the lights were turned out near midnight. The Heart is the newest of the downtown moving picture theaters. It is one of the coziest, comfiest and cleanest houses in the city. At a great expense the property at 243 Fifth avenue, where the theater is located, was remodeled to comply with the state laws. The decoration of the house is gold and bronze, with oil paintings that carry out the general color scheme. Frank Hart is the manager. The $5,000 Wurlitzer Theater Orchestra, Style K, together with the fact that they have been able to secure Thomas Fennell, the Wurlitzer official demonstrator, to play it, gives them the best of music.

SHORT PITTSBURGH ITEMS.

Jake Silverman, of Silverman Brothers, proprietors of the Pastime theater, at Altoona, Pa., was in Pittsburg recently and reported that his firm is having plans prepared and will begin work on the erection of a large picture house in that city. It will be located on Eleventh avenue, cost about $70,000, and have a capacity of 1,400.

James F. J. Archibald, the first war correspondent to return who has been exclusively with the German and Austrian forces under General von Hindenburg and Archduke Frederick since the first month of the war, will illustrate his lecture in Carnegie Music Hall, Pittsburg, Pa., March 5, with 150 colored views and 3,000 feet of motion pictures.

S. A. Nesbitt, the proprietor of the Home theater, at Rochester, Pa., has installed a Seeburg style M motion picture player in this house.

T. Harry Oliver, formerly of the Noted Plays Feature Company, is now manager of the National Feature Film Company, Weiland's branch, in Cleveland, Ohio.

Dr. J. Lorenz, who owns the building in which Horlick's news stand and Landau's shoe store is now located in Ambridge, Pa., has signed a contract with Architect H. A. Lord to draw plans for the remodeling of the building and convert what is now two stores into a moving picture theater.

Mr. Lord is to have the plans completed in time for the contract to be let and the work commenced by May 1.

It is understood that when completed it will be one of the finest show houses in this section.

Ralph Lardin, of Dickey street, took charge of the Luna theater, in Brackenridge avenue, Tarentum, Pa., last week, and will hereafter conduct the movie playhouse. Mr. Lardin purchased the theater from E. M. Bowers, who has operated the house for several months.

When William F. Ablett and John T. Ablett, sons of William Ablett, took charge of what is now known as the Abbrofam, on Shiloh street, Mount Washington, Pittsburg, Pa., they announced that suggestions in regard to a new name would be cordially received from their patrons, and Abbrofam, which stands for "Ablett Brothers' Family theater," was considered the best one offered and was acted upon.

Messrs. Shaheen & Thomas announces that they will open their new Clairton theater, at Clairton, Pa., this week. These gentlemen were in Pittsburg last week and placed an order for a Wurlitzer.

It is rumored that three of the Pittsburg downtown theaters will run moving pictures during the summer months. They are said to be booking subjects now for the undertaking.

The management of the Lyric theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburg, Pa., it is said, will make extensive alterations during the summer. The seating capacity will be increased several hundred and many improvements will be made.

Mr. Burry, manager of the B. & B. theater, Beaver avenue, Northside, Pittsburg, Pa., reports that he is getting excellent satisfaction from the Marquette photoplayer which he installed a short time ago.

The Hudson Feature Film Company, Pittsburg, Pa., announces that they have added to its road force Edward Thompson and Jacob Brocius. These gentlemen are from New York and are experienced show and film men. They will cover the Western Pennsylvania and Ohio territory.

The new Quality theater, at 429 Fifth avenue, Pittsburg, Pa., announces that they have placed an order for a Seeburg Motion Picture Player with pipe organ combination to be installed in this house.

It has recently been announced by Charles Freeman, a well known exhibitor of Pittsburg, and James Lasky, a business man of Uniontown, Pa., that they will begin the erection of a $43,000 moving picture house in Brownsville, Pa. This house will have a seating capacity of 600 people.

Parker & Elder last week sold the Avalon theater, near Pittsburg, Pa., for the owner, W. G. Stern, to J. T. Partridge, of Hazelwood, Pa.

PATHE ASKS REVISION OF TAX ASSESSMENT

Big Picture Company of Bound Brook, N. J., Claims State Got More Taxes Than Were Due.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Philadelphia News Service.

PATHE FRERES, of this country and France, recently obtained a writ of certiorari from Supreme Court Justice Trenchard, of Trenton, N. J., to review of the action of the State Board of Assessors in assessing the company on its outstanding capital stock of $1,000,000 for the year of 1911, the Pathe Freres company claiming that they paid the State of New Jersey $1,000, to which the state was not entitled.

The application for the writ was made by Eldon R. Walker, of Trenton, as counsel for the Pathe Freres. The company has a plant located at Bound Brook, New Jersey, and is thus a New Jorsey corporation. It was claimed to the court that the Board of Assessors taxed the company upon a total of $1,000,000 outstanding stock in the year of 1911, when there was actually only $200,000 worth of stock paid for at that time.

It was further claimed by Mr. Walker that the company was entitled to exemption because it is an industrial concern doing business in the State of New Jersey. The suit is to recover the money which, it is alleged, has been wrongfully paid to the state.

STAR AT TRENTON CELEBRATES.

Picture Theater Managed by Philip Papier Seven Years Old—Its Policies.

The Star theater, situated on South Broad street, just below State street, Trenton, celebrated the seventh anniversary of its institution in that city on Washington's Birthday. The house, under the management of Philip Papier and the late Sol Papier, was initially opened for patronage on Feb. 22, 1908, when the scarcity of motion picture theaters in Trenton was very conspicuous.

Through enterprising methods and obliging practices, the Star has, during its seven years of existence, developed into one of the foremost film theaters in the State of New Jersey, and is now among the leading exponents of this class of entertainment in the city of Trenton. At the period of its organization, the Star gave what were then features in the photoplay business—half reel pictures. One reelers at that time were to the business what the four and five reelers are to-day. The house was and is the only theater in the city open continuously from morning until night, and was one of the first to install a pair of projecting machines. The admission price of 5 cents has been maintained during the entire seven years of its existence, although the program of to-day costs a good deal more than that of the past.

A distinguished feature in connection with the theater is the fact that only short feature films are presented—that is, the management books pictures of not more than two or three reels, in order to satisfy the patrons who desire to spend only a short time for entertainment.

Mr. Papier, the general manager, also plays a prominent part in the moving picture game at Lambertville, where he and Charles C. Hildinger are shortly to build a modern moving picture theater called the Strand. Mr. Papier is treasurer of the Trenton Screen Club, secretary of the Progress Club and otherwise affiliated commercially and socially about the city. He is married and is the father of one daughter, Marjorie Papier.

FILM PEOPLE EXCITED PRISON GUARDS.

Moving picture operators recently caused considerable excitement at the New Jersey state prison, when they visited there for the purpose of making films. The actions of the operators caused the deputies in the towers to halt them when they drove around the large institution in a carriage and stopped here and there to take a picture.

The moving picture men appeared at the prison shortly before noon and called upon Head Keeper Madden. When they made known their mission they were told that they would not be allowed to take pictures inside of the prison, but would be allowed to do so on the outside.

The keepers on the towers were not aware of the fact that they had been granted permission for the outside work and suspected them of being in a plot to assist in an escape.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

The Empire theater, Broad street and Fairmount avenue, has been sold by the Empire Theater Company to Joseph W. Gardiner, former real estate broker and owner of the Alhambra theater, Twelfth and Norris streets. The agreement of sale provides for settlement within sixty days, so that it is expected that the present owners will vacate before the 1st of May.

The first movement toward the establishment of rival moving picture theaters in Lambertville, N. J., on Coryell street, was recently made, when Surveyor Frank M. Wilson, from Trenton, took the measurements of the vacant lot belonging to Edgar T. Phillips. It is said that the building on this lot will be of frame construction, while the one to be erected by Charles C. Hildinger and Philip Papier, on the Van Horn lots, adjoining, will be of brick construction. It is expected that these new theaters will cause much additional travel in that section of the city.

Large audiences recently witnessed the submarine "movies" shown in the Grand Opera House, at South Bethlehem, Pa., and were delighted with the marvelous pictures.

Arrangements have been made by the Merchants' Amusement Ticket Company, Incorporated, whereby from 8,000 to 10,000 merchants in this city and vicinity will shortly be issuing free moving picture tickets with purchases. A large number of theaters now redeem at their ticket offices, equivalent admission tickets for these free moving picture tickets, a free moving picture ticket being equivalent to a five-cent admission price.

Francis C. Hennessy has sold to John Rantz the moving picture theater on the west side of Front street, north of Susquehanna avenue, lot 18 feet by 100 feet, with a plot of ground in the rear 100 feet by 186 feet, on which the theater is built.

In order to benefit the destitute of Avenzzano, Italy, one of the villages which was badly damaged and much suffering caused by the recent earthquake, a concert and moving picture entertainment was recently given in Saint Donato's Hall, Philadelphia.

Edmund J. Bamberger, who recently took title from the Active Real Estate Company to the Plaza theater, on Broad street, below Ritner, lot 180 feet by 80 feet, and to the Erie theater, at the northeast corner of Erie avenue and Marshall street, lot 75 feet by 132 feet, has conveyed both theaters to the Spiers Realty Company.

The Liberty Moving Picture Company, of Philadelphia, which applied for a charter some time past, was recently awarded said charter. The new company will manufacture and deal in motion pictures, films, photographs, etc. The capital of the company is $5,000, and among the incorporators is Colonel Sheldon Potter, former Director of Public Safety in Philadelphia, and a retired member of the Governor's military staff.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE United States department of agriculture has become interested in and will circulate the films on "Bovine Tuberculosis and Milk Sanitation" made recently by Dr. L. C. Kigin, who resigned as state veterinarian. Request has been made to send the films to Washington so that copies may be made. Two states, Wyoming and New York, have asked for showings.

Plans are being drawn for the new Orpheum theater building in Lincoln.

I. G. Dunn, of Lincoln, has purchased the opera house at York.

Emil Cartsen has purchased the Orpheum theater at Spencer from F. L. Pock.

H. W. Chamberlain will be manager of the moving picture house at Plainview recently purchased by Fred Jewell.

The Radio theater at Kearney has been closed and P. H. Hopper, who operated it, is managing the Crescent in that city.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Melvin theater, 1912-14 Chippewa street, gave a very special performance on the night of March 1, running the last reel of "The Million Dollar Mystery," with moving pictures of Miss Ida Damon, winner of the $10,000 prize for the correct solution of the mystery, and the program arranged by Manager Joseph Halleman, included the appearance of Miss Damon in person.

The I. K. M. Film Corporation, which will distribute the Kriterion Program, have opened an exchange at 3217 Locust street, under the management of D. P. Roberts. A weekly output of twenty-one releases a week is announced.

C. S. Edwards, district manager of the Pathe exchanges, is temporarily in charge of the offices here, pending the appointment of a new manager, made necessary by the resignation of E. W. Dustin. Mr. Edwards announces a new plan of distribution through resident agents stationed at various points in the territory covered by the St. Louis office. Five agents, all St. Louis men, have been appointed. I. Leon Klaskey, Evansville, Ind.; Peter Riley, Cairo, Ill.; Jack O'Neill, Hannibal, Mo.; F. W. Gebhardt, St. Louis; L. Worsham, Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Edwards says that his office is making special efforts to win some of the prizes offered by the Pathe Company, who are celebrating the visit of M. Chas. Pathe, of Paris. These prizes are offered to the exchanges throughout the United States, in order to stimulate the representatives to increase the volume of business, as a testimonial of the good wishes extended to M. Pathe.

The Business Men's League of St. Louis has accepted an offer to become distributing bureau for Missouri of moving picture films sent out by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Inc., of Philadelphia. The films are loaned to institutions for exhibitions at which admittance to the public is free. The bureau is an association of leading American institutions, manufacturers, producers and transportation lines, to engage in industrial and vocational information by showing how things in common use are made or produced. The different processes in the manufacture of an automobile, for instance, are shown. The films are loaned to colleges, schools, commercial clubs, and are operated from auto trucks in parks and playgrounds.

Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, proprietor of the Monroe theater, 2816 Chippewa street, who leased her theater to Joseph Sutherland some time ago, could not resist the lure of the theatrical business, and finding Mr. Sutherland willing to cancel his lease, she again resumed management of the Monroe.

A. Gutzman, former manager of the Melvin theater, who was forced to take a protracted leave of absence on account of sickness two months ago, is recovering and hopes to soon be back in amusement circles.

Joseph Mogler, manager of the Family theater, Broadway and Bremen avenue, recently gave a free matinee for mothers and children in that district. The house, which seats 2,600 persons, was packed to the doors.

NORTHWEST NOTES.

Knights of Pythias at Bonners Ferry, Ida., are discussing a project for a lodge building, a portion of which probably will be used as an opera house.

The theater building at Redfield, S. D., was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of about $35,000.

The new Elan moving picture show at Roosevelt, Utah, has been opened.

The recently incorporated Crews Amusement company of Walla Walla, Wash., has filed a list of officers. William P. Hooper is president, Daisy F. Hooper, secretary, and Clarence S. Crews, vice-president and treasurer.

W. R. Potter has added the Dream theater on Sherman avenue in Coeur d'Alene, Ida., to his string of houses, purchasing it from George Lamont. Potter formerly managed the Lyric in Coeur d'Alene.

Dr. H. R. Keylor has made arrangements to remodel the Keylor Grand at Walla Walla, Wash., at an expenditure of $5,000. A rest room, new front and more impressive lobby are among the improvements.

John Y. Breckenridge has sold the Home theater at Pine City, Minn., to W. E. Stoothoff, proprietor of the Family theater at North Branch, Minn. A new location, modernly equipped, is planned by the new owner.

Paul Kunert, who has leased and has been refitting the Wipperman building in Hankinson, N. D., for use as a moving picture show, is including a stage for vaudeville.

P. G. Winston has sold his moving picture show at Frederick, S. D., to a Mr. Steinke of Forman, N. D.

Carson Brothers have purchased an outfit and will give picture shows at Pine Bluffs, Wyo., every Saturday night.

The Star moving picture theater has been opened at Augusta, Mont.

Fire at the McIntosh opera house, at East Grand Forks, Minn. The estimated loss was $2,000.

Ray Fowler has been remodeling a building in Parker, S. D., for use as a moving picture theater.

Lewis J. Larson, of McIntosh, Minn., will assume charge of the Lyceum opera house at Fooston, Minn., March 1.

W. R. Chittenden, who was manager of the Marshall opera house at Marshall, Minn., has been selected by the Marshall Theater Company to manage the new Barrymore theater. Although the house was opened with a dramatic attraction, Manager Chittenden has installed projecting apparatus and will operate it primarily as a moving picture theater.

Claude S. Smith, proprietor of a moving picture theater at Gresham, Ore., recently suffered serious injuries to the spine when the taxicab in which he was riding and a 'bus collided in Portland, Ore.

Al Grant and Thomas Grogan have purchased the New Grand theater, at Lake City, Minn., from G. R. Swanson.

THE NEW CLEMMER.

Mary Pickford in "Mistress Nell" was the attraction for the holiday opening at the Clemmer. Construction features of the Clemmer include a gradually inclined passageway (instead of steps) leading to the balcony, making it possible to put a premium on these ordinarily hard-to-sell seats; coffered sounding board, painted in silver bronze, French gray and purple; structure, steel and concrete, fireproof; seating capacity, 1,000; walls wainscoted with Vermont marble, having base of dark verde entique and field of pink listavean; lobby floored with mosaic tile; automatic sprinklers; ventilation, heating and cooling by fan system, tempering and heating coils and motors, thermostat controlled; operating room, two Simplex machines, spotlinght, slide flasher, electric rewind, motor-driven curtain, vacuum cleaning system, pumps and generators. The four-manual organ, the only one of its kind in a northwestern picture house, has 3,000 pipes. It was built by W. W. Kimball.

Portland to Censor Films

City in Oregon Passes Ordinance Providing for Local Censorship—Salaried Secretary and Seven Members—Mayor Will Appoint Exhibitor and Exchangeman—Commissioner Bigelow Thinks Measure Unnecessary—List of Forbidden Subjects Is Arbitrary.

By Frank H. Madison, Northwest Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Portland, Ore., City Council has passed an ordinance providing for a censorship board of seven members with a paid secretary at $100 a month. Mrs. E. B. Colwell, chairman of the present unlegalized board, is said to be slated for the secretaryship. Mayor Albee expects to name one exchange man, one exhibitor and five persons outside the trade as board members. The present board of appeals is abolished; the decision of the new censors is final. No picture is to be exhibited unless approved in writing by a majority of the members. Certificates of approval are to be issued with the films and unless exhibitors can produce these upon demand of police officers, the policemen may hold the films until action by the board is taken.

Forbidden subjects are films which show anything of an obscene, indecent, immoral nature; any film which presents any gruesome, revolting or disgusting scene or subject; any film which portrays (in such a manner to offend public decency or morality), any murder, suicide, robbery, hold-up, stabbing, assaulting, clubbing or beating; any film which depicts any cruelty to animals; any film which exhibits methods of committing crimes; any film which tends to disturb public peace.

Commissioner Bigelow, who cast the single dissenting vote, opposed a paid position. He believed a list of "Don'ts" and the penalty of revocation of licenses and arrest would result in proper exhibitions. Changes might be made later, but amendments offered by Melvin G. Winstock of the National, D. Solis Cohen of the Peoples and G. T. Holtzclaw of the Circle were not accepted.

PICTURE LEGISLATION IN NORTHWESTERN STATES

Censorship That Would Please Utah Capitalist—What Cowboys Want —Wisdom in Tacoma Paper.

State legislative action affecting moving pictures in the northwest has made little progress.

In the Utah Legislature Senator Chez has introduced Senate Bill No. 185, which provides for the licensing and regulating of operators of motion picture machines. The bill was referred to the committee on public institutions.

House Bill No. 398, introduced into the Montana Legislature by Representative Kelly, provides for the regulation of moving picture shows.

Moving pictures exploiting the differences between capital and labor were scored by J. Will Knight, a woolen manufacturer of Provo, Utah, when the workmen's compensation bill, up before the Utah Legislature, was the cause of a public hearing of men affected. He particularly decried the films which show capitalists kicking the laborer out of the house because he is unable to pay his rent.

A resolution recently was introduced before the South Dakota State Legislature asking Congress to provide a censorship of moving pictures which would eliminate the wild and woolly aspects of the western cowboy life films. Naturally the measure is being pooh-poohed by the press of the state, editors contending the West has made sufficient progress to stand on its present reputation. "Unless we are ready to abandon the drama, the popular novel and the photoplay altogether, we must continue to tolerate considerable artistic license, if we may so style it. * * * To put up such a proposition to Congress and expect that body to consider it with a sober face is more than the South Dakota Legislature has a right to demand of the statesmen at Washington."

The Tacoma, Wash., Tribune, one of the leading papers of the Northwest, says of the proposed national federal censorship bill: "It should be defeated. There is no more righteousness in a federal moving picture censor than in a federal censor of actual dramas. A moving picture dictator, established and maintained by the National government, would be un-American and rather ridiculous. There is the censorship of public opinion, to which both film manufacturers and exhibitors have proved readily responsive. The same intelligent and independent public opinion would doubtless resent the establishment of a federal censorship as it always resents unwarranted meddling."

PICTURE-SHOW CURFEW LAW.

Curfew laws in the Northwest are being brushed up, the allurements of the moving pictures being blamed for the infractions. Officers of the juvenile court at Salt Lake City, Utah, announced a "campaign" to see that minors not accompanied by parents or guardians would not be allowed in photoplay houses after 9 p. m. The proprietors of the picture houses and not the children and parents in Portland, Ore., would be to blame when youngsters forget the curfew hour and linger before the screen, if Chief Probation Officer McIntosh's suggestions are adopted. The city attorney was requested to draft this idea for the City Council's consideration.

NEW MOTION PICTURE STUDIO IN ST. PAUL.

The Raths-Seavolt Film Manufacturing Company, which has taken out its papers to become a $100,000 corporation, expects to open its new film plant on University avenue, near Avon street, in St. Paul, Minn., about June 1. A one-story concrete and brick building, 30x60, will be erected. In addition to the laboratory there will be open-air stages where pictures will be made under the direction of Edward F. Seavolt, one of the incorporators. Otto N. Raths is the other incorporator, the concern being an outgrowth of the Raths-Seavolt company. Besides the productions of pictures, a film exchange for the northwest will be operated, projecting machines for individuals will be handled, and the making of permanent family records will be exploited. The field of operations now includes twenty-seven states.

SNAP SHOTS OF PATRIOTIC HOLIDAY SHOWS.

On February 27, Manager Winstock of the National theater at Portland, Ore., gave a complimentary show to school children when "The Life of Abraham Lincoln" was shown. The Imperial at Great Falls, Mont., had "The Spy" and gave morning shows for the children. Home talent supplemented the holiday photoplay bill at the Scenic at Detroit, Minn. The New Grand at Lake City, Minn., had its showing of "Washington at Valley Forge" on the Friday preceding the holiday.

Almost on the eve of opening his new Clemmer theater, Sprague avenue and Lincoln streets in Spokane, Wash., H. S. Clemmer sold the Clem theater on Sprague avenue, between Post and Wall streets, to L. Forbes, of Seattle, Wash. The Paramount pictures were withdrawn as they will be used in the new Clemmer. The name "Clem" was not included in the bill of sale, it is understood, and the house will be known as the Class A.

New St. Denis Theater

Building of Montreal's New Quarter-of-a-Million Dollar Theater Now Begun by St. Denis Company—Will Have Larger Capacity by Several Hundred Seats Than Any Other House in Canadian City—It to Be Completed and Opened by September.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WORK was commenced recently on the new theater building of the St. Denis theater company on St. Denis street. The sale of land from the previous owners to the St. Denis company was registered a fortnight ago, the price involved in the transaction being given as $175,000. Last week the contract for the erection of the building was awarded to Norcross Bros. The new theater will have a seating capacity several hundred in excess of any theater already existing in Montreal and will cost in the neighborhood of $225,000. It is generally known that the interests behind the project are identical with those of the Imperial theater, which has scored a remarkable success since its erection. The new house will be directly under the management of Messrs. Keith and Albee. The present local manager for Keith and Albee, Mr. J. W. Conover, who has achieved considerable success at the Imperial, will take over the management of the theater on its completion. An organ larger than that at the Imperial is to be installed. The building is expected to be completed by September next.

The successful launching of the St. Denis Company adds considerable to the laurels of the firm of J. A. Mackay & Co. The charter for the company was obtained only in September last, but in spite of the alleged "hard times" the firm was able to dispose of an issue of $375,000 preferred stock and commence the work of erection within six months.

BETTY NANSEN IN MONTREAL.

Famous Danish Actress Visits City to Get Snow Scenes for "Anna Karanina" Film.

Betty Nansen, with Producer J. Gordon Edwards, was in town recently taking some snow scenes in connection with a dramatization of Tolstoy's "Anna Karanina," for Fox Film Corporation. When the company arrived in town they must have been greatly disappointed, for it was raining heavily and we had only slush and mud to offer them in the form of settings. However, the wind veered overnight, and by morning the ground had a covering of about three inches of snow. Luckily the Montreal Ski Club was to hold a meet within a few days, and through its courtesy Mr. Edwards was afforded every opportunity for taking interesting scenes. According to the script, a ski meet is held, in which the hero competes with a Swedish champion. As there are many followers of the sport locally, and champions to boot, Mr. Edwards secured some interesting film.

MONTREAL SHORT NOTES.

The Domino theater, out on Mount Royal avenue east, is under new management. A fine line of photoplays is being screened.

That product of the Biograph studio which will never die, "Judith Bethulia," was again screened in this city at the Casino.

"Are They Born or Made," the four-part United Film feature which made a moving picture enthusiast of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, is now being handled by the local United office. It had first run at the Imperial here, playing to good business for two days.

The Strand has changed from Universal to General Film Service. In addition to this, some strong features are put on.

J. O. Hooley is pleased with business at the Francais these days. He has a setting of a drawing room, about fifty "guests" are gathered, and a Pathescope home projector gives both "guests" and regular audience an enjoyable time.

Messrs. Broy and Whitehead, the owner of the Canadian rights for "The Spoilers," Selig's eight-reel picture, announce that the film is booked solid for the next three months.

Recent features at local houses were: "C. O. D.," Broadway Star, Imperial theater; "Mignon," World Film, Globe theater; "His Last Dollar," Paramount Domino theater; "A Night Out," Essanay, Colonial theater; "More Than Queen," Pathe, Mount Royal theater; "Where the Trail Divides," Paramount, Tivoli theater; "Ridgeway of Montana," Universal, Fairyland theater; "Alias Jimmy Valentine," World Film, Strand theater; "An Example," Universal, London theater; "The Crucible," Paramount, Canada theater; "Old Dutch," World Film, Moulin Rouge theater.

THEATER STRING PROPOSITION WILL BE AGAIN TAKEN UP

Keith Interests Still Considering Formation of New String of Houses in Kentucky.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FRED Levy, who is connected with the Keith interests in Louisville, has announced that J. J. Murdock will be in the city during the latter part of March, and that the proposed formation of a company to operate a string of ten motion picture houses will be again taken up. Mr. Levy was recently in New York, where he consulted executive officers of the Keith circuit concerning the proposition. Taking into consideration the rapid growth of the film industry in Louisville at this time the promotors haven't much time to lose in starting something, as good locations are being rapidly preempted by local men. A number of houses are now in course of construction, and it is rumored that a large number of airdomes and small outskirt houses are contemplated.

SPRING BUSINESS PROMISING.

Film concerns have been making numerous quotations on films, supplies, seats and machinery of late, and the prospects are for a very busy spring in the building line.

SEEKING A STAR.

Louisville Herald Starts Voting Contest to Select Star for City's Picture.

The Louisville Herald is attracting a good deal of attention among amateur moving picture actors through a special voting campaign conducted to select the star for the booster photoplay of the Louisville Commercial Club. This picture will be made by the Standard Motion Picture Company, of Chicago. The leading lady will be known as "Lou." On Sunday, February 28, a coupon appeared in the Sunday edition of the paper. This coupon was good for 100 votes in the contest, and the daily paper carries a coupon good for ten votes. A fifty dollar diamond ring will be given to "Lou" as a reward for winning the contest. The play will include a number of scenes staged in connection with business pursuits of the city.

STRAWBERRY GROWERS' FILMS.

Herbert B. Graham, general manager of the Warren County Strawberry Growers' Association, recently made arrangements with J. A. Evans, special agent of the Agricultural Department at Washington, D. C., whereby J. H. Carmody showed the films of the Warren County Strawberry Industry on February 26 and 27 at the Columbia theater. These pictures were also shown at Henderson, Ky., on February 23 to 25, during a meeting of the Farmers' Institute and the Fruit Growers' Association.

BRIEF LOUISVILLE NOTES.

The Oakdale Amusement Company, with an authorized capital stock of $10,000, divided into shares of the value of $100 each, has filed articles of incorporation. The company will operate a motion picture house in South Louisville at a location near the famous Churchill Downs race track. The company's debt limit is equal to the capital stock. The incorporators are E. N. Menar, five shares; J. M. Bywater and P. D. Crawford, fifteen shares each. The company expects to draw a big business from Oakdale and South Louisville and during the two race meetings in Louisville will undoubtedly draw large crowds from the racing element which makes its headquarters in the neighborhood. The concern has purchased two Powers 6A motion picture machines and 800 chairs already.

It has just come to light that the Preston Amusement Company, at Preston and Camp streets, was one of the heavy losers when a safe in the store of Droppleman & Tobe was robbed a few weeks ago. The moving picture concern had taken in fairly large receipts during Saturday and Sunday and for safe keeping had deposited them in the safe of the concern across the street. An indictment was returned against Bernard Fink, alias Fred Meyer, charging him with the theft of $825 in cash and some valuable jewelry belonging to other parties. Unable to locate important witnesses after weeks of patient endeavor, the Commonwealth has filed away the indictment with leave to reinstate later.

The Hippodrome theater recently showed a special local color picture at its theater, depicting L. T. Cooper, a patent medicine man, feeding the poor of Louisville by free distribution of bread. The scenes were unique and brought close to home the human interest side of life. A bread line was the main feature of the pictures and showed several hundred people begging for the "staff of life."

"A Day in the Germany Navy" was one of the very interesting films shown at the Children's Motion Picture show at the Mary Anderson theater on Saturday, February 27. Other pictures shown at the same performance were: "Yellowstone Park," "Life of the Circus," and "Danger of the Streets." Two performances are now given every Saturday morning.

C. H. Bleich, of the Bleich Amusement Company, of Hopkinsville, Ky., is now at Anderson, S. C., where he recently opened a moving picture house known as "The Anderson." The house was formally opened on February 18.

A. L. Ward, of Henderson, Ky., who has been in charge of the Princess theater since its opening over a year ago, tendered his resignation which became effective on March 1. He has been succeeded by Alfred F. Zelt, who was formerly manager of the Empress theater at Owensboro. Mr. Zelt is an experienced motion picture man and is moving his family to Henderson so as to be able to settle down on the job. The Princess has been closed while renovating and some small remodeling was under way, but is now open and again showing high class features.

A. J. Adams, of Bardstown, Ky., was recently in Louisville, where he purchased a Powers 6A machine and other equipment wherewith to open a new moving picture show.

B. B. Hammond, of Vevay, Ind., was recently in Louisville, where he purchased a machine and equipment with which to open a new theater.

The East Broadway Amusement company, of Louisville, has purchased two Powers 6A machines, equipped with motor drive, which it will install in the new theater at Shelby and Broadway.

W. J. Nuxol, of Louisville, and other business men are interested in organizing a company to erect a large airdome in Germantown, a residence district of Louisville. This airdome, if built, will have a seating capacity of 1,600.

Charles O. Brown, of Middlesboro, Ky., was recently in Louisville purchasing a new machine and supplies for his theater.

Professor Weedon, of Waddy, Ky., was recently in Louisville and purchased a complete outfit with which to show moving pictures in the high school.

The Owl Feature Film company, of Louisville, has been very busy during the past few weeks and has handled a good deal of business in the city and out in the state. Machines have been moving well since February 1.

Hurley Brothers, of Providence, Ky., are installing a new lighting plant at the Dreamland theater. A number of the smaller theaters in Western Kentucky have to generate their own power or use the old style gas machines.

J. B. Adams, of Danville, Ky., recently closed a deal whereby he took charge of the Auditorium, which has since been renovated. It was opened on March 1 as a high class moving picture house.

Edward M. White, Assistant State Fire Marshal of Kentucky, was recently in Lancaster, Ky., where he inspected the two motion picture houses and gave them clean bills.

Joseph & Joseph, architects of Louisville, are working on plans for the new theater to be built at Lexington, Ky., by the Phoenix Amusement company, of which M. Switow, of the Switow Amusement company, of Louisville, is president.

The Nickelodeon Theater company, of Henderson, Ky., has sold its Main street amusement house to George W. Ragan and Louis Hayes, former owners of the property. The new owners will remodel the building from front to back, spending about $3,000 on the improvements.

Manager Stockley, of the Princess theater, of Hopkinsville, Ky., was recently in St. Louis, where he made arrangements with the General Film Company whereby he will receive thirty reels of the General program weekly.

The Irvine theater, of Irvine, Ky., is maintaining a policy whereby it shows Keystone comedies every Monday night and the Mutual Weekly on every Tuesday night. These pictures are proving very popular. The theater is also showing "Zudora."

"The Daughters of Men," a five-part Lubin feature, was recently shown at the Modern theater, of Ashland, Ky., and attracted a good deal of attention.

SOUTHERN GLEANINGS.

By Midwest Special Service.

E. W. Gould will operate the Dixie theater at Cartersville, Ga., as an exclusive motion picture house, having secured a lease on the Grand opera house to be used for vaudeville attractions. A. G. White, who has been associated with him in the Dixie, will be identified with the new enterprise.

The proprietor of the American theater at Columbus, Ga., is reported to have plans for a new $15,000 theater.

E. C. Pearce has given up his place as manager for the Dreamland theater at Winston-Salem, N. C., to again take charge of the Amuzu.

Merchants of Birmingham, Ala., offered a prize of $25 in gold for the best scenario for a local moving picture to be made during Fashion Week.

The Gossard corset-fitting moving pictures were shown at the Lyric theater in Birmingham, Ala.

IN ILLINOIS.

The reported sale of the Drexel, at Joliet or that it is even on the market was denied by Manager W. S. Clark.

H. A. Douglas, Elmer Darnell and R. M. Roosevelt leased the Fellis theater at Hillsboro for three Fridays, and booked "Neptune's Daughter," "The Squaw Man" and "Brewster's Millions," to be shown at 10 and 25 cents.

The Princess theater, at Anna, has been sold to C. A. Renfro, of Cairo.

The Harm in a Picture

A Certain Picture Is Means of Exciting New Wave of Censorship in Quincy, Ill. —Brings Attack on Dormant Board of Censorship in Editorial Columns of the "Whig"—Such Offierings Do Much Harm to the Business as a Whole.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Whig, a morning newspaper at Quincy, made a determined attack upon the showing of the film, "The Smashing of the White Slave Trust," at the Star theater on Hampshire street.

In addition to a leading first page story the paper addressed an open letter style editorial to the mayor and to the dormant board of censors demanding action on this class of films. The board, according to the papers, has been relying largely upon synopses and reviews in photoplay trade papers, and censorship accounts in other cities instead of inspecting the films. That this method might work if all exhibitors had the same standard is indicated in the following:

"The Whig is glad that it is able to state that in general Quincy theaters have been careful about the character of picture shows. Many tendered films have been rejected. As a specific instance the disgusting film, 'Smashing of the White Slave Trust,' which disgraced Quincy and the Star theater the past week was tendered to another theater in Quincy first and was rejected by the manager. And then the Star accepted it, gathered in the shekels which curiosity is always willing to pay and stigmatized itself."

The Moving Picture World is continually drawing attention to the danger to exhibitors in showing such offerings as this.

EXHIBITORS AND MINISTERS IN GALESBURG.

In accordance with the suggestion of Alderman Charles Miller the managers of the Colonial, Auditorium, Empress, Elite and Princess theaters at Galesburg tendered the churches of the city the use of their houses for some Sunday—rent free. This is a phase of the fight in Galesburg to have Sunday shows.

The greater Galesburg League, just organized, will have a standing committee on entertainment and amusement.

ILLINOIS SHOW SNAP SHOTS.

What Exhibitors Throughout State Are Doing to Build Up Trade.

Illinois exhibitors have varied methods of getting new faces into the house. The Drexel at Joliet made an impression upon the friends of the local printing pressmen's union by two benefit nights. The Princess at Springfield featured piano duets. The stunt of showing slides made from snapshots of local residents was successfully used by the Grand Opera house at Aurora, the Electric theater at Manteno and the Elite at Peotone. The pictures which have special significance to lodge members, such as "Damon and Pythias" and the Modern Woodmen's antituberculosis story, "The Man Who Came Back," are good patronage recruiting agencies. The local lodges do a great deal of the advertising. Local co-operation was given the Pythian picture at the Labor Temple in Staunton, the Auditorium at Benton and the Princess at Gibson City. The Washington at Belleville not only ran the Pythian film, but interested the Mother's club in it as a fine picture for children. The Majestic at Chillicothe had a special show of the Woodmen picture for members of the order. The Princess at Lewistown ran Pastor Russell's "Creation" after the regular show free for four days. Boy Scouts in Edwardsville blazed a trail to the Wildey theater when a scout picture was shown. They shared in the proceeds. The Yale at Carbondale announced sacred music on the phonograph to accompany "Paradise Lost." The Princess at Canton featured Miss Bess Sheahan in "Jane Eyre" as a former Canton girl. The Haish Auditorium at De Kalb is now using vaudeville, changed twice a week and pictures changed daily. Manager Lamb of the Palm at Rockford had a fifty-foot film made of some local kids to sandwich between reels.

SHORTER ILLINOIS ITEMS.

The Police at Bloomington have notified an exhibitor that musical instruments in the lobby or located inside so as to throw the sound into the street will not be tolerated.

Eiler Jones, former owner of the Star theater at Lincoln, has entered the screen manufacturing business.

The El Dorado Amusement company of Eldorado has been incorporated with capital stock of $1,200 to do a moving picture and theatrical business. The incorporators are C. Phil Burnett, R. E. Burnett, J. E. Elder and Robert H. Davis.

Damage, estimated at $1,000, was caused to the Majestic theater at East St. Louis when fire attacked the block in which it is located.

The Atlas Educational Film company of Chicago has filed notice with the secretary of state at Springfield that its capital stock has been increased from $15,000 to $25,000.

Manager Hatcher of the Photoplay theater at Elmwood is planning to take a number of improvements to his house.

The Chicago Kriterion Film service has been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are Charles R. Francis, Harvey E. Grace and Robert H. Farrell.

The Strand Theater company of Chicago has been granted a charter with capital stock of $25,000 to erect, lease and operate opera houses, theaters, etc. The incorporators are C. A. Baker, Joseph M. Griffen and H. I. Reetz.

Flora now has but one picture show. S. E. Jirtle has taken charge of the Casino theater and closed the Opera House.

By having an extinguisher in the booth Operator Rigg at the Photo-Play in Hamilton prevented a film fire, less than a foot of the picture being destroyed.

J. B. Dawson is reported to have let contract for construction of a theater seating 600 at Liberty and Chapin streets, in Morris.

Bath, one of the pioneer Illinois River towns, has a new picture show—in the opera house.

The scarlet fever scare has left Rushville and picture houses have reopened.

Camera men for the big companies have been out in the state. Francis X. Bushman, of the Essanay Company, recently was at Starved Rock, near La Salle, to do some work, and Wilmette residents were gratified at the advent of an industrious group from the Selig studio.

The Jayann Film Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000 to buy and manufacture films and to do a general picture play business.

Ray Atkins, of Anna, has opened a moving picture show at Vergennes.

Mrs. C. Wright has been fitting up the Solterman Building at Hopedale for use as a moving picture theater.

Contract has been awarded for the construction of the new La Petite moving picture theater at Kankakee, work to start March 1. W. H. Cadoret operates the house.

Newspapers and Censorship

Burlington Gazette, Leading Iowa Newspaper, Is Encouraging Exhibitors in Their Opposition to Lee State Censorship Bill—Draws a Good Likeness of the Kind of Man That May Be Appointed as Censor.

By Midwest Special Iowa Service to Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS who oppose the Lee bill for state censorship have the support of the Burlington Gazette, one of the leading Iowa papers. "This would make a fat job for some favorite of the state administration and would work a great hardship upon proprietors of moving picture theaters who, no doubt, would be compelled to pay the inspection fee," says the editor. "However, this measure is in line with many other equally fatuous, and its adoption would not be surprising in view of past performances. The general run of moving pictures are pretty well censored before they are placed on the market, and there is no occasion for the employment of a state censor. If a city desires to employ a censor, well and good, but the idea of the state supervising the picture morals of everybody is a joke. And we shudder to think of the kind of a censor that would likely be employed—one of those kind that could eat out of a boot."

SHORTER IOWA ITEMS.

Amusement places and business houses in Carroll have been ordered by the mayor to close on Sunday.

John Peterson, banker at Elk Horn, has had plans drawn by L. C. Larsen of Atlantic for a concrete moving picture theater and opera house, 46x80 feet.

Thomas Walsh has sold the Grand moving picture theater at Eldora to Joseph Fagg. George Still will be manager, it is reported.

George Crabtree, of Newton, who purchased the Lyric theater at Albia from Stewart R. Peake has made a number of improvements to the house. Peake has gone to Chillicothe, Ill., where he will engage in the picture business.

Leo Moore, formerly manager of the Orpheum, at Centerville, is again in charge of the house there, having secured control of the Majestic from Fleagle, Spillman & Lane.

Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, owner of the Princess theater at Dubuque, has taken a lease on the old Baptist church building at Twelfth and Main streets in that city and will expend $15,000 in converting it into a motion picture house, seating between 800 and 1,000 persons. The floor already is inclined. A new heating plant and a stage will be installed. It will be a five-cent house and the Princess will be devoted to feature pictures.

Frank Greene has sold his picture show at Victor to Otis Palmer, of Center Point, and will devote his time to his house at Brooklyn.

D. Jacobsen, of Des Moines, has purchased the Princess theater at Manchester from Virgil Thompson.

C. O. Larsen has sold the Electric theater at Burt to Elmer Nelson.

G. W. McLaughlin, who recently sold the Orpheum theater at Eau Claire, Wis., to Capt. E. S. Pearsall recently, was at Eagle Grove looking over the photoplay field there.

L. L. Dolson has sold his moving picture show at Decorah and returned to his home in Franklin county.

Walter Seaman sold the Majestic theater at Ossian to Frank Boeckman.

Manager J. A. Knight, of the Majestic at Columbus Junction, has leased the building occupied by the Lyric and that town will have but one show, except on Saturday nights, when extra bills will be given at Lyric.

The Englert theater at Iowa City offered a reward of $10 to those who failed to laugh at "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

George Dehlets has purchased the Mystic at Alton from A. M. Leitch.

W. H. Englert, proprietor of the Englert theater at Iowa City, has purchased the Maresh building on East Washington street in that city and will open another picture house.

Arthur Tesmer has purchased the interest of his partner, Dr. J. H. Nauerth, in the moving picture show at Traer.

FOX TROT TROPHY AT DETROIT LEAGUE BALL

Entertainment Committee Hard at Work—Ball to Be Held April 15 at the Arcadia.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE entertainment committee in charge of the coming ball to be given at the Arcadia, April 15, under the auspices of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, announce that they have arranged with Mayor Oscar E. Marx to lead the grand march with one of the feminine film stars who will be present. Among other unique features will be a handsome silver trophy as first prize for the winner of the Fox Trot dancing contest in which the public will be invited to take part. Moving pictures will be made of the various events, and afterwards will be shown in the local theaters. Chirman Howard O. Pierce, of the entertainment committee, states that at least six or more film stars will be on hand. Exhibitors all over Michigan are taking a great interest in this affair and it is expected that there will be a record-breaking attendance.

COMPLYING WITH LAW.

All the theaters that were closed by the state fire marshal's office in Detroit are again operating, the owners having complied with the law and paid the inspection fee.

NO MORE ADVERTISING SLIDES.

One of the first men in Michigan to be moved by the editorial in the Moving Picture World of February 27, "Follies of the Screen," on the exhibiting advertising slides in motion picture theaters is Bob Peltier, owner of the Bijou theater in Mt. Clemens. Mr. Peltier on March 1st discontinued the advertising slide feature, despite the fact that it brought him an annual revenue of $800. "It's not only because I am planning on improving my shows and not entirely because many of my patrons have considered the slides monotonous, but the demand has been increasing so steadily that I found I could not handle them all unless I necessarily made my show shorter," said Mr. Peltier.

APRIL OPENINGS.

When the Broadway-Strand theater reopens on Broadway, it will be one of the most handsome theaters in the country. One of the features will be a symphony orchestra. Feature pictures only will be shown at prices from 10 to 25 cents.

Other important openings in April will be the new Majestic theater, at Woodward and Willis avenues, seating approximately 2,000 people, and the new Knickerbocker theater, Jefferson avenue and the Belle Isle bridge.

UNITED FILM IN DETROIT.

The United Film Service Co. has incorporated in Michigan. It will furnish Michigan exhibitors with Warners features and the United program. Offices are in the Campau building, Detroit. The principal stockholders of the company are Nicholas Palley and Louis Schurrer. Mr. Palley is manager.

NEW LANCASTER THEATER.

A new moving picture theater is being built for seating 800 persons, to replace the Grande on West Jefferson avenue, near West End. Mrs. Emma Lancaster, owner of the Grande, which has been managed by her son, Joseph Lancaster, and which was found inadequate to care for increasing patronage of that district, is owner of the new house which will be known as the Emma Lancaster theater. E. Von Knopke is the architect. It will have a 32-foot proscenium arch. The equipment will cost about $10,000. It is planned to have the house opened by April 15. Mrs. Lancaster is one of the oldest residents of Detroit's Delrey district and was one of the pioneers in providing entertainment in that section. She established a small moving picture theater eight years ago.

DETROIT BRIEF NOTES.

"Hypocrites" at the Washington theater, Detroit, Sunday, Feb. 28, played to about 8,000 people at 25 and 15 cents, breaking all records.

Abraham Carlos, special representative of the Box Office Attraction Co., of New York City, was a Detroit visitor on March 3 and 4.

George Weeks, manager of the Detroit Universal Film Company, left Saturday, March 6, for Chicago. From there he went to Kansas City. He will be gone about four weeks during which time he will visit the cities of Denver, Grand Canyon, Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco and Salt Lake. During his absence Ray Branch, assistant manager, will have charge of the affairs at the Detroit Universal office.

The Metro Film Corporation, of New York, has incorporated in Michigan. The capital stock is $30,000, and the principal stockholders are C. N. Davies and J. A. Fitzgerald. Mr. Fitzgerald was one of the large stockholders of the original Detroit Universal Film Co. He is a member of the board of directors of the New York company.

John H. Kunsky has added another room to his suite of offices in the Dime Bank building. It is No. 2205. It is being occupied by the Publicity Department, and will also be the office of the Weekly Film News, a Kunsky house organ. Howard O. Pierce is in charge of these departments.

The Plaza Theater Company, Detroit, has been incorporated for $9,000 to operate the Plaza on East Jefferson avenue. The men controlling the stock are John P. Church (house manager) and Fred H. Parker.

"February was the biggest month the Globe, West Grand River avenue, has had since I opened," said Manager Roy Bishop. Before Mr. Bishop took the Globe, two companies had tried to operate it. Mr. Bishop took hold over a year ago and has been "doing things" ever since. Not only does he give them a good show for the money, but Mr. Bishop is himself one of the attractions. He is accommodating, courteous and so watchful of the little things that everybody in the district thinks that the Globe is the only bright spot on the west side of town. Men like Mr. Bishop are just what the motion picture industry needs.

Manager Smith of the New Empire is back after a four weeks' illness. Although he lost over 50 pounds in weight, he says he is feeling "finer than fiddlesticks."

Manager Kaliska of the Royal theater is gradually breaking away from the blood and thunder pictures which have been shown at that playhouse three weeks out of five. Instead he is showing the more educational and refined pictures, such as appears at the Liberty, Empress and Garden theaters. "I was under the impression that the class of people who came to the Royal would not appreciate the finer grade of films, but in the past two weeks the Royal has been doing capacity with Paramount pictures, which shows that the people do prefer the good things."

The Pallister Theater Co., Detroit, has incorporated for $10,000. The stockholders are Julia H. Finster, L. M. Hoffman and C. G. Finster. The Pallister theater has been operating for several years. It is located in the North Woodward district of Detroit. The seating capacity is now being enlarged.

MICHIGAN PICTURE NOTES.

By the Northwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE Venetian theater at Coldwater makes much of the point that it does not present inferior pictures under publicity given to high class pictures. Manager James McCabe gave a benefit at the Vaudette at Mt. Pleasant for the pipe organ fund of the M. E. church. The Princess at Albion has been giving a glass dish with each ticket sold to a woman. The Bijou at Benton Harbor is a member of the local chamber of commerce and thinks the fact is worth advertising. Knights of Pythias in Menominee sponsored the exhibition of "Damon and Pythias" at the Menominee theater.

CORUNNA BOARD BARS SUNDAY SHOWS.

Members of the Corunna Improvement Association, at a banquet, showed by a rising vote that they were willing that D. R. Salisbury, of Owosso, should operate his moving picture house in Corunna on Sundays, but unfortunately for Salisbury the majority of the members of the village board are opposed to seven-day shows.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Negotiations had begun at Hartford whereby J. M. Meade probably would sell the Gem theater to Rev. J. Bennett, pastor of the Christian church.

F. E. Osborne has opened a moving picture show in the Hakes building at Reading.

Construction of A. J. Gilligham's new Strand in Grand Rapids is expected to begin about May 1. The theater will cost $50,000 and will have a fine pipe organ.

The Maxwell auto industrialog drew 1,000 persons to the Bijou at Iron Mountain.

C. S. Kuhlman, of the Rex theater at Jackson, has purchased a site at 138-140 West Main street upon which he eventually will erect a moving picture theater.

Construction of W. H. Arthur's new theater at Marshall has begun.

Lester E. Matt, formerly owner and manager of the Della theater in Flint will be the manager of the new picture house, which the Elk Photoplay company of that city will open at 507-509 South Saginaw. The theater will seat between 800 and 900. The Elk company has been granted a charter by the secretary of state to do business with a capital stock of $20,000.

A new opera house is to be constructed at Sebewaing, it is reported.

The Auditorium at St. Clair hereafter will be known as the Strand. A picture policy somewhat akin to that of the New York house of the same name will be attempted.

Joseph Nejem has purchased the Air Dome and Air Dome store on Washington street in Grand Haven.

The new policy of the Franklin theater at Saginaw, now a Marcus Loew house, is to give three shows daily at 10 cents for matinees. An hour and a half picture show will precede the afternoon vaudeville bill.

Leslie Mitchell's moving picture show at Galesburg has been closed. Local papers say he left hastily and creditors asked the aid of the sheriff.

Thomas F. Carter and Bert Beaudoin have opened a moving picture show in the town hall at Gay.

Lipp & Cross, owners of the Garden theater in Battle Creek, are planning the erection of a new house to be operated in conjunction with the Garden.

Fred Patterson has remodeled the Temple theater at Portland.

Manager McLaren of the Colonial at Jackson has inaugurated a series of Wednesday "Baby Matinees."

Cleveland Exhibitors Up

Moving Picture Men Have Decided to Make Stand Against Shackles of Over-Legislation—Threaten to Use Greatest Power in Cleveland, Their Curtains, Against Building Department's Non-Motor Clause.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture exhibitors and operators, at a meeting in Weber's hall, Superior avenue, Cleveland, called upon members of city council to remedy what they termed the "shackles of over-legislation." Though they have never previously found it necessary to take their business affairs before the people, the exhibitors made it plain they would use their curtains as a political measure unless discretion is used in ordinances tending to regulate the film theater.

The meeting was called, with special request for the presence of councilmen, in protest of a recent building department order that motors be detached from projecting machines in the operating booths of Cleveland's 175 picture theaters. Every theater in the city was represented by its owner or operator. At the meeting half of the council was present. S. E. Morris, president of the local Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, served as chairman.

For the edification of councilmen who are unfamiliar with the situation which has arisen concerning motor attachment, Ben J. Sawyer, proprietor of the Manhattan theater, delved into a brief history of the measure which the building department proposed to enforce. The clause for removal of motors was written into the state building code in the fall of 1911, he said, and since that time has remained figurative, until the notice just received by each manager.

"The building department construes this measure to affect theaters built since 1911," said Mr. Sawyer. "All picture shows built previous to that time can use their motors without disturbance. The department takes no cognizance of the fact that some of the greatest inventive minds in the world have been at work on and have perfected moving picture projecting machines to make them absolutely safe from fire or other danger since that time. The department maintains there is less danger with a hand-cranked machine than with a motor-driven. We absolutely refute this and the instance of nine out of ten mishaps in the state prove our stand."

Mr. Sawyer had just returned from Columbus, where he conferred with Thomas P. Kerns, state inspector of factories and workshops and with officials of the insurance department concerning the safety and practicability of motors. He cited to the state officials figures proving that the majority of fires in the booths were caused either by careless operators or difficulties encountered with a hand-cranked machine. Mr. Kerns and the insurance department officials agreed the non-motor clause should be dropped from the statutes in the building code revision now before the legislature.

"Our committee appared before the director of safety, the commissioner of buildings and his subordinates recently and was told that even though there was no state law against motors the city has the alternative of 'home rule' and can enact council legislation to force motors from our theaters," Mr. Sawyer continued. "No one familiar with picture projection can question the safety of the modern machines now in use. We simply ask each councilman to inspect the theaters, realize the advantages and safety of motor attachment and form their opinions afterward on the advisability of any measure which may be put before them at a later time."

The building department was sharply criticized by both managers and operators for laxity of examination of operators. Councilman Woods offered the suggestion that an examining board, composed of expert operators, theater proprietors and city appointees handle the licensing of operators, so that greater care may be exercised.

GENERAL FILM MAKES APPEAL.

Carries Its Fight With Lake Shore Film and Supply Company to Higher Court.

Cleveland exchange men and exhibitors are interested in the outcome of the legal battle between the Genral Film company of New York and the Lake Shore Film and Supply company of Cleveland. The case was recalled to mind a week ago by the appeal filed in United States district court of appeals, Cincinnati. The General Film company asks the upper court to reverse the finding of District Judge Clarke of Cleveland, who sustained a motion to dismiss a bill of discovery filed by the company against Joseph H. Sampliner, of Cleveland, to submit it the bill of assignment which was given him by the Lake Shore company. The bill calls for the payment of $303,000, which is three times the amount of the damage alleged by the Lake Shore Company as having been sustained from the General Film through an alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The suit for damages is still pending.

LITTLE LIGHT BUT BIG KICK.

Window panes were shattered and frames demolished while a number of employes had narrow escapes when seventy-five pounds of gunpowder exploded recently at the French China company plant, Sebring, Ohio. The pottery officials decided recently to send an exhibit to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. They concluded they would have moving pictures made of the work done in the plant. A film company was engaged to make the pictures and what was supposed to be flashlight powder was brought in large quantities. Used in minute quantity the powder failed to give the required light and the operators decided to test it. Throwing about seventy-five pounds on the ground outside the plant they touched it off with a long fuse. The explosion that followed put an abrupt end to the filming of the plant until some real flashlight substance was secured.

OTHER OHIO NOTES.

Lee's theater, Ravenna, is making a special play to theater parties from out of town, regulating its shows to the interurban car schedules.

The management of the Lyric theater, Lima, Ohio, contributed the proceeds of one night's show to Ralph Williams, a crippled youngster.

Moving pictures have been adopted in Youngstown schools as social center entertainment. Historical and geographical films were shown at the Princeton school entertainment a week ago.

The Family theater, Salem, Ohio, has secured a special set of stage scenery to be used in "framing" the pictures which that house shows.

The Youngstown Telegram entertained its newsboys at each of the picture and vaudeville theaters in that city recently.

The Grand, Mt. Vernon, has shifted its policy to feature pictures, starting March 1 with a Paramount.

The Bijou theater, Xenia, is nothing if not frank. In a recent advertisement in local newspapers the management announced: "People of Xenia don't seem to realize what kind of a show we have on Fridays. Why don't you take our word and come out to-night and see. We will have to show to more people than we have been showing to on Fridays or get a cheaper program for that day."

MAINE CONSIDERING BOOTH REGULATING ACT

Representative Bonney Introduces Bill to Compel Use of Fire-Proof Operating Booths.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent to the Moving Picture World.

REPRESENTATIVE BONNEY, of Bowdoinham, has introduced into the Maine legislature an act relative to the use of the cinematograph. The act provides that no cinematograph or similar apparatus involving the use of a combustible film more than ten inches in length shall be exhibited in any building used for an entertainment, whether the building has been licensed or not, unless the apparatus shall be placed in an enclosure or booth consisting of a steel frame-covered with asbestos wood. This act shall not apply to any cinematograph operated with only cellulose acetate films not more than one and one-fourth inches in width and using only an enclosed incandescent lamp.

LENTEN ATTRACTION AT PARK THEATER, BANGOR.

The Park showed the seven-part motion picture of Pope Pius X and the Vatican last week as a special Lenten feature, and advertised the hours at which the picture would be presented so that those who had scruples about attending a non-religious entertainment in Lent could see this picture alone. There were many who took advantage of this offer, coming to the theater at the hours advertised, and leaving when the picture was finished. Manager Bogrett is contemplating an entire Lenten program for some week in the near future.

The Park theater distributed on a recent Saturday afternoon and night to every patron of the house, one of the latest puzzles, "T'zer." Prizes for its solution were given to the first ten adults and the first ten children who brought the correct answers to the box office Monday afternoon. For the first five correct answers handed in by adults and children, a ticket good for one month to the Park was awarded. The next five received free tickets for three weeks; the next five, free tickets for two weeks, and the last five, tickets for one week. The management of the Park bought 2,500 of these puzzles.

BABY DAY AT LEWISTON.

The Empire theater, at Lewiston, had a baby day last Wednesday afternoon and prizes were awarded to all sorts of pretty youngsters, including babies with the blackest hair, reddest hair, curliest hair, the blackest baby, the baby with the best physique, lightest weight baby for its age, heaviest baby for its age, baby who yelled the loudest, the comedian and the best behaved baby. The baby show certain was a great attraction for hundreds of mothers and other spectators.

BRIEFER NOTES FROM MAINE.

The Keith house, at Portland, reports that business keeps up at record clip. The accounts show that the first two months of 1915 have surpassed any two previous months in the history of the theater.

Bartley McCullum, of the Lubin Film company, of Philadelphia, is in Portland for a two weeks' visit with relatives.

Greely's theater, at Portland, is giving away souvenir spoons—the kind bearing the state seal. They are given away one afternoon of each week, and each state is selected for each week. The spoons are given to the first 200 ladies who enter the playhouse. Patrons are advised not to miss a single week, and to make the complete collection of all the forty-eight states.

The New Lewiston theater advertises eight big vaudeville acts and nine reels of pictures at the same popular price, matinees 10 cents, evenings 10 and 20 cents.

A new picture house to be erected in the western part of the state is the Gem theater, at Lisbon Falls. It will have 350 seats and will be one of the best smaller theaters in that part of the state.

The Park theater, at Bangor, managed by Stephen Bogrett, of the Keith company, is undergoing alterations on the outside. The pilasters will be adorned with twelve powerful arc lights, which will make that part of the city "the great white way" of Bangor.

Harry Stillwell, of Jackman, Me., has reopened his theater, which has been closed during the winter owing to lack of electric power, which could not be supplied owing to the fact that the water was too low in the river to supply it. Mr. Stillwell's theater is using General Film service.

The Star theater, at Corinna, has opened with Universal service two nights a week, Wednesday and Saturday.

F. N. Sawyer, of Southeast Harbor, proprietor of the Bryant theater, was in Bangor during the week and reports good business.

Charles Haines and Charles Wyman, managers of the Park theater, Dexter, were in Bangor during the week to attend "A Pair of Sixes" at the Bijou theater. They were accompanied by Mrs. Haines and Mrs. Wyman. Business is fine at the Park, they report.

F. W. Swett, of the Nicholas Power company, of New York, was a visitor to Bangor on business this week.

Mitchell Granby, representing the Fox Film corporation, of Boston, Mass., was a visitor to Bangor this week.

SONS OF PILGRIMS DISLIKE EDISON PICTURE OF FOREBEARS

Think "Landing of the Pilgrims," Misrepresents Historical Facts.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANY of the descendants of the Pilgrims who reside in and around Plymouth, Mass., are extremely indignant at what they claim is a misrepresentation of history in a moving picture film produced by the Edison company for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition and entitled "The Landing of the Pilgrims."

They claim that certain scenes in the film are historically inaccurate. Among them are:

First—Samoset, "the white man's friend," is shown on a roan mare, greeting Myles Standish, when, as a matter of fact, Plymouth residents claim, there were no horses in those days.

Second—Women are shown in the first boatload of landing Pilgrims, when, it is claimed, there were no women in the first party and the Mayflower came no nearer Plymouth than Provincetown Harbor.

Third—An Indian skirmish is one of the scenes, but Plymouth folks say that there were no Indian skirmishes, a peace treaty having been concluded with the Indians on Thursday, March 22, 1621, which lasted for fifty-five years.

The pictures were recently made at Plymouth, when an Edison director and a corps of actors invaded the town.

NEW MEDFORD SOCIETY WOMAN HELPS GOOD CAUSE.

The residents of West Medford, Mass., are divided in their opinions against the granting of a moving picture license to R. T. Brown, who had planned to give moving picture exhibitions in Holton Hall. The churches are practically unanimous against the introduction of pictures into the town because of the questionable influence they would have on the boys and girls of the community. Against these powerful town factors, Mrs. Sarah A. Connell, president of the West Medford Women's Club, representing a membership of seventy-five of the leading social workers and society women in the district, has come out unhesitatingly in favor of the granting of the license, and has offered her services as special city censor to see that the tone of the pictures is kept within the bounds of good taste and modesty.

WHAT THEY FEAR IN PICTURES.

Mrs. George O. Jenkins, a member of the State Federation of Women's Clubs legislative committee, says that the purpose of the proposed Massachusetts censorship bill is to prevent the dissemination of bad influences to the young people of Massachusetts. "Please don't let the impression get out that we don't see any good in the moving pictures," says Mrs. Jenkins. "They are a splendid thing and are fine as a means of keeping the children off the streets and out of the way of temptations and bad influences. We contend and we are ready to prove that some of the films run in the moving picture theaters of the state are harmful. Not all of them are bad, not even a large per cent, but enough of them are suggestive, vile, brutal and immoral enough to do great harm."

OTHER BOSTON NOTES.

A reduction in the prices of admission has been made at the Pleasant street theater, Worcester, Mass. Women and children can get seats in any part of the house during the day for five cents, while the price for men is ten cents. The night price is ten cents to all parts of the house, instead of fifteen cents, as in the past. E. W. Lynch, proprietor of the house, has installed a new staircase from the orchestra to the balcony.

It is rumored about Boston that the General Film company is seeking new quarters for their New England branch in the uptown district of Boston. Assistant General Manager Louis Reichert and New England Manager Edward J. Farrell were seen in company with a Boston real estate dealer viewing sites in the Pleasant street district. This will be pleasing to many of the exhibitors, as the present quarters of the company are miles away from the center of the city and are most difficult to reach.

The Fall River, Mass., Y. M. C. A. is exhibiting a larger number of moving pictures than any other Y. M. C. A. in New England, according to General Secretary H. E. Dodge. They show on an average of sixty reels a month. Afternoon and evening performances are given on each Saturday. At the conclusion of each show the patrons are given a small card advertising the show for the coming week.

Fire bells have been installed on each floor of the New England branch of the General Film company, at No. 218 Commercial street, Boston. This was done as the result of a suggestion of the investigators of the Massachusetts Fire Prevention commissioners.

Charles A. Howard has sold the Premier theater at Norwood, Mass., to O'Brien Brothers of that town.

John McHenry, who has been operator and manager of the Premier theater, Norwood, Mass., has taken up his new duties as assistant manager of the New theater, Portsmouth, N. H.

Nathan E. Goldstein, of the Goldstein Brothers Amusment company, of Springfield, Mass., was present at the runoff at the General Film company last week for the first time in two years. He announced to his many friends that he will be married on June 8 to Miss Anna Ginsburg, of Springfield, and contemplates a wedding trip to the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

During the absence of Manager J. A. Eslow, of the New England Universal Company, Assistant Manager Albert Shaller will direct the destinies of the office in a most capable manner.

Samuel Moscow, formerly proprietor of the Orpheum theater, North Cambridge, Mass., and more recently connected with the Eastern Theaters Company, of Boston, is now affiliated with the New England office of the United Film service, of which Fred B. Murphy is the proprietor.

Mr. Moscow will look out for the United interests throughout New Hampshire and Vermont.

Bill Gray, of the Gray and McDonough circuit, of Lewiston, Me., has added the Princess theater, Berlin, N. H., to his circuit of photoplay houses.

Kamuda and Lambert have taken over the Edisonia theater at Springfield, Mass., from the Globe Amusement company.

Sam Grand, of the Universal theater, Fitchburg, Mass., is preparing for the opening of his new house in Worcester, Mass.

Stanley Sumner is now picking the photoplays to be used by the houses controlled by the Eastern Theaters Company, in addition to his regular duties as manager of the Plaza theater at Salem, Mass.

D. R. Mahaffey, of the Proctor (Vt.) Y. M. C. A., has sent a complimentary letter to Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England office of the United Film Service, congratulating him in the quality of the educational reels released through the United program.

"A Daughter of Old Ireland," "For Ireland's Sake" and "Come Back to Erin," all of which were produced in Ireland and feature Gene Gauntier, have been in great demand for St. Patrick's Day shows in New England.

It is rumored that the Goldstein Brothers, of Springfield, are contemplating the erection of a new theater in Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Manager L. M. Boas, of the Academy of Music, Fall River, reports that the Box Office Attraction Company feature, "A Fool There Was," broke all records during its run at his house.

Manager Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, spent a few days of last week in New York City.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE Lutz bill, providing for the organization, incorporation and management of mutual insurance corporations of certain classes, was passed by the Indiana House of Representatives. This measure is the outgrowth of the probable passage of the Sare workmen's compensation bill now awaiting passage in the senate. The bill provides a means by which employers may organize mutual benefit associations to protect themselves under the workmen's compensation bill. The compensation bill does not make this provision, although it permits the organization of such companies.

The Temple, a new moving picture house, has opened in Macy. The house is modern in every respect and played to capacity at each performance on the opening day.

If present plans materialize Mishawaka will have a new theater with a seating capacity of 800. A well known independent motion picture man of Chicago was recently there in consultation with members of the Masonic Temple association and wants the association to remodel the Masonic Temple block so as to make room for an up-to-date moving picture house. He desires to execute a long lease and show high grade independent pictures. This is the second time a like proposition has been made and it appears as though the deal would materialize. This would give Mishawaka three theaters, the new theater, the Century and the Princess. Business men of that city view the theater proposition with much favor, believing that with more amusement more business will be kept in the city.

The A. B. C. Comedy company, composed of ten persons, is giving a different show every night in connection with the three reels of pictures at the Switow theater in Martinsville. The prices remain the same, ten cents for adults and five cents for children.

Manager Dunn, of the K. of P. theater, Greensburg, will change the policy of the house and show high class moving pictures.

Featured Mitchel Mark

Buffalo Picture Magnate Praised By Leading Newspaper of His City—Controls Up-to-the-Minute Picture Houses from Gotham to Ottawa—Cities Where Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises Have Houses—Charitable Roof Garden Attractions.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World, 23 Victoria Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

A SPECIAL writer on the Buffalo Times, Kate Burr, recently devoted a page to Mitchel H. Mark of that city, who, according to Miss Burr, "now controls up-to-the-minute movies from Gotham to Ottawa." A picture of Mr. Mark and illustrations were used. Mr. Mark came from a prosperous family of Greenville, S. C. After various experiences he and his brother, Moe Mark, engaged in a successful hat business in Buffalo. In those days they amused the citizens by freak advertising. One time they advertised for a thousand cats. Another time they asked for a team of white horses to be driven about the streets by a red-haired young woman. Mitchel Mark later made a fortune in the automatic phonograph business, which he sold out in 1907. He then opened the Theater Comique, in Boston, one of the first moving picture houses in the country.

The writer says Mr. Mark depends on his own judgment rather than that of others. When his company proposed to build the Strand theater, New York, wiseacres predicted failure, but time has shown that the success of this project has exceeded his greatest expectations. The New Victoria and Palace, palatial moving picture theaters, are his latest Buffalo houses. The Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises have houses in Syracuse, Lynn, Mass.; Worcester, Boston, Philadelphia, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Detroit and other cities. The Times writer paid a beautiful tribute to Mr. Mark's home life. She also explained his co-operation with the National Civic Federation in furnishing roof garden attractions to New York working girls at nominal prices. Mr. Mark says the picture show has a moral tendency, because father, mother and children may spend the evening together at the theater. He also believes the pictures will be used more extensively in schools.

In conclusion, Mr. Mark, in the interview, says in part: "In my theaters I show only clean plays, artistically staged, and voicing pure, clean sentiment. Also travel pictures which bring foreign countries to us, now that the war has stopped continental wanderings."

BUFFALO CHANGES LICENSE FEE FOR THEATERS.

Members of the Buffalo Aldermanic committee have voted in favor of an ordinance amendment so that moving picture and other theaters will pay a license fee based on seating capacity. This will make the license fee range from $50 to $100 instead of at a flat $100, as is now.

CRITICISES "THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS."

The Buffalo Enquirer says there are inaccuracies in a certain film showing the landing of the Pilgrims. These pictures were reproduced for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The picture has also been criticised in Plymouth, Mass.

SHORTER BUFFALO ITEMS.

G. S. Schlesinger, manager of the Regent theater, Buffalo, has just given the Buffalo correspondent a subscription to the Moving Picture World. Mr. Schlesinger is an experienced show man and originates many successful plans to attract the crowds. His house draws from a prosperous residential district. His lobby displays are not sensational, but artistic and effective. His plan of using a series of photographs of moving picture stars on his programs is proving popular. Patrons are keeping a collection of these photographs and his idea is quite a fad in Buffalo.

F. S. Hopkins, manager of the Victor Film service of Buffalo, is on a month's visit at the Universal City, Los Angeles. In Mr. Hopkins' absence his place at the Victor headquarters is taken by E. M. Baird.

One hundred school children recently enjoyed "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," an Edison film in two parts, at the Happy Hour theater, Buffalo. They were the guests of Walter C. Moon, manager.

John Bunny, the famous Vitagraph artist, who appeared in person with his own company at the Star theater, Buffalo, visited St. Vincent's orphanage in that city. Mr. Bunny told the youngsters funny stories and treated them with his famous smiles. He also visited Elbert Hubbard, the Roycrofter, at East Aurora, N. Y. Dr. P. C. Cornell, manager of the Star, gave Mr. Bunny wide publicity in the Buffalo newspapers.

An ordinance has been introduced with a view to barring moving picture shows from Delaware avenue, Albany, N. Y.

Onmann Bros. have bought land for a theater in Lyons, N. Y. The house will cost about $10,000 and seat 750 persons.

At a test for moving picture operators in Rochester, N. Y., there were a series of written questions. The candidates also had to show their practical knowledge of a picture machine.

A. L. Merritt and Ralph Blouvet, of Friendship, N. Y., have bought the family theater in Le Roy, N. Y., from W. H. Hampton.

H. E. Hammond is building a moving picture theater in Eighteenth street, Erie, Pennsylvania.

A report from Phoenixville, Pa., says that Morris P. Kulp, proprietor of the Savoy theater, of that place, was recently assaulted by an employe, who had to pay a fine.

The Dunkirk, N. Y., Herald-Observer argues that a federal commission for censoring moving picture films is unnecessary.

The Grand theater at Ilion, N. Y., has been turned into bowling alleys, etc.

Mark Klaw, of Klaw & Erlanger, in a recent visit to Utica, N. Y., said there were too many theaters in that and other cities and as a result the show business was suffering.

A report from Newburgh, N. Y., says that at Walden, near there, a larger moving picture house may be erected on the site of the Majestic theater.

The Harton Theater Company, of Pittsburgh, will begin work this month on a new theater on Railroad avenue, Elmira, N. Y.

Max M. Oppenheim has prepared plans for a $25,000 moving picture theater at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Buffalo recently had a public donation day to aid the unemployed there. The moving picture theaters carried advance announcements of the event.

Buffalo men are considering a plan to build a $75,000 moving picture theater at 119 Main street, Lockport, N. Y. A lease of the property has been secured.

The operation of moving pictures on Sundays in Fulton, N. Y., is being opposed.

Rev. Samuel W. Steele of Oswego, N. Y., is opposing Sunday shows in that city.

The Buffalo News recently said a certain Western man was planning to sell "Syndicated" sermons which would be deliver in phonographs and illustrated by means of moving pictures.

Capacity Basis Tax

Norfolk, Virginia, City Council Is Considering Adjusting License Tax on Theaters, As Is Done in Montreal, According to Number of Seats—Present Rate Is $150 a Year—Propose Levying Thirty-Five Cents a Seat—Will Produce Bigger Income.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT is probable that the tax as now levied on moving picture houses in Norfolk will be changed as the effect of a discussion held recently by the finance committee of the City Council. Theaters may be taxed according to the seating capacity and this, it is said, will increase rather than decrease the revenue from this source. The smaller houses will have to bear a lighter taxation while the larger theaters will yield a bigger tax. This will more than offset the decreased tax on smaller houses and will bring the total revenue somewhat over the present income. The graduated rate of taxation was advocated by Attorney Daniel Coleman, who represented five of the smaller theaters. He proposed a rate of approximately 35 cents a seat, and said that he didn't think it feasible to tax all theaters alike irrespective of their size, as some can seat 200, while others have seating accommodations for 1,500 or more. The present rate is $150 a year on all houses. Under the new rate a 200-seat house will pay $70 a year, while a 1,500-seat house will have to contribute $525. Definite action on this matter was deferred until a later meeting, when the opinions of the big theater properties will be heard.

TRAVEL PICTURE DE LUXE.

Many Thousand Feet of "Girl from Dixie" to Be Filmed—Shows Travel Scenes.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHAT is declared to be the largest commercial moving picture contract ever made in the history of the business, was closed recently by A. E. Irons, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, which has done some large things in commercial work as well as in handling current news pictures. The contract is with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and is for 35,000 feet of film, which will picture the travels of a pretty girl, to be known as "The Girl from Dixie," from Mammoth Cave to places all over the world. The Mammoth Cave of Kentucky is the starting point of the trip, being located, of course, on a branch of the L. & N., and the travels of the "Girl from Dixie" thence all over the world via the railroad and its connections will be shown. The first film was taken recently and was exhibited last week at New Orleans, where it is said to have attracted much attention. J. Lawsipple is in charge of the project for the L. & N., and the serial promises to demonstrate new possibilities for commercial work of high advertising.

PARAMOUNT GIVES EXCLUSIVE LOCAL RIGHTS IN CINCINNATI.

A rather important and highly satisfactory arrangement, to both parties concerned, was effected in Cincinnati when A. M. Miller, in charge of the local branch of the Box Office Attraction Company, closed a contract giving to the association of leading houses in this city handling the Paramount program exclusive local service. This lands at a single blow a group of the leading houses for Mr. Miller, and gives to these houses, on the other hand, assurance of the use of the attractive features regularly released under the Box Office brand.

WILL MAKE PICTURES FOR USE OF SURGEONS.

The International Film Products Company, of Cincinnati, which has been doing some work in the commercial moving picture field, has been reorganized and new capital has been interested. John Vogelpohl, a well known master plumber, who is the principal owner of the Park theater, North Side, has become interested, and will be president of the company, with Dr. E. H. Thompson as vice-president and Harry Kruse, manager of the Park, as secretary and treasurer.

The company has made arrangements for taking moving pictures of the work of a considerable number of noted surgeons for the purpose of reproducing their methods for the benefit of other surgeons all over the world, as well as of students in medical colleges. Cincinnati is one of the great medical centers of the country and offers ample facilities for this particular branch of work. Other branches of scientific work will also be photographed.

ASKS GUIDANCE OF COURT.

In order to protect itself from the possibility of loss through the litigation involving the property which it leases, referred to some time ago in these columns, the Cincinnati Family Theater Company has applied to the United States district court for guidance. It sets forth the fact that it holds its lease of twenty years of the heirs in possession of the property, who have recently been adjudicated as not the true owners. The company's lease, according to its petition, began in August, 1910, the yearly rental being $17,000 for the first ten years and $20,000 thereafter, which indicates the high value placed upon the property, which is in the heart of the city.

The company has no interest in the outcome of the case, but desires to be protected in its payment of rental pending the final disposition of the litigation.

CINCINNATI BRIEFS.

A producer new in this vicinity has arranged for local representation in the person of Al W. Cross, of the Hudson Feature Film company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was recently in the city. The Faultless Feature Film company will act as Cincinnati branch of the Hudson company.

Edward Lux, manager of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film company and of the Universal Film company's local office, is one of the large group of film men who will be the guests of the Universal at Universal City on a visit to that part of the country, taking in the two California expositions as well.

Under the auspices of the Portsmouth Ohio, board of education, school children of that city had the opportunity recently to see moving pictures of the Panama Canal and of scenes around the San Diego and San Francisco expositions, free of charge. The same pictures were shown in the evening with an admission charge of ten cents. The high school auditorium was used and large audiences saw the pictures, whose educational value thus received the indorsement of the school authorities.

The Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati has added its voice to the number of those raised on behalf of state censorship as enforced in Ohio, its board of directors approving the report of the legislative committee protesting against the proposed repeal of the censorship law.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 6, 1915.

J. L. Marentette, manager of the Atlanta office of the Universal Company, was in Jacksonville recently, paying a visit to the local office.

JACKSONVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By Leon Louis, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Strand Amusement Company is erecting a theater for colored people at the corner of Jefferson and Ashley streets here. The location is in the heart of the colored section of the city. The opening is to be held in next month or in May. Work is going along on the building and it will be ready in a few weeks for the interior work.

The structure is 70 feet frontage by 105 feet depth, facing on Ashley street. The capacity of the house is to be more than 1,000.

Frank T. Montgomery went to New Orleans this week on business.

Geo. Schmidt, manager of the Prince theater, has installed a motor driven three-sheet revolving announcer board in the front of his house. With this new device and the intensely high lighted lobby he will have one of the best display lobbies in the South.

The Pastime theater runs pictures with a program of vaudeville and musical numbers. Mr. Watt puts on a big show for the money and it is his aim to please all classes of patrons, both the ladies and the gentlemen.

The Phoenix has been playing to good business, with pictures.

The Theatrical Club will open on Tuesday evening next. Big preparations are being made for the opening. The ball players, members of the Sheesley Greater Shows carnival, and other transient members of the profession are to be present at the opening.

STUDIO JOTTINGS.

The weather the first of the week was bad but the last two days have been like spring weather should be and Florida seems to be settling into its ideal stride. The Kalem directors are busy at work, and it is thought that work will soon recommence at the Lubin Southern Studio in a few days, when Mr. A. D. Hotaling returns from Philadelphia. Carpenter work is being completed at the Lubin studio and some of the players are remaining here, including Miss Mae Hotely, who has been taking a rest for the last few weeks.

Director Robert G. Vibnola, of the Kalem, is recovering from the effects of a throat operation a few days ago. The operation was performed on the tonsils and palate of his mouth and for a number of days after Mr. Vibnola found eating very difficult, but he is well enough to be at work again. Mr. Harry Milarde directed during the absence of Mr. Vignola.

Some of the Kalem players appeared at the Mask Ball held by Mr. George Mason, in front of the Mason Hotel, on Julia street the latter part of February. The ball was given to boost the big State Fair project for Jacksonville and Florida and one block of the city pavement was roped off for the dancers. A band furnished the music. The distribution of prizes was postponed until another dance, which is to be given on the 17th of March. Two of the Kalem people would undoubtedly have won the major prize for the best dressed couple, had the prizes been awarded.

Miss Katharine La Salle is at the Kalem studio for the picture "An Innocent Sinner." Her mother, Mrs. Mary A. La Salle is with her. Miss La Salle has done good work on the professional stage, having appeared in "The Master Mind," with Edmund Breese, "The Yellow Ticket," and recently with John Mason in "Big Jim Garrity." Her work here has been considered excellent and she has made friends readily. Miss La Salle has spent a number of winters in Florida in past years, at St. Petersburg.

"Babe" Hardy, who was recently with the Lubin studio, has returned from two weeks' trip to New York City. Raymond McKee, with whom he went to New York, remained there.

NEW POLICY AT EMPIRE, MONTGOMERY'S LEADING THEATER

Alabama House Will Play Features—Experience With Posters—New Front and Lobby.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southern Newspaper Bureau.

Manager H. C. Farley, of the Empire theater, Montgomery, Ala., has announced a number of decided changes to be made in the physical appearance of that popular motion picture house as well as in the policy of the organization.

The policy heretofore has been to give big features four days each week and fill in the other three days with short reel pictures, with the famous Lewis Sisters orchestra as a daily feature. In the future nothing will be shown in the largest exclusive motion picture house of the State except feature films. In discussing rumored improvements in the theater, Manager Farley talked enthusiastically of the outlook of the future. The encroachments of the motion picture houses upon the field of the so-called legitimate theaters, Mr. Farley mentioned, has brought the pictures into decided popular favor and the legitimate plays are falling into neglect. This condition is explained, in a measure, in the fact that practically all of the old stage favorites are being rewritten into film plays, and the stars of the speaking stage (or the legitimate, as the professional player likes to refer to it), and the men and women who made the film plays popular, are busily engaged each week in acting before the camera the parts that have been favorably received by the people. These legitimate plays that have proven popular with the people are being made into film plays of numerous reels and the presentation of each play is accepted by the public as an adequate entertainment.

Heretofore, on feature days the pick of the feature films of the Paramount, World and Fox companies have been presented. In addition to these standard producers of film plays, Manager Farley has added the Alliance Company. Each day the general admission will be 10 cents, with children half price, and the gallery will be 5 cents.

Heretofore the feature days have been four out of the week. Each Saturday will be reserved for the representation of pictures that have proved popular with request returns of certain presentations and added new features. As an illustration of this policy, it was stated that the first return on request to be shown will be that of Vivian Martin in "The Wishing Ring." Another popular favorite that presents one of the greatest stars of the old legitimate stage that probably will be returned later is George Beban in "The Italian."

The posters provided for these filmed plays are survivors of the legitimate stage and do not appeal to the lovers of the "pictures." Numerous women, especially, recently looked over the posters of "The Italian" at the Empire theater and walked away. The posters failed to convey to them the splendid work of Beban and they did not care to go on the inside.

The entire front will be rearranged, the popular stucco work being a predominant feature. The present box office is to be eliminated, the office being placed directly in the center of the entrance way, with a commodious vestible in front and a roomy lobby between the vestibule and the actual entrance to the theater.

GLADSDEN, ALA., CITY COUNCIL PASSES THEATRE ORDINANCE.

The City Council of Gladsden, Ala., has passed a new theater and picture house ordinance. It is required that exits be opened at the rear of the auditorium and rules that standing room can not be sold without notifying the patron when the ticket is sold that he can not get a seat and that women must remove their hats after entering.

Managers are given 60 days in which to comply with the ordinance. The work of remodeling one theater was started to-day.

Society in Coquille Film

New Orleans Social Leaders Help Coquille Director Stage a Dance Scene—Creole Debutante Is Author of the Story and Society Responded to the Call—Social Tradition in Southern City Said to Be Unconventional.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southern Newspaper Bureau.

A MOVING picture play with members of the social smart set of New Orleans taking part in a pretty scene was recently accomplished by the Coquille Film company, of New Orleans. The writer of the scenario, Miss Caroline Wogan, debutante daughter of one of the old Creole families, was a participant in her own play, "Carnival in Black and White," a Mardi Gras comedy.

The tea garden of the St. Charles hotel, one of the social centers of the city, was the scene of this out of the ordinary event. A member of the company's board of directors, himself of the fashionable set in New Orleans, drew upon his friends and invited them to a "movie dansante" to participate as the animated background for the actors of the company.

Some forty of the most smartly gowned women and best dressed men in New Orleans, people whose names appear daily in the society columns of the newspapers, gladly responded and entered into the spirit of the occasion with full zest. Several were assigned parts, in which they acquitted themselves with credit. One couple in particular, arranged with the consent of the director, a little by-play that added to the scene.

In connection with the success of the Coquille company's presentation of "originals" in this society film it is noted that it is believed in New Orleans that no other city offers equal opportunity for such a portrayal, at least no other city in America, for New Orleans enjoys the reputation of having a society based on tradition, a very joyous, unconventional tradition.

NEW ORLEANS MAY HAVE IMMENSE PICTURE HOUSE

One of the Largest Theaters in This Country May Be Erected on Canal Street.

A 3,500 seat picture theater in Canal street is the newest thing for New Orleans, according to rumor, and the rumor is persistent. Whether it is one of the two powerful picture interests centered in New Orleans or a New York concern that is pushing the project so far has not been learned, though every indication points to a New Orleans firm, with the possible backing of outside capital.

C. R. Seelye, director general of sales for the World Film corporation, an efficiency expert, it was learned, recently made a report on the value of such an undertaking in New Orleans, this in line with his advocacy of big houses and big advertising to fill them. It is noted in this connection that New Orleans exhibitors at present do practically no advertising.

Mr. Seelye, while in New Orleans recently, was in conference with the interest said to contemplate the big venture. This interest had previously been reported to have under way plans for the erection of a picture house far in advance, both as to size and equipment, of present New Orleans houses. One of the biggest realty operators in the South has also been in conference with this interest, supposedly with reference to its acquisition of the site for the new house.

"THE GIRL FROM DIXIE" IN NEW ORLEANS.

Miss Marie Wilson, the "Dixie Girl" of the serial film being made by the Siple company for a big railroad, was in New Orleans last week en route to Cuba, where she will be filmed in that part of her travel story. On her return she will be seen in New Orleans, touring the vieux carre and being shown through the newer places of interest. Miss Wilson's travels are taking her through the South and it is expected that the film will prove of considerable value to that section in the way of advertising.

ITEMS FROM THE GULF STATES.

A. G. Shear, New Orleans manager for the Consolidated, has gone to Universal City to see, as he puts it, "how moving pictures are made." He joined Herman Fichtenberg, Southern exhibiting magnate, who has a large interest in the Consolidated in Chicago, and there took the Universal special to the new city. Mr. Shear will be away for four weeks.

The Mutual's New Orleans office has announced March 22 as the release date of the first of its Mutual "master pictures," two of which will be released each week. "The Quest," four reels, is the first of the new releases.

Manager Mumphrey, of the Majestic, which recently changed hands, has leased the Climatic, another suburban house, announcing that it would open under his management March 6. The house had been operating spasmodically for some time and had been closed for the last few weeks.

George Saik & Bros. have obtained control of the Majestic, one of the largest suburban houses in New Orleans, recently noted as having been sold at auction. March 27 is announced as the date for the opening under the new management.

J. L. Williams, of the Crescent City exchange, handling both machines and films, reports conditions good and rapidly improving, with a big boom due after Easter. Mr. Williams sees a bigger summer business than usual this year, reporting a number of summer houses preparing to reopen.

The first New Orleans suit by an exhibitor against a film house claiming damages resultant from alleged cancellation of contract, was filed in New Orleans last week. The suit is brought by Sid and Mose Levy against the William A. Fox Film corporation (formerly Box Office Attractions company), and is being watched with interest by film men, as its outcome will establish a precedent for their guidance no less than for the guidance of the exhibitors.

J. J. de Praslin, owner of the Princess, Lake Charles, La., and with interests in Orange, Tex., and elsewhere, is now planning a new picture house for Lake Charles, one which, he says, will be equal to any in any town the size of Lake Charles and superior to most. Mr. de Praslin's Lake Charles and Orange ventures have proven highly successful and it is on the strength of this success that he is extending.

The United Program Film service of Louisiana has signed "The Price He Paid" for a ten-day run in New Orleans, featuring Ella Wheeler Wilcox, on whose poem the play is built.

Louis E. Loeb, new manager of the Paramount, at New Orleans, is pushing Paramount Publicity. It was this feature of the Paramount service that he was specifically instructed to put within reach of the Southern exhibitors.

M. W. Lawrence, with Thanhouser, has just returned to New Orleans after a flying trip to Memphis. He is enthusiastic over conditions in general and in particular over "The Twenty-Million-Dollar Mystery," which he is now pushing. He is about to close for another big release, he says, and if his plans go through will put it on at the Crescent, regularly a legitimate house.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," Bert Levy's feature, is at the Crescent.

Simplex

GLUED TO THE SCREEN

This is the comment of an exhibitor who saw the marvelous motion picture production, The Birth of a Nation, at the Liberty Theatre last week.

THE LIBERTY and THE STRAND

The two largest and finest moving picture theatres in the world are using Simplex Machines. When the BEST PROJECTION is wanted, SIMPLEX MACHINES are chosen.

Read what the critics have to say of the projection at the Liberty:

The Morning World:

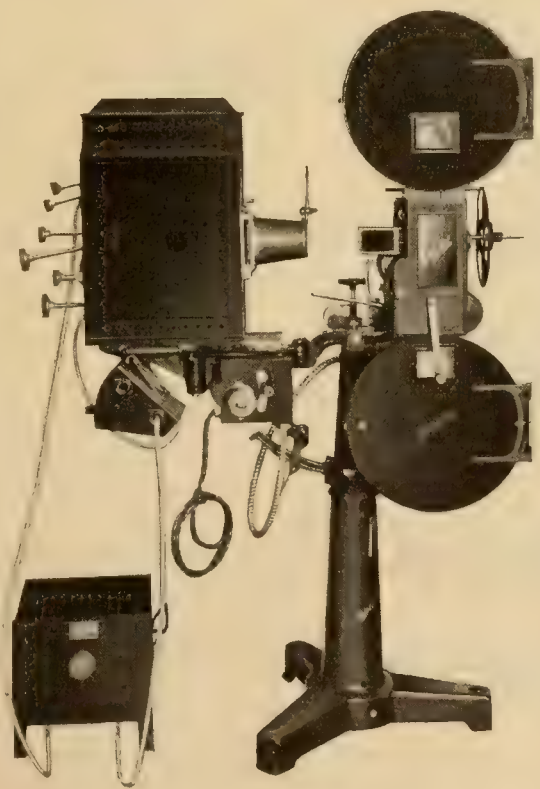
"Mechanically also the pictures seemed to have overcome many of the difficulties of previous screen plays. The pictures were steady, the lighting was excellent."

The New York Sun:

"A large audience which saw this first public showing last night went away with a belief that the production is a step forward in the demonstration of the scope and artistic values of the camera play."

The Morning Telegraph:

"Rev. Thomas Dixon proved to be an excellent press agent for his own wares, because he gave the film version an emphatic endorsement, remarking that it was the greatest moving picture ever produced in the entire world, 'either in this hemisphere or the other.' "



The Evening Mail:

"The Griffith pictures are given in two sections, and though they cover twelve reels, are so carefully projected and so wonderfully varied that they are not tiring. By the use of two projecting machines there are neither waits nor breaks in the films. As samples of photography alone these pictures are well worth seeing, many of them having the composition and depth and beauty of paintings."

The New York Times:

"The film as a film, it may be reported simply that it is an impressive new illustration of the scope of the motion picture camera."

The Evening World:

"This latest wonder of the camera assumes amazing proportions and acquires a sweep calculated to carry any audience off its feet."

A talk that cost a quarter of a million dollars

"I tell you, gentlemen—the thing can be done.

"People are learning the difference in motion pictures. You say to produce the type of picture I'm asking you for would cost you $20,000 a week.

"Well—what if it does!

"I will spend $5 000 a week to tell the truth about what you are doing—and the public will spend $50,000 a week to see your pictures."

THIS is a pretty literal report of a meeting in my office a good many months ago There were present, S. S. Hutchinson and J. R. Freuler, of the American Film Manufacturing Company; Adam Kessel and Charles O. Bauman, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation; D. W. Griffith, Chief Director of the Majestic Motion Picture Company; Felix E Kahn, of the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, and Crawford Livingston, of the Thanhouser Film Corporation

When these men talk, it means action. They are not theorists—not men drawn into this business from other fields; they are men made rich by moving pictures—because they know how to make the pictures the public wants.

These men own fourteen of the best-known moving picture companies in the world.

Their financial resources are practically without limit. Their organizations know no superior (and it takes years to build a successful moving picture organization—make no mistake about that).

What is most important, they know the moving picture business

I was sure that afternoon that if I could get them to combine in the production of Feature Films—the kind that take from an hour to an hour and a quarter to see—they would produce the greatest series of moving pictures the world has ever known.

They have done it!

From next week on you can see these pictures in a good theatre near your home

Two pictures will be released each week Sometimes it will be a screaming farce by the actors that have made "Keystone" comedies a drawing card from Portland, Maine, to Sidney, New South Wales

Sometimes a stirring drama of the famous studios of the "Flying A" brand.

Again there will be the thrill and excitement that you knew in the Million Dollar Mystery.

David W Griffith, the Director who gets $100,000 a year and used half a state as his studio, is giving himself heart and soul to his share of these great moving pictures

As for writers—there's Richard Harding Davis, for instance. But that's another story

I've just seen the first of the series—a Master-Picture it was called by the great critic who sat next me in the darkened room.

And he said it with beads of perspiration standing on his forehead

So Master-Pictures we are calling them to you.

But why go on? Can you wait to see them?

Can you?

You couldn't, if you'd seen the first one

If you want to see the first one sooner, tear this page out and take it to the picture theatre nearest your home

For any theatre in all this big country can get this series of feature films QUICK—if they put in the order now.

Watch this page next week for the story of the first

HOW'S THIS FOR SUCCESS?

This surely is convincing proof that Kriterion Service is the long sought for motion pictures. The kind that had to come on the market to satisfy the demand.

The great popularity of motion pictures themselves has permitted anything that has been made to get by. That day is over. Merit and nothing but merit counts. And if the pictures have this merit, nothing in the world can stop them from being successful. Kriterion has hit the keynote. Right from the jump they have gone hand in hand with success.

Here Are a Few Messages that Prove These Assertions:

When the Indianapolis Kriterion Film Service opened, Mr. Dressner, manager of that exchange, wired us:

"In the first hour open this morning, signed up two largest theatres in this territory."

Buffalo sent just as good news when they wrote:

"Kriterion pictures in this territory are a success without a doubt. Signing 'em up better than two a day."

Chicago in a very few words explained their phenomenal success:

"Kriterion crying need. Success on every hand."

Mr. Steen from Philadelphia in his usual "quick action" way got right on the long distance phone and said:

"Enter our order for the third print of everything."

From St. Louis, Mr. Cotter informed us:

"Kriterion hitting the high spots, everybody wants it."

"Live-Wire" Fred Meyer of Minneapolis in a few words told a volume:

"Kriterion Service having unprecedented success. This morning ten orders by wire alone; many more by mail."

To quote what all the other offices had to say would but merely be adding to these strong statements.

But Then, Why Shouldn't Kriterion Be a Success?

It has brains. It has the pictures and it has the players. There is at the business head as general manager and vice-president. Mr. Clements knows every little angle of the game and has been in it since its inception. He has mastered some of the biggest problems the business has presented. He has proven a genius in the executive end of the industry.

MR. B. E. CLEMENTS

MR. A. M. KENNEDY

as general manager of productions is making pictures for the Kriterion Service that actually make Kriterion live up to its name and bear out its slogan: "Decidedly Distinctive." There isn't a man in the motion picture business that doesn't know of the achievements of Mr. Kennedy.

ONLY THE MAID (March 22).—Ralph Stirling is a hard loser at a poker game and shoots one of the winners dead, escaping from the place to the street. He rushes around a corner almost colliding with Officer Carney, who looks carefully at him, and being ignorant of the murder, lets him pass. Stirling, in disguise, meets Beryl Tracy at the country club and they are attracted to each other, much to the discomfort of Hal Wright, who has been the favorite with Beryl. Under the name of Somers, Stirling gets into the girl's confidence and visits the Tracy house. Beryl's parents look with disfavor upon Somers, preferring Wright for their daughter. On the other hand, Beryl treats Wright indifferently and evidences her infatuation for Somers.

Maggie, the maid in the Tracy home, has a sweetheart, who is a policeman. Officer Carney is the blue-coated Romeo. Maggie tells him the family will be out to a dinner on the evening in question, and Carney says he will be on duty at the kitchen at the required time. As soon as Beryl and her parents leave to keep the dinner engagement, Maggie goes to Beryl's boudoir and tries on Beryl's new dress which Maggie has admired. She removes a letter which Beryl had tucked inside the folds of the dress. The letter is from Somers and to the effect that Beryl and he are to elope that evening. In the meantime, Beryl has left the dinner party using the pretext that she is ill. Maggie calls Wright on the telephone and tells him to hurry to Beryl's home at once. Then she calls in Carney who is near the back door. Heavily veiled, she allows Somers to embrace her, and when she knows that Carney is near, unmasks. Somers is taken aback. Carney enters, and after a hard battle, subdues Somers, whom he recognizes as a murderer. Beryl then realizes, and she goes to Wright's arms.

HANS AND HIS BOSS (March 23).—Just because the Widow Schmit has come into her husband's insurance money, Hans thought he would marry her. The widow didn't like him to the extent of marrying him, and liked him still less when he refused to dispose of a pail of beer with her. Her chance comes when, on the way to the bank to deposit her insurance money, she almost collides with Hans as he staggers out of a saloon with Carl, a friend, and also a mahogany polisher. She calls him to account when he visits her the next day, and to cover up matters, he tells her Carl is his boss, and he had to get intoxicated whenever Carl said so. She is incredulous and asks Hans to bring Carl to the house. In the meantime Hans has flirted with a pretty girl against the wishes of the widow.

When Carl comes to her home, the widow becomes infatuated by him. Hans is jealous, and when he attempts to assert himself, Carl, his "boss" tells him to leave the house, as there is much work to be done. Hans can do nothing but leave. He watches Carl and the widow exchange sweet nothings and picks up a stone to throw it through the window, but a policeman is conveniently at hand to prevent the stoning of the amorous Carl. Hans finally goes in and has an argument with Carl. Alternately they hide or are thrown into an empty flour barrel. Carl tells Hans he will witdraw from the race for $100, and Hans accepts the offer. Hans had previously taken the widow out for an auto ride and Hans was obliged to drive the car anywhere Carl directed, the "boss" having been picked up a short distance from the widow's house. Carl rode in the back seat with the widow while Hans acted as chauffeur. When the widow had been left at her house, Hans started the car toward the country. He stopped it in a lonely spot and the men engaged in fisticuffs for a while. Hans goes home and gets the $100 and brings it to Carl's store. Who does he see behind the counter but the pretty girl he flirted with on the street. His thoughts of the widow are banished forthwith and as Carl comes out and asks him for the hundred, Hans tells him he doesn't want the widow, because he is going to marry his clerk. Carl startles him by telling him the girl is his daughter, and if he wants her he will have to spend the hundred anyway. The widow then claims Carl and he tells her he is married and that his wife wouldn't stand for it. There is great excitement in the store, and the picture ends in a whirl of fun.

THE NEWLY RICH (March 24). The sudden acquisition of wealth invariably turns a person's head, and the Porters, now self-constituted "society" leaders and high "what-nots" in the codfish aristocracy of the town, would have nothing but a title marry their daughter. It didn't make any difference whether it was the heavyweight, lightweight or bantamweight title, so long as it was a title, so Thornton, who because of his ordinary name and pocketbook, had been denied the right to marry Mary Porter, decides to produce a titled personage for her. By an experiment, Thornton has found out that money is no object to the Porters. It must be a "dook" or a "barren" or a lord.

Bill, a tramp, looks good to Thornton, and he corrals Bill. Straightway, Bill is transformed into a titled European and is announced in the newspapers as "Lord Fitzpatrick." Of course, the Porters must entertain him at their home and Mr. Porter with "aristocratic" solicitude, goes to the Hotel Essex, where the Lord is staying, and invites him to his palatial home. Bill has made a great impression among the bell boys and pages and he is the cynosure of all eyes in the hotel. They agree on a day for the reception and Mr. Porter leaves, happy in the thought that he has roped the only lord that has visited the town in a generation.

Bill gets a limousine and goes to the Porter home, not before he has an argument over his hotel bill, however, as a result of which he barely escapes arrest. Thornton and his friends are invited to the reception and are there when Bill enters in all his finery. All are anxious to meet him, and for the moment Thornton is in the background. The table is set and the guests sit down. Despite his lessons in table manners given him by Thornton a day or so previous, Bill persists in playing a melody with his soup and drinking the water in the finger bowl. He is seated next to a very stout woman and in some manner or other he gets his feet tangled up with hers and there is trouble. When Bill mistakes a beauty spot for a fly and slaps her neck the guests leave in a hurry. Bill sleeps at the Porter home and in the morning, they are glad to get rid of him. Thornton is satisfied and after giving Bill back his old clothes is happy. Bill wends his way back to his old home—a side-door Pullman.

A THEFT IN THE DARK (Special—Three Parts—March 26).—Adventurous Lord Stranleigh has returned from Labrador, laden with the spoils, including a ship load of gold and the title to the mine. He is welcomed graciously by Lady Sinclair, who at once proposes a dinner and ball in Stranleigh's honor. He is introduced to Lady Sinclair's youngest sister, Genevieve, and also a a gay youngster known as Ralph Vernon. Stranleigh, who has been seeking a chance to propose to Lady Sinclair, thinks it the psychological time and puts the question, but Lady Sinclair cannot take him seriously and dispatches the matter with a tantalizing laugh. Lady Sinclair is called away to accompany a skating party and Lord Stranleigh is also invited. After a few contortions, uncontrollable, of course, he removes his skates and goes to a deserted part of the lake to nurse a few bruises. He is aroused by a sound in the hedge near him and upon investigating, sees Vernon and Genevieve engaged in amorous converse. Thinking he is intruding, he leaves the spot and the party eventually returns to Gaythorn Manor.

The ball in Stranleigh's honor is on New Year's Eve. A few seconds before twelve o'clock, the lights are dimmed, and on the stroke of the hour a beautiudl goddess steps from the large Michael Angelo clock, and tosses roses among the guests. She retreats to the clock and the lights are thrown up. Lady Sinclair interrupts the hand-shaking by suggesting that the dance go on. It is the Elizabethan period and Lady Sinclair is dressed as Elizabeth. She wears a handsome necklace of the purest pearls, valued at $10,000 pounds.

Lord Stranleigh and the hostess repair to the conservatory, and suddenly she discovers that her necklace has been stolen. A search of the vacated ballroom discloses nothing of the jewelry. Addressing the guests who are at dinner, Lord Stranleigh tells them that detectives from Scotland Yard will search everyone that morning, and although there are some remarks of protest against such a flagrant indignity which is certain to be caused the guests, all agree to the search. Soon after, Stranleigh overhears a telephone message from Vernon to a confederate in London, and by some clever work gets possession of the necklace which Vernon thinks he is handing to the confederate. To prevent an expose, Stranleigh promises Vernon immunity if he will leave the place. Vernon attempts to elope with Genevieve, but is frustrated. In appreciation, Lady Sinclair changes her name to Lady Stranleigh, and the Stranleigh series is pleasantly concluded.

THE PHANTOM THIEF.—Prize winner in "The Dramatic Mirror"-Edison Contest (March 27).—Among the many embryonic artists in the studio of M. Rafael in Paris, are Kenneth Turner and Ralph Cameron. Rafael, the master, passes from one to the other criticizing the work of his pupils. It is evident that he is displeased with the perfunctory work of Cameron, while he holds up Turner's drawing as a model for the class. With this the seeds of hatred and jealousy are sown in Cameron's vindictive self. In after years, in London, Turner and Cameron are thrown in contact by chance in an art gallery, where the latter coldly refuses to recognize an introduction to Turner.

Turner is in his studio painting, as his model, Nana, maintains a statuesque pose. It is very obvious that she is infatuated with Turner. As Lady Sylvia, with her parents, the Earl of Hawkesley and the Countess, are announced by his valet, Turner dismisses Nana for the day. As she leaves, Nana flashes a meaning glance at Sylvia. Turner is much impressed with Sylvia, whose apparent liking for him is just as intrinsic and strong. Subsequently, the portrait of Sylvia is completed, a masterpiece. Angered at the frequent visits of Sylvia to Turner's studio, Nana leaves and obtains a position as model in Cameron's studio. While there, she reads of the wonderful achievement of Turner in completing Sylvia's portrait, and of the rumor of a romance between Turner and his sitter. Nana and Cameron concoct a scheme by which they hope to get revenge. Nana goes to an East Side tenement and borrows a baby which she carries to Lady Sylvia telling her that she is Turner's deserted wife, and the baby is Turner's. Sylvia is horrified and sends a laconic note to Turner. When he calls for an explanation, she will not admit him. Turner is discouraged and breaking a promise made to Lady Sylvia that he would never allow her portrait out of his possession or exhibit it publicly, exhibits it at the salon at the Royal Academy, where Sylvia see it. The portrait is the cynosure of all eyes, and Cameron's ill feeling toward him has only been enhanced by Turner's added success. In the quiet of the midnight hour, a figure clothed in flowing garments with hood and mask, steals into the Academy, and steals the portrait. There is confusion and grief when the loss has been discovered.

As Nana is crossing a street she is knocked down by Sylvia's car. She is carried into Sylvia's home where she tells her she lied out of jealousy. At the same time, Sylvia receives her portrait with a note from Turner to the effect that his masterpiece is hers to do anything she pleases with it, as he has broken his promise to her. Sylvia is overjoyed and seeks out Turner, after she has placed the portrait back in its place in the Academy, however. They then come to an understanding.

KALEM.

THE GIRL OF THE MUSIC HALL (Special—Three Parts—March 22).—The opera which Fane considers his masterpiece turns out to be a flat failure. The man loses all interest in life. In an effort to divert Fane's thoughts from the subject, some friends compel him to accompany them on a slumming trip. The party visits an East Side music hall. The place is nothing more than a dive and Fane takes no interest in what passes until Ida, one of the singers, appears to do her "turn." To the composer's surprise, the girl has a marvelous voice.

Fane meets Ida later in the evening. His interest in her dies when he finds the girl uneducated and ignorant. Fane's indifference piques Ida and she watches him when he leaves the place. Her interest in Fane arouses the jealousy of Hagan, the "bouncer." In the quarrel which ensues, the man attempts to strike her. The following day, Ida appears before Fane and begs him to help her. In spite of himself, the girl interests the composer and he takes her in hand. While Fane undertakes her vocal training, Ida supports herself by securing a position in the chorus of a musical comedy company.

Hard work wins recognition for the girl. Hagan, meanwhile, has kept track of Ida. He follows her everywhere. Alan Glynn, an artist, and one of Fane's friends, returns from abroad. Glynn falls in love with Ida. The artist is ignorant of the girl's past. As time passes, Fane learns that he is also in love with Ida. Knowing of Glynn's affections for her, he keeps his own love secret. While the artist waits for the girl at the stage entrance one night, he meets Hagan. The latter informs Glynn about Ida's life in the East Side music hall.

Shortly afterwards, Ida, in discussing the future, informs her sweetheart of her desire to live in the country after their marriage. Glynn, however, declares that although he will always love her, he can never make her his wife. The man then tells her what he has learned from Hagan. Ida's love for Glynn turns to hate and loathing and she orders him away. Sick at heart, and feeling that the people of the slums cannot be worse than the friends she has made in her upward climb, Ida returns to the slums. Glynn and Hagan follow her. The men meet and a fight ensues. During the struggle, Glynn shoots and kills Hagan. With the murderer's arrest, he passes out of Ida's life forever. A few days later, Fane visits Ida in her old room in the East Side. He tells her of his love and asks her to be his wife. There comes to Ida the realization that it is Fane whom she has loved from the first and she becomes his wife.

HAM AMONG THE REDSKINS (March 23).—Because they accidentally save Mary from the Indians, Ham and Bud decide to become Indian fighters. To gain experience, the two plan to practice upon a small Indian as a starter. Finding an eight-year-old red-skin, they both attack him and almost succeed in licking the lad. Ham and Bud decide that strategy is the thing to use in fighting Indians. Bud thereupon arms himself with a horn, while Ham takes a warclub. Bud is to attract the Indians by blowing the horn. When the redskins appear, Ham is to finish them with his club.

But Bud falls asleep. Ham bumps into an Indian. He howls for Bud to blow his horn. Bud finally awakens and obeys. Upon hearing the horn, the redskin leaves off attacking Ham and turns toward the direction of the sound. Taking advantage of the opportunity, Ham telescopes him with the club. Satisfied with the scheme, the two change implements. This time Ham takes the horn. An Indian attacks Bud and the latter begs Ham to blow. Ham, however, feels tired and doesn't obey until the Indian is about to kill Bud. Blowing the horn, he distracts the redskin's attention whereupon Bud uses his club.

Ham disguises as an Indian and plans to kill all the red men by himself. Bud is stricken by the same idea. Later, the two meet. Each mistakes the other for an Indian. Nor do they discover their error until Ham has hit Bud a terrific blow over the head, and Bud has shot Ham with his bow and arrow.

THE DIAMOND BROKER (Episode No. 9 of the Girl Detective Series—March 24).—Although Ripert and Henri Bladeau are suspected of smuggling diamonds into the country, it is impossible to catch them in the act. Jean and Warrington are assigned to the case. Calling upon Ripert, the Girl Detective requests him to match the gems in her diamond necklace. Ripert promises to have the jewels shortly. The following day, his brother Henri arrives from Europe on the "Eastern." Although the sleuths watch the two closely, they are unable to detect anything suspicious.

Henri returns to Europe on the "Eastern's" next trip. His brother sees him off. The following day, Ripert informs Jean that he has secured the gems she desires. An investigation results in the discovery that Henri invariably occupies Stateroom No. 3 on his trips to and from Europe. The Girl Detective arranges to secure this room when the "Eastern" is about to make the voyage abroad several weeks later. Unaware of the trap laid for him, Henri enters the stateroom. Jean's presence astounds the man and his brother. The Girl Detective and Henri agree to see the steward and have the matter straightened out. Ripert remains behind. Warrington, who is watching him, sees the man remove a deckboard under the bunk and take a bag from a secret pocket in the deck.

Entering the room, Warrington places Ripert under arrest. The smuggler turns upon him and is in the act of throttling the sleuth when Jean, Henri and the steward return. Covering the smugglers with a revolver, the Girl Detective rescues Warrington. The bag in Ripert's possession is found to contain a quantity of gems. It is made plain to the detectives that Ripert, in seeing his brother off to Europe, would return to shore with the gems Henri had stowed away on the trip to America.

THE TALE OF A HAT (March 26).—Fossell becomes intensely jealous when he sees his wife flirting with Dud. Later, Mrs. Fossell returns a hat which she had purchased from a fashionable millinery shop. This bonnet is subsequently bought by Mrs. Dud. When the Duds go out for a stroll, Fossell recognizes the bonnet and mistakes the wearer for his wife. In an effort to overhear the conversation between Dud and the supposed Mrs. Fossell, the jealous man hides in an ash can and closes the top. A careless garbage man knocks the can over and starts it rolling down hill. The ash can comes to a stop after it has been hit by a trolley car and bumped by an auto. Returning home, Fossell fancies he sees his wife's silhouette in the window of the Dud apartment. In his effort to spy upon the two, he hires men to lower him from his own window.

Dud sees the figure of a man dangling in front of his window. Leaning out, he shoots at the intruder. The noise frightens the men in the apartment below and they let go of the rope. As a result, Fossel comes down atop of Dud, who seizes him by the trousers. These come off. Clad only in his underwear, the jealous husband tumbles to the ground, pursued by Dud's bullets. Fossell is frightened out of his wits. He starts a running and accidentally joins the contestants in a marathon race. Thinking they are all pursuing him, Fossell runs with the speed of a deer. As the result, he beats the runners to the tape. To his intense surprise, Fossell is informed that he has broken the world's record. His wife arrives just as he is presented with the gold trophy. Bewildered and ignorant as to what it is all about, Fossell allows himself to be dragged home by his irate spouse.

THE GIRL AT LONE POINT (Episode No. 20 of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series—March 27).—A hot box causes Billy's express car to be detached from the train upon its arrival at Lone Point. Instead of remaining on guard in the car, Billy slips over to the telegraph office for a chat with Helen, the operator. Frisco Tommy, and Spud Hogan, two yeggmen, mark this move and break into the car. Helen accompanies Billy back to his car. The two come upon the yeggmen in the act of rifling the safe. A furious fight follows. Billy is knocked unconscious by the crooks, who jump from the car and lock Helen inside. After reviving the express messenger, Helen chops her way out of the car.

The girl sees the yeggmen in the act of jumping aboard a passing freight. By a desperate run, Helen catches the caboose and swings aboard. The trainmen are notified and go over the cars toward the yeggs. Her fighting blood up, Helen follows. The thieves put up a vicious fight and break away from the trainmen. Helen sees Spud coming. Realizing that she cannot capture him unaided, the girl drops down one of the side ladders, turns the angle cocks in the airline and gives the cutting lever a yank. As the result the train parts. The yeggmen narrowly escape running off the end of the car to certain death. The cars close with the train and Spud is captured. Frisco Tommy jumps from the top of the train, followed by Helen. In the act of regaining his feet, the man is knocked out with a vigorous blow by Helen. The yeggmen are shackled together and taken to jail.

MR. JARR AND THE LADY REFORMER (The Jarr Family Series No. 3—March 22).—Mr. Jarr's boss, Jabez Smith, sends him out West on a business trip, and Fritz, the shipping clerk, asks him to chaperone his sister on his way back from Chicago, which will obviate the necessity of her coming on alone. Jarr promises to do so, but on his return is horrified to find that the sister is a side show fat lady—and of affectionate disposition. Miss Vera Grimms, a militant lecturer on social reforms, occupies a seat in the parlor car near Jarr and "Fatima," the stage name of Fritz's sister. She believes every man to be a fiend in human form, and becomes suspicious that Jarr is luring the fat girl away from her mother. She waits until every one has retired, then sneaks up to Jarr's berth and handcuffs him. If there is one thing Jarr dreads it is a public scene, and he beseeches the porter to help him out of his predicament. The porter happens to think of a man in his charge who is to be taken off at 3 a. m. at Poughkeepsie and turned over to the Inebriate Asylum officials. For a twenty-dollar tip the porter agrees to make a mistake, so when the train stops at Poughkeepsie the handcuffed Mr. Jarr hidden in his blanket, is wheeled off to the sanitarium. There Mr. Jarr finally convinces the doctors of the truth of his story, and his handcuffs are filed off. Meanwhile, the self-appointed reformer has warned the New York police, and a detective meets the train. Of course, Jarr is not found, and Miss Grimm accuses Fatima of aiding her alleged abductor to escape, but the fat lady proves to be somewhat of a militant herself and comes out decidedly victorious. The consequence is that when Jarr gets home his wife tells him that the lecture on social conditions they were going to hear has been indefinitely postponed on account of the lady lecturer having been assaulted on the train.

A WIRELESS RESCUE (Special—Two Parts—March 23).—Filled with a desire to get square with the railroad, Engineer Jim Burke, discharged for drunkenness, tries to incite some of the other engineers to go on strike. Meeting with poor success, he and his gang then try to get Welch, the operator and towerman at the bridge across Clear River to quit, but he refuses. Angry words are passed and a fight is narrowly averted. Doubly enraged, Burke swears to be revenged on both the railroad and Welch. Several days later he and his gang attack Welch, bind him and throw him into the lower part of the tower. Then Burke, glancing at the clock, sees that the Flyer is due in five minutes, yanks over a lever which opens the bridge draw, and sets the semaphore signal at "Clear." Bringing her father's dinner from their home nearby, Polly Welch notices the open bridge and the signal indicating the track is clear. Realizing that something must be wrong, and knowing the Flyer is due in a few minutes, the girl starts for the tower, but seeing Burke and his men running angrily towards her, stops and races madly home, barricading the door just as Burke and the others arrive. She hurriedly adjusts the wireless apparatus in her room, with which she is very proficient, and frantically calls for help. Polly knows that the Flyer is equipped with a complete wireless outfit. Running at a high rate of speed, the train whistles for the bridge approach, and Polly has terrifying visions of the fearful wreck to follow if her message is not caught. Fortunately, the wireless operator on the Flyer hears the call, pulls the emergency cord and the train is brought to a jarring stop on the bridge itself. Meanwhile, Burke and his followers have broken into the house and are about to seize the girl, when Harry and Welch rush in with the trainmen to her assistance, and after a sharp battle capture Burke and his gang. With a shout of joy Polly is acclaimed a girl of nerve and courage.

THE MASTER OF HIS HOUSE (March 24).—Becoming extremely tired of his wife's propensity for indulging in bridge whist parties and other social functions, to the sad neglect of her domestic duties, Walter Greene determines to teach her a lesson. At dinner that evening, for the first time in their married life, Walter pushes away the bilious-looking plate of soup and, after bestowing a few pointed remarks upon the capabilities of the cook and his wife's ability to oversee the household he quits the room. Next day Mrs. Greene's lady friends arrive in force; they play cards all day; and on Greene's arrival home that evening he finds them still there. His wife does not know what to make of his coldness, and as it never occurs to her that she might be to blame, decides that he has the sulks. Walter peremptorily fires the cook and butler, whom he finds loafing around the kitchen, then sends for his wife and asks her in plain language if she can cook. She is astounded, but admits she cannot, so he grimly sets to work himself and gets up a very presentable meal. His wife's card friends stroll in when he has finished setting the table, and all seat themselves, ready to eat. Walter smiles to himself, brings in the food and, placing it all in front of him, proceeds to devour it himself. When he has finished he goes out, while the hungry women look at each other in consternation. For their next meal Mrs. Greene thinks, "I'll fool him; I'll have a caterer come in." But Walter finds this out and throws the caterer out of the house. He then sternly COMMANDS his wife to cook something. She succeeds admirably—in burning her fingers and making a mess of things—then breaks down and cries. After she penitently promises to give up her card-playing friends and devote her energies to her home, a joyous reconciliation takes place.

THE OTHER MAN'S WIFE (March 25).—Worn out from overwork, Governor Grant decides to take a vacation. Bidding farewell to his pretty young wife, Madge, he tells his Private Secretary to look after things, and starts incognito for the mountains. Becoming bored with hunting, etc., he amuses himself by flirting with the wife of his guide, Jake, arousing his jealousy. The mountaineer sees his wife in a man's embrace, and shoots him, thinking it is Grant. To his horror he finds that he has killed his wife's father, who had, during Jake's absence, arrived on a visit, the Governor having returned to the city the day before. Jake gives himself up to the authorities. Fortunately the father recovers. Meanwhile, the Governor plunges into work and becomes so completely absorbed in it he neglects his wife, who has found in the Secretary a sympathetic confidante. The Governor discovers her sobbing on the young man's shoulder, and, despite her tearful pleadings, orders her from his home and discharges the Secretary. Jake's wife decides to go and see her husband in jail, and the warden is so touched by their meeting that he suggests she visit the Governor about a pardon. She goes, and mutual recognition follows. Pointing accusingly at the Governor, she denounces him for breaking up her home and being indirectly the cause of Jack's incarceration. She then tells her story and he begins to realize he is to blame for it all. Another thought occurs to him: "Who am I that I should cast the first stone at my wife!" He accordingly writes out a pardon for Jake at once, gives it to the grateful little woman, then starts out to find Madge. When he finds her, each begs forgiveness of the other. After a thorough understanding of their mistakes, they agree to let the past bury itself and forget it all in the happiness of the future.

THE LADY OF SHALOTT (March 26).—On discovering that their beau, Timothy, the village schoolmaster, is quite unable to choose between them for a life partner, Ivy and Lily Skinner, two maiden ladies, agree to draw lots. Ivy, who is of a romantic, novel-reading nature, loses and is broken hearted. She seeks solace in her favorite, Tennyson, and in reading "The Lady of Shalott" becomes imbued with the determination to die as did the heroine in the book. She puts on her best white dress, bedecks herself with a wreath of flowers takes her beloved Tennyson, and on her way out sees the ardent schoolmaster on his knees proposing to Lily. That breaks the last connecting link binding her to this life, and with a parting dramatic gesture she wanders down to the river bank. There Ivy finds a row-boat, and, after writing her name all over it, she gets in, pushes the boat off with an oar, and lies down in the bottom, leaving it to drift out to the raging sea or wherever it may. As it happens, the boat catches in an eddy and comes ashore, so Ivy, now weeping sotly and shivering with cold has to get up and push it off again. But death does not come easily, so she looks in the book for further particulars. She finds that the Lady of Shalott died singing, so Ivy decides that must have been what turned the trick. She accordingly lies down again in the boat and starts to sing a weird high key. Captain Starboard, their next-door neighbor, a grouchy old retired sea captain, hears the strange music, and although filled with superstitious fear, wades out and rescues the fair Ivy. He does not know what to make of it, but grumbingly carries her home, where she is put to bed by her sister. Next day, when the Captain calls to visit her, Ivy, who has an awful sore throat, greets him with a stocking wound around her neck. All ends blissfully when a few days later the local photographer takes photos of the four newlyweds, Ivy and the Captain, Lily and the schoolmaster.

RETRIBUTION (Special—Two Parts—March 22).—Senator Cullom faces not only political and financial ruin, but it is in the power of the Governor to send him to prison. The Governor demands Mary, the beautiful daughter of the Senator, as the price of his assistance. Broken-hearted and in despair, Mary's father tells her that he is ruined unless she marries the Governor. Mary says that she hates Rann and will nevery marry him. Jim, Mary's lover, has called, and while Mary is telling him about her father, the Governor is in his office with Waldo, a mysterious young hunchback, of whom the Governor seems to be afraid. He gives Waldo money and the hunchback exits sneeringly, showing that he is conscious of his power over the chief executive of the state.

Mary returns to her father just in time to prevent him from shooting himself. She compels him to tell her the whole story and then says she will marry the Governor in order to save her father. En route to the Governor to make a personal appeal to him, her automobile strikes down Waldo. She cares for him. Later she learns from the Governor that she must pay the price for her father's salvation. Returning home, she tells Jim that she cannot marry him. The Governor, while on his way to Mary's home, is spied upon by Waldo and followed. Jim, Mary's lover, is persistent, and has called to plead with Mary, and the two men meet, while the hunchback witnesses Mary's illy hidden despair.

Mary is sobbing in her grief when Waldo shyly approaches. He touches her shoulder, and in his dog-like devotion, comforts her. Touched by his sympathy, Mary tells him the cause of her grief—that she loves Jim and must marry the Governor. Waldo calls again at the Governor's office and tells him that he shall not marry Mary. Waldo is offered money, but will not accept it. The Governor's hired assassins follow Waldo and shoot him down at the door of his garret. He is not killed but remains in hiding until the day of the wedding. Just as Mary and the Governor are to be wedded, Waldo followed by Jim appears and cries: "He ruined my mother and then killed her and I have kept his secret—because I am his son." The Governor slips away, and in his private office takes his own life.

finds money and a letter addressed to Richard Sharpe, who is on the outlaw's trail. Medford consents to the outlaw's marriage to his daughter in return for a sum of money. The outlaw gets the minister and Sharpe, the sheriff, follows them. While the minister marries the outlaw and Jessie, the sheriff, who has climbed the shack roof, falls through and is taken prisoner. Calvert and his followers take the sheriff into the mountains to dispose of him, and Jessie and a guard are left to watch the camp.

As the outlaws ride along a ridge, the sheriff jumps bound from his horse, rolls down hill and escapes. Jessie has managed to escape and encounters the sheriff. There is a gun battle in which the sheriff kills the outlaw's chief, and routs the others. Medford is remorseful and starts out to find Jessie. He meets her with the sheriff and begs her forgiveness. Reconciliation follows and Jessie and the sheriff plight their troth.

ALICE OF THE LAKE (March 24).—Kemp, a clubman, has three months to live. Arriving home from abroad, he finds a letter from an old pal, which reads: "I am passing on. Will you watch over my wild little Alice?" He assumes guardianship over his old friend's beautiful daughter.

Arthur, the town scamp, has won Alice's love, and he meets her surreptitiously despite the vigilance of her Aunt Clara, who endeavors to care for and watch over the orphan girl. Kemp soon learns to love Alice, and he suggests to Aunt Clara that if Alice will marry him, even though he has only three months to live, she will be provided for.

Arthur learns of Kemp's marriage proposal to Alice. He coaxes her to accept the clubman, telling her that he will marry her after Kemp's death. Following the ceremony, Alice seeks Arthur, and is detected in the action by Kemp, who asks her to respect his name while he is alive. Later, Arthur again seeks Alice, but she has finally realized the sterling worth of her husband and turns from the false to the true love.

THE CLAM-SHELL SUFFRAGETTES (March 26).—Willie marries a rich woman and enjoys a life of luxury and ease. He does nothing but smoke fine cigars and read the "six best sellers," while his wife secretly believes that he should get busy. Willie's wife, seated in the garden, has a dream. She imagines that it is the stone age, and that she is a Clam-Shell Suffragette. She, with others of the Silurian Society, decide to acquire husbands to do the suffering. They go forth armed with clubs and capture the unwilling men. These men are taken to the cave dwellings to do the housework.

The Burlesque Boys announce a dance at the Paleozoic Amphitheater, and all the "Johnnies" go there without their husbands, who are made to stay at home and take care of the children. Mrs. Willie awakens, makes a new resolve, gets Willie from his luxurious chair and starts him to work sawing wood.

ESSANAY.

SWEEDIE LEARNS TO RIDE (March 22) —Sweedie, with her arms splattered by dough, looks out the window and sees her mistress just mounting he horse for her morning ride. The simple, toilsome life straightway becomes monotonous and Sweedie prepares to go and do likewise. She calls up her Romeo, who is a captain of the mounted police squad, and tells him to come with two horses prepared for a canter. Her faithful swain obeys instructions. Sweedie dresses in a nondescript riding habit and starts. She finds it difficult to mount the steed and when she does she learns that riding is not as easy as it looks. Meanwhile her mistress returning to the house, finds Sweedie's absence annoying. She sends out a general alarm for Sweedie's arrest. Here Romeo comes in again, for he pursues her and brings her home under arrest. Sweedie is cured of her love for that sport.

THE LITTLE STRAW WIFE (Special -Three Parts—March 23).—Zoe Ballentyne, the nine-year-old daughter of an invalid mother, meets "Tuppy" Holt, a new neighbor's boy, and the children fall in love. "Tuppy" writes his proposal on an old piece of wrapping paper, which Zoe treasures all her life. Zoe's mother dies and Zoe goes to live with her aunt, who is a social climber. Fourteen years later, "Tuppy," now grown up and called by his real name, Dudley Holt, falls in love with Zoe, whom he does not recognize as his childhood sweetheart.

Zoe marries him under pressure of her aunt. Dudley on the wedding day suspects that Zoe doesn't love him and confronts the aunt with the lie she told him, that Zoe did love him. Zoe overhears, and disgusted at her aunt's treachery runs away from her husband and resumes her maiden name of Ballentyne. He pursues her and finds her in the city in time to save her twice from the attentions of two objectionable men. She thanks him but tells him she doesn't love him and that she will free him whenever he meets a girl he loves.

She goes to St. Louis as social secretary in the family of the Razors, a family of newly rich brewers. She finds them expecting the arrival of Dudley Holt, who is an old friend of the family and of whose marriage they have not heard. Mrs. Razor wants him to marry Claire, their daughter. Dudley, upon arriving agrees to help Claire to elope with Bret Jordon, a young man to whom Mrs. Rajor objects.

Zoe, seeing the development of the plot, thinks that Claire and Holt are going to elope. She warns the Razors just as Claire is escaping. Holt sees that at last his wife has realized that she loves him through her jealousy for Claire. He confronts her with her love for him. She denies it and shows him his boyish scrawl on the old brown wrapping paper, and says that she loves "Tuppy." He is delighted to inform her that he is "Tuppy," her childhood sweetheart.

THE FABLE OF THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN PERSONAL LIBERTY AND THE WAVE OF REFORM (March 24).—In the wide-open days the old Gam would go to his office in the morning and sell a bundle of green goods. At noon he would drop into a pool room and take a slant at the New Orleans entries. In the afternoon he would go out and yell at the ponies. After dinner he would attend a nice refined boxing show and see somebody knocked out. At midnight he would be working at his regular game—bucking the tiger. But a package of his green goods came back. When he got out he found all was changed. He attended an athletic exhibition and they wrestled. He bumped into the midnight closing ordinance. Even the "26" game went back on him. He and his pal swore to capture the ballot box and run the town to suit themselves. The reform element was to be but out of business. But when he arrived at the polling place the judge ordered them to remove their hats. She said that gentlemen should always be gentlemen.

THE GREAT SILENCE (Special—Three Parts—March 26).—John Landon, a young Alaskan, is president of the Nugget Gold Mine corporation, one of the richest in the Great Silence of the north. He is a fearless, untamed character of the mining camps. The lure of the outside world grips him and he goes to the city, where he is welcomed by Channing, an unscrupulous capitalist. Channing, with his dissolute son, Arthur, plots to recoup his lost fortune through Landon. The Alaskan, who has never before been in love, is captivated by Channing's daughter, Loyal. She is intensely interested in him as a man of a different type from the men she has known, but is not actually in love. When Landon proposes, she at first protests but practically is driven into the marriage through the crafty appeals of her father.

When she weds, the Alaskan gives her valuable shares of stock in his mine as a wedding present. Channing gets Loyal to transfer her shares to him, then secretly tries to "wildcat" them on the street. Landon discovers that Nugget stock is being secretly peddled. He traces the deal to Channing, whom he forces to confess. The shock of his exposure brings on a stroke and Channing dies. Landon tells his wife the whole story, but she in her grief for her father, refuses to believe his duplicity and denounces Landon. He leaves her for the great silence of the north. She already has found that she really loves Landon, however, and when her brother reveals the whole miserable story to her, she decides to follow her husband. Arthur, repentant, accompanies his sister to Alaska, where he is given a man's work and is happy, while Landon and Loyal find a new and glorified love.

THE OUTLAW'S AWAKENING (March 27). The Outlaw, preparing to rob the stage, receives a leter from his wife, telling him to lead a good life for the sake of her and his baby, and informing him that he may expect them any time. Filled by remorse, he refuses to accompany his companions on their hold-up. As he rides away, he sees a sign offering clemency to the unknown robber if he will give up his gun. He seeks out the sheriff, surrenders the gun and goes on his way. But the stage is held up and the pursuing posse arrests him. Rendered desperate, he makes his escape and prepares to resume his criminal career. But the posse captures the real bandit. His baby girl comes upon him as she wanders lost, and his wife following finds herself in his arms. He goes back to decent living.

TWO BOLD BAD MEN (March 25).—Two bold bad men desperate and ready for any criminal act, light into town and find the constable asleep. After taking his handcuffs away from him, they break into a house and start to rob it. One bad man waits outside and falls asleep. The other sees him sleeping when he comes out of the house and leaves him to his fate. In the house that they rob, the nagging husband picks on his wife till she gets mad and throws him out. The bad man runs into him and is taken captive. The husband then bribes him to steal everything in the house, and the pair of them start after the trunk. But the wife had seen them coming and calls the constable. The constable gets in the trunk. They carry the trunk away and bury it. But the constable breaks out with his pistol, digs himself out with his feet and arrests the whole bloomin' bunch.

"I have one of your STANDARD machines which has been running for the last seven years. It has always given a good picture. It has never had a repair and has only been down once for a removal."

The STANDARD is not an experiment; it has been on the market for a number of years. The above letter, one out of hundreds in our files, is positive proof of the machine's great wearing qualities.

It is practicing economy to buy a STANDARD. The earlier models were great; but they cannot compare with the American Standard "MASTER MODEL." Write for information.

A HORSE OF ANOTHER COLOR (March 18).—A beautiful lady arrives in Snakeville and is loved at sight by Mustang Pete. Slippery Slim also falls under her spell. Mustang Pete is baggage master at the stage and Slim is his assistant. They become rivals for the lady's hand. Now Pete has a pretty good horse and he asks the lady to go riding with him. Slim's horse is not very good and to make him worse, Pete gives him whiskey and the horse gets drunk. Both of them drive to the hotel where the beautiful lady is stopping. When Pete goes in, Slim substitutes his drunken horse for Pete's. When Pete comes out with the lady, the horse sinks down and refuses to move. Slim drives along with Pete's horse and steals the lady away. While they are arguing about which one is favored, the beautiful lady's husband arrives in town and the two friends comfort one another.

PATSY BOLIVAR NO. 13—"PATSY ON A YACHT" (March 22).—After recovery from the mishap of No. 12, Patsy again sets out to seek employment, encouraged by the renewed vows of the faithful Jane. At the same time a new character appears in the story in the person of Mrs. Sykes' brother Tom, a man of wealth, who invites her and the remainder of the family for a cruise on his yacht. Tilly is now a member of the family, having become married to Sykesy and a temper in her, not before developed, amply punishes him for all the woes he has heaped upon unlucky Patsy.

The very morning when the Sykes' family depart for the yacht, by a curious coincident, Patsy secures the position of deck hand, but when the family comes aboard he does not recognize any of them, by previous secret agreement with Jane. Later in the day the party comes to an island and goes ashore for luncheon. After intentionally burning his old enemy, Grace, with hot coffee, and drenching Sykesy with a siphon of seltzer, he is sent aboard of the boat. Arriving at the landing, he finds there a clergyman who is anxious to go aboard of her, and he welcomes him. Jane steals away from the luncheon party, and before she can be caught by her pursuing brother, Patsy hurries her aboard the yacht. Just as it is moving away from the landing Grace and Sykesy attempt to board her when they are drawn into the water, and while they are being rescued Patsy and Jane are being married by the accommodating clergyman.

AN EXPENSIVE VISIT (March 23).—Jack, a gay college boy, is brokenhearted at receiving a note from Dad, stating that he has cut off his allowance and is coming to see where he spend all his money. Jack tells all his troubles to his pals. They feel sorry for him. Together they cook up a scheme and Dick, his chum, agrees to dress as a girl and put one over on the old man.

Later Dad arrives, only to find Jack buried in stacks of books. He is glad to see the old man, but complains of being too busy to entertain him and advises him to run around and see the town. Dad leaves and as he strolls through the park he meets Dick. "She" flirts with the old man and he falls for "her!" They go to a cafe. After having a hearty meal and refreshments, Dad expresses his desire to see "her" home. They reach the house. Shortly after, in the midst of an ardent love scene, Tom enters representing himself as the "girl's" husband and demands an explanation. Dad, looking into the muzzle of a six-shooter, buys his life with the contents of his wallet and is glad to get back to the farm away from the wicked city. Then the boys enjoy a splendid banquet at Dad's expense.

THE BLESSED MIRACLE (Special—Three Parts—March 24).—George and Gail Bowman were the happiest of young married couples. As a wedding present, George had given Gail a house, complete in every detail, even to one room fitted with tiny white furniture. "This," he said, "will be the nursery." But the passage of five years finds them childless, with few interests in common, disillusioned—already drifting apart. Then into their lives come Diane King, apparently an ingenuous girl, but in reality hiding beneath a mask of innocence, calculating and self-centered nature. In her untidy room in New York, Diane finds herself temporarily short of funds, and by a subterfuge induces Gail, her former school friend, to invite her on a visit at the Bowman home. When she arrives, George sees in her an attractive girl, and he soon realizes that she brings into his home a long absent gaiety.

Diane, however, is envious of Gail's happiness and wealth and plans to win George for herself. George is not happy with Gail, but he is true to her. He resists Diane, guessing nothing of her plans, and blaming himself only for the attraction she has for him. To escape himself, he leaves on a business trip. Diane learns of his departure and follows him. She has discovered the address of his hotel in New York, takes a suite of rooms there, and feigns great surprise when she sees George. He visits Diane in her parlor, but still resists her temptations. It is Diane's plan to cause a divorce and marry George, and she is careful to keep him at arms' length.

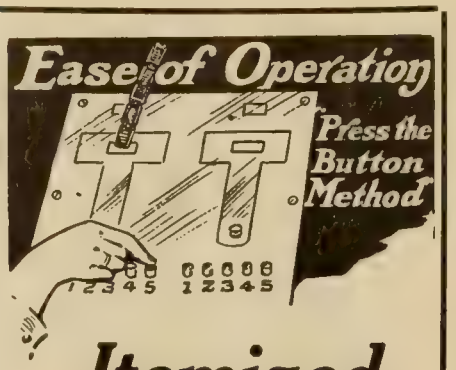
George is in a quandry. He knows that he and Gail would be happier apart, yet he wishes to be fair to her. At length he writes her, saying that if she wishes the divorce they have often discussed, she may have it. He is going to Europe and his lawyers will see her while he is away. Before the letter reaches, her, Gail realizes that a great happiness is to be hers. She believes that their child will bring them together, and writes George to come home. Then comes the letter suggesting the divorce. Gail's letter to George falls into Diane's hands, and she returns it, unopened. Gail believes that George is lost to her.

The months pass, and Gail learns from her lawyer that George is returning. In a last effort to see him, she goes to New York and takes a room at the hotel. Diane comes to the hotel and takes her old rooms. Shortly afterward a doctor is summoned to attend Gail. George arrives and learns of Diane's presence. He is also told that his wife is there and is ill. Now thinking only of Gail, he hurries to her. In the hall he finds that her room is opposite Diane's. He hesitates, then goes to Diane's door and raps. In Gail's room the nurse is bending over her with the baby. Diane opens the door to George, ready to yield to him, but he resists. He tells her that Gail is ill across the hall and needs him. Diane uses all her arts to keep him, but he is firm. Then she bursts into a rage. "Gail needs you, indeed! What is to become of me?" Then George sees the truth. Diane's false attractions mean nothing. He leaves her, storming at him in anger. In the room across the hall Gail smiles up at George as he places their little son in her arms.

MEN OF THE MOUNTAINS (Special—Two Parts—March 25).—Sam Hooper, a fierce and dictatorial old mountaineer, has promised the hand of his daughter, Meg, to Bill Jasper, owner of a gambling shack. Meg, however, is in love with Ned Davis, and in an effort to thwart the old man, the two plan to elope. They reach a minister's but the ceremony is interrupted by the arrival of Sam and Bill. Ned is overpowered, and Sam forced the immediate marriage of Meg to Bill. Ned leaves the settlement and goes into the lumber country, where he acquires a tract of timber land. Bill's gambling shack is raided, and he is forced to flee, taking Meg with him.

Two years later they are living in a poor cabin, when a returning miner stops for rest. Bill succeeds in getting him drunk, and robs him of his gold dust. Then he plans to leave at once for a distant part of the country, and again forces Meg to go with him, in spite off the illness of their infant, whom Bill would leave, but whom Meg insists on taking with them. Almost as they are leaving, Sam, Meg's father, starts on a visit to her with his two sons, to see the new baby. Meg and Bill, with the dying infant, reach Ned's cabin in the woods. Ned recognizes them, though his identity is hidden by his full beard. The baby dies, and Ned stands by, helplessly, as Bill brutally insists that it must be buried at once, that the journey may be continued. Bill learns that Ned has recently received a large sum from the sale of timber land, and suggests a game of cards, wagering his ill-gotten gold dust against Ned's money. Ned wins and at last suggests that Bill stake his wife, Meg. Bill agrees. Ned again wins, and Meg becomes his property. Ned forces her to mount her horse, and taking Bill's animal, he starts away, having obtained possession of Bill's revolver. Bill follows madly on foot.

Meanwhile, Meg's father and brothers have reached Bill's old cabin and there find his victim, the miner. He tells them of Bill's cruelty to Meg, and of the robbery. The four men set out in pursuit. In the lumber country, Meg secures Ned's pistol, eludes him, still unaware of his identity, and encounters Bill, who overcomes her and takes the gun. Leaving Meg, he starts in pursuit of Ned. Meg is overtaken by her father, brothers and the miner, and tells them of the circumstances. All hasten after Bill. Ned, seeing Bill coming, takes refuge in an abandoned shack, but is discovered by the gambler, and a fierce fight follows. Ned is unarmed and at length is overcome. Bill is raising his pistol to fire, when he is dropped by a bullet from Sam's rifle. Meg rushes into the scene with her father and brothers. Then Ned



Itemized Total

At the end of each day the Theatre using an AUTOMATIC Ticket Selling Machine can obtain in a second, by unlocking the register of each ticket, the itemized total of tickets sold and amount of cash received.

All guess-work is avoided when you use the AUTOMATIC and a complete record of the various priced tickets can be had at any time by unlocking the register device of each ticket. It tells without inquiring of the cashier the exact amount in cash drawer and number of tickets sold at each price.

No confusion or counting errors, and a complete total, itemized, at the end of business without an elaborate bookkeeping system.

The AUTOMATIC is the only machine on the market that offers a separate register with each priced ticket.

Why not find out more about this leading Ticket Selling Machine of the World? Our booklet explains. Write for it. You will know all about "Selling Tickets by Electricity."

THE THIEF IN THE NIGHT (March 26).—A burglar, robbing a young society man's home, hears the man returning and hides behind the curtains. The man enters, haggard and worried. He turns up the lights and after a drink takes out a press clipping and reads of the failure of an illegal bucket shop run by a man named Adams. Arling is mentioned as being one of the creditors whose fortune had gone. The burglar, closely watching, sees Arling study the photo of a girl upon his desk, then read a letter from her which seems to cut deep. In the letter the girl tells him she can never marry him because of a tragedy in her life, the shadow of which is bound to come between them. The bitterness in his heart drives him to desperation. He gets a revolver from the desk and as he makes a move to shoot himself the burglar, sneaking up behind him, gets the gun.

Arling lowers his hands and tells the burglar to shoot, as he has nothing left to live for. The burglar reads both clipping and note, both of which he pockets, and studies the photograph. Arling does not notice the trembling hands that replace the photo. With quick decision the burglar turns from Arling then ties and gags him with the curtain cords. Telling Arling he will have reconsidered by morning he leaves, taking the other's gun and locking the door behind him. Fearing Arling may loose his bonds and then try the gas exit, the burglar cuts off the gas in the cellar. The burglar then goes to Adams' rooms where that gentleman is ready to make his getaway with the spoils of his stock gambling. Adams is panic-stricken when the burglar confronts him. The burglar tells him he has come back and threatens. Adams gives up the money and a note that is for his creditors.

The burglar next goes to the girl. She greets him half hysterically. He shows the letter she wrote Arling and explains. Then the girl writes a note telling Arling to come to her, that she has reconsidered. The burglar returns to Arling and finds him asleep, the gas turned on. Arling is finally awakened and learns he is not dead, as the gas was turned off. He is still of the same mind, however, until the burglar shows him the money and letters. The burglar is leaving when Arling calls him back and demands enlightening as to why he has done all this. The burglar then tells Arling that the girl is his sister and that the year before, when his father died, a fortune was left them. He invested his part in a mining proposition promoted by Adams and was swindled. In desperation he went to Adams' home, confronted him with the facts and instead of getting satisfaction was wounded in the head by a shot from a revolver. From that time until he picked up his sister's photo he remembered nothing. Rumors of a crooked life had come to his sister's ears and was the tragedy in her life. Arling makes the burglar understand that he has done him a wonderful service and he is now going to reciprocate.

IT HAPPENED ON WASH DAY (March 27).—Speedy Smith spends his last coin on a bottle of gin as a treat to Mattie, with whom he is in love. But when John enters and presents a bouquet borrowed from a pot on a neighboring porch, Smith can't be seen. Smith indulges in a little brain work and unbeknown to John makes of Mattie a target. Then he invites John to a little target practice. John shoots, Mattie falls, Smith tells Mattie that John did it, as he has the gun. Smith gets the gun and John hits on a scheme and accuses Smith of the shooting, but in the struggle that follows, Mattie is once more shot, and explains that John is trying to shoot her up. The officers chase John, but Mattie, being in a revengeful mood, gets a bomb and blows up the whole crowd.

SI AND SUE ACROBATS (March 27).—Si and Sue live on a farm, and the height of their ambition is to become circus performers. Instead of doing their work, they are always practicing acrobatic stunts. This meets with the disapproval of the father and mother, so Si and Sue decide to run away to the city and go into the show business.

One morning the old folks find a note informing them that their boy and girl have gone to the city in search of a theater job and for them not to worry. The young folks wend their way to a playhouse in search of an engagement. Not seeing anyone at the stage door, they walk in, unaware that a performance is going on. They walk on the stage before the audience and break up a scene that is being played. The actors are disgusted and rush off the stage, and, while they are in search of the manager, Si and Sue start in acting, much to the amusement of the audience.

Before the manager reaches the stage, Si and Sue have finished their act, but are forcibly ejected from the theater. It didn't take long for Si and Sue to make good, and after closing their first season's engagement, they make their first visit back home. They are the guests of honor of a large barbecue that the people of the country have arranged in honor of their home-coming. Neighbors come from far and near to welcome them. After the big dinner Si and Sue entertain the great crowd with marvelous feats of equilibrium.

MOONSHINES (April 1).—Harry is a sport and having money to burn, he burns it freely. After an unusually strenuous night he rolls home in a palatial limousine and is assisted to bed by his manservant. A train is just leaving the railroad depot; Harry, high hat, evening clothes and all, hastily gets aboard. Armed to the teeth he roams the woodland wilds. A shrill feminine shriek startles him; presto! Fair Lunette is saved from the clutches of Tom, the Moonshine King. Heroic Harry promptly falls in love with the sweet girl but a polar bear who does not like to see Harry happy attacks him, however, the intruder is soon dispersed.

Tom makes an evil compact with Bum Bill, Lunette's father: plenty of booze in exchange for the girl. The Moonshine King and his gang capture Harry and tie him to a tree; Lunette, however, refuses to become Tom's wife, and is imprisoned in a deserted shack which is then set on fire. Cordelia Broad-face, a descendant of Pocahontas, comes upon Harry staggering away with the tree on his back; loves him at first sight; gnaws at the rope and frees him. Harry rushes to the aid of luckless Lunette and saves her in the nick of time. Cordelia, who has silently dogged Harry's footsteps, does not approve of Lunette's reposing in Harry's arms and savagely whacks him on the coco. Harry wakes up and takes the pledge.

THE HIDDEN CITY (Two Parts—March 27).—The locale of the play is a mythical underground city in India. Lieut. Johns' sister and company are ready to make a trip across the desert. English soldiers wave good-bye to the travelers as the cavalcade starts. Meanwhile the minister of the hidden city is searching for plunder for his princess. He meets a party of native tribesmen on horseback in the desert and tells them about the English party who have just left the English garrison. The natives decide to capture the English and to hold them for ransom. The English see the natives coming and form a stockade. The English see that they are outnumbered and must soon succumb if they do not obtain help. Lieut. Johns' brother is sent for help.

The garrison is notified and soon fifty soldiers on horseback are galloping across the desert to the rescue of the beleaguered party. With the aid of the garrison soldiers the English soon put the natives to rout. Lieut. Johns chases the minister up to the rocky entrance to a city of which there is visible only a wall of stone with no apparent entrance. Riding up to this wall the English dismount and seek an entrance. While they are prowling about, the minister comes up to the wall and, believing that he is not being watched, presses a secret button which opens the gate. Within the walls the princess of the underground city reclines on a couch. Slaves minister to her wants. While she is being perfumed the minister and his men enter and kneel about her to make their reports.

Meanwhile Lieut. Johns has succeeded in getting into the hidden city after pushing the same secret button which enabled the minister to enter. After wandering aimlessly about he sees natives approaching and looks about for a place of concealment. He hides behind a curtain in a doorway and when a native starts to investigate, Lieut. Johns kills him with his sword. While he is trying to put the natives' clothes upon himself, Lieut. Johns is discovered by the queen's men and overpowered. Taken before the princess, Johns refuses to bow to her and is taken to the dungeons in the underground city. When Lieut Johns' horse returns riderless to the garrison his friends and sister believe him dead.

Meanwhile the Princess of the underground city is much impressed by Lieut. Johns' manly bearing. She visits him in his cell and orders the guard to unloosen his bonds. Then after dressing herself in her most gorgeous robes and jewels she calls in one of her slaves and sends for Lieut. Johns. When the guard brings Johns before her she tries to interest him, intending, after she has charmed him, to have him killed. Lieut. Johns, however, is indifferent to her caresses and she becomes angry. The minister of the hidden city, Poleau, becomes jealous of her attention to Johns. He is much pleased when the Princess, enraged at Johns' indifference, turns the Englishman over to him.

Poleau decides to offer up Lieut. Johns as a sacrifice to the sacred fire. The Princess, now a little sorry for her action, is horrified at the plot of her minister. She sees the native enter and kneel before the sacred fire into which the minister proposes to pitch Lieut. Johns. The Princess decides to save Johns and, going to his cell in the underground dungeon, she opens a secret panel and tells him to fly.

Johns thanks her and they shake hands while the Princess, forgetting her royal station, stoops and kisses his hand. Johns is hurrying down a secret passageway to safety when he hears the Princess accused of assisting him to escape. Hiding behind the wall, he hears the minister of the city tell the Princess that as she has robbed the fire god of its victim she, herself must be sacrificed.

Preparations continue for the sacrifice of the Princess. Lieut Johns hurriedly makes his escape from the dungeon and then dodges to the city's walls through which he escapes to the desert. Winding across the desert he finds a caravan led by British soldiers. Johns staggers toward them and tells them about the Princess.

The soldiers, led by Lieut. Johns, who is given a horse, gallop up to the city and through the walls. Meanwhile the slaves have put the sacrifice robes upon the Princess. The minister and other natives enter and offer up prayer at the fire pit. Just as the Princess is led up to the pit the English soldiers break into the palace. She jumps into the fire, however, before their arrival and when Lieut. Johns rushes in with his men, too late, he kneels down before the fire pit, heartbroken. The soldiers capture the minister and string him up by the thumbs.

GOLD SEAL.

THE HUMAN MENACE (Two Parts—March 23).—The story opens in a small town with Zoe Wharton and Halsey Burnes engaged. Their fathers, old cronies, are delighted and give a party for them. The young people are playing games. Zoe and Halsey, to escape the crowds, go into the dining room. There Halsey discovers some wine, which his father has been drinking and pours out some for Zoe and himself. At first the girl refuses it, but when he urges her, she drinks. Unused to it, they both feel its effects very quickly and Halsey kisses her passionately and she responds in turn.

Three months elapse and Zoe waits impatiently for Halsey, who is talking with Mabel Welsh, a girl in the village. When he comes at length she tells him that they will have to be married at once. Halsey is horrified, but tells her that when he calls for her that night to take her to the dance, he will tell her just when they can be married.

That night, while Zoe waits dressed for the party, Halsey and Mabel Welsh are waiting at the station for the train. Halsey writes a note and sends it by a boy to Zoe. Halsey tells her that he cannot marry her as he had already married Mabel Welsh a month ago. He advises her to go to the city until it blows over. When the girl finally realizes he has left her, her first impulse is to commit suicide, but she cannot do it and after robbing her little bank she takes his advice and goes to the city, leaving a note for her father saying she and Halsey have eloped. Months elapse and Zoe is in the county hospital. She cries for her child. The nurse tells her the baby died a few hours before. The girl at first is heartbroken but then realizes it is for the best.

Later, she is discharged from the hospital without any money and, wandering on the streets weak and exhausted, she is picked up by Mamie, a girl of the streets. Mamie takes her to her home and advises her to go to the Thalia, a resort on the Barbary Coast, where she is working. Zoe consents to go and says she will start that night.

The same evening Judson Holmes is giving a dinner party and his sixteen-year-old motherless daughter, Ellen, is present. After the dinner one of the guests suggests a slumming party. Holmes consents but leaves Ellen home. As soon as the guests leave, Ellen calls the club and reaches Halsey Burnes, inviting him up as she is to be alone. Zoe's first night at the Thalia is a trying one and when Judson Holmes and his party reach there they find them all dancing. Zoe stops opposite Holmes who sits in a box and the two watch one another fascinated. He excuses himself to his guests and tells the waiter he wishes to see Zoe. She comes to him and the tow sit talking forgetful of the place. Suddenly Holmes says he wishes to take her away from it all and, seeing the hurt look on Zoe's face, says that he means marriage. The girl consents but dares not tell him of Burnes and the baby.

They return from their honeymoon and Holmes proudly introduces Zoe to the household as their new mistress. Then he sends for Ellen, who is sulking in her room. Zoe attempts to kiss her, but the girl repels all attempts and shakes hands only. She then meets her husband's friends. The guests, for the most part, treat her patronizingly and she stands frightened and apart when Halsey Burnes is announced. She can hardly believe her senses but pulls herself together before her husband introduces them. Burnes is overcome to see Zoe and when he moves away and takes Ellen into the conservatory, Zoe, deserted by the crowd, also walks unnoticed, and follows him to the conservatory.

She stops short as she hears Halsey asking Ellen to elope. The girl consents. When she leaves Zoe comes out in a fury and turns on Halsey, saying she will tell her husband. With a sneering laugh, he leaves her. Zoe sends for her husband and tells him all. In a fury he sends for Burnes and Ellen, with her bags packed, comes in and overhears it all. Holmes tells Burnes that unless he leaves within twelve hours, he will kill him. Ellen starts to cry and Zoe takes her and leads her to her room. The girl clings to her and Zoe kisses her tenderly. She returns to her husband, who stands with head bowed. Zoe extends her hand wearily. She says good-bye, but as she turns, Holmes gathers her in his arms, and tells her he loves her and that it is only her present and future life he wishes.

THE WRONG ADDRESS (March 22).—Bob and Tim are printers and rivals in love. Bob, after a fight with Tim, in which he is well thrashed, mixes some ads set by his rival. After he gets through mixing the type, the ads appear in the paper, announcing that a moral uplift society has advertised for burlesque actresses and variety show folk, while the burlesque company has advertised for a moral, middle-aged stenographer.

The theatrical crowd, strong men, contortionists, high kickers and musicians, arrive at the uplift society and simply tear the place to pieces. A gigantic stenographer calls at the theatrical office and wrecks it. Then both parties start for the printing office and unite against the proprietor. He fights them with pails of whitewash but by the time the authorities arrive the printing office is a wreck.

DIXIE'S DAY OFF (March 27).—Jimmy and Nellie have just been married. Both are extremely jealous of each other. Jimmy is in the real estate business and an extremely busy little man, so he bids his wife a hasty good-bye and sets out for work. Now it happens that in Jimmy's town a traveling trained animal circus has come to town. At about the same time that Jimmy is bidding his wife good-bye, Dixie, a trained chimpanzee, escapes from his cage, and sets out to see the sights.

Professor Lazelle, the animal trainer, has little trouble in following the animal for his course is marked by excited and flying people until the monkey approaches Jimmy's bungalow, wheer the front door has been inadvertently left open and into which Dixie enters. He is followed a moment later by Nellie and her kitchen maid, Lizzie, who have been busy in the yard dusting a rug. The professor runs on and in an incoherent babbling of French tries to explain that his monkey has entered the house. They mistake him for either a lunatic or possibly a persistent admirer of the pretty Nellie. Both Nellie and the maid rush into the house and telephone Jimmy, but their conversation is interrupted by the frantic animal trainer who has clambered through the parlor window. The women rush out and meet Mike, a footpad, who has barely escaped at this moment from a persistent policeman, who has seen him snatch a woman's handbag.

Mike agrees to oust the intruder and accompanies them home. In the meantime, the professor, who has sought in vain for Dixie has departed via the window, while Dixie has contrived to get himself locked in a clothes closet. Jimmy returns at the moment that the two women and Mike have given up all hope of finding the persistent flirt. Thinking Jimmy is the animal trainer returning they take refuge in a closet, leaving Mike to receive the Frenchman.

Jimmy is thrown out of his own house twice by Mike. Jimmy hastens off to find a policeman. He finds one and the Frenchman with him. All three hasten back to the house. But Mike, with the ladies safe in the closet, and himself alone in the house, finding a fine assortment of silver in the dining-room is pocketing this when Dixie makes his escape from the wardrobe. Mike is sure it is Satan himself and dashes to the nearest shelter, the top of the shower bath in the bathroom. Here he clings, shouting for help when the policeman, Jimmy and the professor enter. The professor gets back his monkey, but Mike cannot be persuaded to leave his perch until the officer turns on the hot water, when he falls with a splash into the tub of boiling hot water, below. In a cloud of steam Mike is dragged forth, the silver taken from him and locked up, while Jimmie and Nellie make it up between themselves.

BIG U.

AT HIS OWN TERMS (March 16).—John Marsh, a backwoodsman hunter, has lived in the forests of Hazzard County all his life and as a consequence he has come to believe the land he lives on is his own. The Union Lumber Company, however, acquire legal title to thousands of acres in the vicinity, including the patch on which stands the cabin of John Marsh. Notice is given to all of the squatters to vacate on or before a certain date. Many comply but Marsh stubbornly refuses.

On the day before the date of eviction, Edward Burton, president of the lumber company arrives at the local country hotel, accompanied by his wife, child and a maid. While he makes a trip into the woods, Mrs. Burton with Teddy and the maid take a ramble through the woods. Teddy wanders off and becomes lost. Towards night he is found by Marsh, who has gone to town to purchase ammunition with which he intended holding off the lumber people. He takes little Teddy to his cabin, gives him a good supper and entertains him with his fiddle. Later on that night the searching party, looking for the boy, come upon the cabin and, hearing the music, peer inside, where they discover the lost youngster. The heart of the lumber magnate is deeply touched and in return for the kindness of the old squatter, settles for the land at the latter's own terms.

WHEN JEALOUSY TUMBLED (March 23).—The Allan-Frisbees are giving a dinner party. All are enjoying themselves to the uttermost with the exception of Allan Frisbee, who is unreasonably jealous of his young and beautiful wife, and especially of the attentions paid to her by a Mr. Gagnon. The following day upon the avenue. Mr. Gagnon meets a friend accompanied by his sister, who bears a marvelous resemblance to his hostess of the previous evening. Wishing to show the brother and sister a photograph to prove his assertions, he invites them to drive with him to a friend's home. Here the photo is shown, and more than confirms Gagnon's statements regarding the likeness.

Later in the day, Allan Frisbee is homeward bound in his auto and passes the machine containing Mr. Gagnon and his wife's double. He is enraged and savagely awaits his wife's return. Mrs. Frisbee has spent an enjoyable afternoon with her husband's mother. Upon returning home, she is confronted by her husband, armed with a revolver. In the scene which ensues, Vera offers to prove that she has been at her mother-in-law's all of the afternoon. Still doubting, Allan leaves with her for his mother's home.

The party of four has re-assembled in the meantime and while speeding along the avenue they lose a tire. As their chauffeur is repairing the machine, the auto with Mr. and Mrs. Allan Frisbee passes. Allan seeing the same car, woman and man whom he chased that afternoon so unsuccessfully, stops his driver and looks at the party dumbfounded. They recognize him and his wife and introductions follow. Humble and crestfallen, Allen directs his driver to turn the car toward home.

NO. 329 (Two Parts—March 25).—John Anders and Jim Small are employed in the same office. Anders is a hard worker. Small is a sport. Small has gambling "markers" out against him, which the proprietor of the gambling house insists shall be paid. In order to obtain the necessary funds, Small robs the office safe and then throws suspicion upon Anders. Unable to clear himself, Anders is tried and sent to prison.

Ten years elapse. Anders is released from prison. He hustles for a job, but the prison stigma follows him wherever he goes. He changes his name and locates in a western city. Here, after a lapse of ten years, we find him a prosperous business man.

As president of the Board of Aldermen, Anders is opposed to the building of a bridge, the soliciting of the contract for which is in the hands of Small, now employed by an engineering concern. During Ander's opposing address he is recognized by Small, who immediately plans to overcome the president opposition. To this end, Small invites Anders to a conference at the former's hotel, in the course of which Small, seemingly playing with pencil and pad, writes the numbers 329. This being Ander's number while in prison, he instantly realizes that Small has brought him there to acquaint him with the fact that he, Small, is familiar with his record. Small throws aside the mask, and gives Anders the alternative of favoring the bridge project, or seeing his history printed in the morning papers. Anders asks for time, in which to consider the matter, and Small consents to twenty-four hours' grace.

On his way home, the sight of the numerals, which seem to appear wherever he looks, terrifies Anders. In his home, his distraught mind conjures them on the walls and in the blazing fire, while visions of his life in prison come and go. And so he spends the night, fighting the silent battle between duty and threatened exposure. Fate, however, takes a hand in the game, and Small is fatally injured in a fire which consumes his hotel. At the hospital, he is told that his race is run. Whereupon, conscience gets the better of him, and he confesses to the robbery that sent Anders to prison years before. The following morning, Anders' aged mother finds him asleep in his library. She awakens him, and he, still in terror of Small, demands to see a morning paper. The paper is produced, and Anders reads therein of th fire and the strange death-bed confession of one of its victims. Terror gives way to relief, and the story ends happily for Anders.

LAEMMLE.

TO REDEEM AN OATH (Two Parts—March 24).—The story deals with the love of a strong brother for one who is weaker, a cripple. When both were boys, the elder brother taunted the younger with the fact that he was unable to climb a cliff. The younger brother tries and in the attempt falls and injures himself to such an extent that he is never able to walk again. The elder brother's love from this time on is a continual series of sacrifices for the crippled brother. At last love comes into their life and the girl chooses the stronger brother. He finds that the cripple also loves the girl and determines to make the crowning sacrifice of his life.

The cripple overhearing his brother's confession of love to the girl, decides not to accept the sacrifice and laughingly tells his brother that he loves not Helen, but his nurse. Acting on this information, the elder brother proposes to Helen and is accepted. The nurse in reality loves the cripple and they are married. The happy lovers take up their journey in life, leaving the nurse and the cripple to console each other.

THE BAY OF SEVEN ISLES (March 28).—The skipper leaves the south and, sailing his whaling boat into the town of Seven Islands Bay falls in love with Margaret, one of a pair of twins. Susette exactly resembles her sister, except for a small scar on the forehead. The mother of the girls opposes the skipper's courtship because he is a Protestant. Margaret determines to elope with the skipper, but the plot is overheard by Susette, who informs her mother and has Margaret locked in her room.

Susette herself keeps the tryst and is taken aboard the ship. The deception is found out in the morning and the skipper takes her back to her mother. Margaret, through grief and shock, has died and the skipper, on approaching, hears the tolling of the funeral bell. The legend states that even to this day a phantom ship, a ghost of the skipper's "Breeze," is sometimes seen far out at sea, but on approach of the ship to the shore, it fades into mist.

NESTOR.

IT HAPPENED ON FRIDAY (March 23).—Mary Holmes and Frank Jordon are sweethearts. Mary tells Frank that she is going to have a birthday party and wants him to invite some of his boy friends. Madge Jordon is a pupil at Miss Fish's seminary. She receives an invitation to Mary's party, but, not being able to get away, she sends herself a telegram, supposedly from her mother, saying that her brother is very ill.

In the meantime Frank Jordon sends a letter to his friend, Jimmie Marsden, inviting him to come to the party and to bring his clothes with him, as Frank's house is next door to Mary's. Madge is permitted to leave the school and starts away with a suit case, on which are the initials "M. J." Jimmie Marsden sets forth with his suit case, which is painted with his initials, "J. M." They meet on a street car. When they get off, by mistake they take each other's suit cases.

Two crooks rob Jack, who afterward notifies the police, telling them of the robbery of his suit case. In the meantime Miss Fish, the school principal 'phones Madge's mother to inquire about the supposed sick brother and learns that no one is ill. Fearing that the telegram was a hoax to lure Madge from the school, she 'phones the police and tells them that Madge can be identified by the suit case with her initials on.

Jimmie captures the thieves who are brought to the police station. When the suit case is opened and the girl's clothes fall out he is immediately held for attempted kidnapping and thrown into a cell with the crooks. Frank Jordon comes to his assistance and is given the suit case by the police. He starts out and meets Miss Fish, the school principal, who has him arrested for the kidnapping. In the interim Madge, who has brought Jimmie's suit case to the party, discovers her mistake, but for a lark puts on a suit of his clothes.

Jimmie gets out of jail, leaving Frank in his place. The latter decides to get even. From Frank's window Jimmie looks into Mary's house and thinks he sees a man there, who is in reality, Madge dressed in Jimmie's clothes. Frank 'phones his mother from the jail that he is held for kidnapping, but that the guilty party is in his room. Jimmie puts on Frank's dress suit to attend the party. Several other complications ensue, ending with everybody arriving at the police station, where the exchange of the suit cases is explained and the mystery straightened out.

THEY WERE ON THEIR HONEYMOON (March 26).—Eddie is a freshman at college. Lee and Vic are a bride and groom starting off on their honeymoon. On Eddie's arrival at college he is met by some upper classmen, who proceed to haze him. When let out on the campus, Eddie makes a dash for liberty. In the meantime, Lee and Vic arrive at the railroad station to which Eddie is pursued by the boys. Lee leaves Vic to look after the baggage, and is mistaken for Eddie. They seize him and drag him back to the college campus, where they toss him with a blanket and play other tricks on him.

Vic boards the train with Eddie, mistaking him for her new husband. At the next station they get off, after Vic discovers that Eddie is not her husband. In the meantime, Lee is having a hard time of it. The college men take him to a barn where they tie him up to a beam. A farmer comes to his rescue, and after another chase, Lee gets back to the depot just as the train comes in with Eddie and Vic. Explanations follow and Eddie is seized by the college men who, for the first time, realize their mistake.

SIX MONTHS TO LIVE (March 25).—While suffering from an attack of heart trouble, Howard Ellsworth consults a physician and learns that he has but six months to live. How to live so as to get the most out of his allotted time is his only problem now. His thoughts take him back to a time when he acted as an escort to his fiancee while on her errands of charity to some drug fiends.

Thinking only of satisfying his craving for pleasure, he believes cocaine will afford him the most enjoyment during his last six months on earth. He begins its use. The drug grips him in quick order. He forsakes his betrothed, his friends, everybody that will not cater to his passion for pleasure and goes down, down, down in the scale of society until the bottom is reached. Then he finds out that the doctor made a mistake and mixed his case with the diagnosis of another man. He goes to see the doctor, bent on murder. He finds the old fellow already a victim of one of his own experiments.

Then Ellsworth's office boy pulls his MSS. from his machine with glowing pride, and rushes in to his employer with the above story —rather a startling climax!

THE DESERT BREED (March 28).—The little cow-camp of Rawhide is slumbering under the desert stars. Suddenly the doors of one of the saloons bursts open and Fred and Jack back out of the saloon shooting. They leap upon their waiting horses and dash away, a body of citizens in pursuit.

Out on the desert's edge stands the lonely little cabin of Pauline, "The Girl of the Desert." On the night in question, she has retired for the night when she becomes aware of a pounding on the door and a man's voice asking her to open it. She takes her revolver from under her pillow and waits. Slowly the door is forced open. Pauline draws herself back into the shadow and when one of the intruders lights a match, he finds himself looking into the muzzle of a revolver. Pauline orders them out. The two men are Fred and Jack, who have sought refuge from the pursuing cowboys. They leave the cabin good naturedly but camp nearby for the night.

The pursuers, baffled and thrown off the track, divide into several small bands and start scouring the country for the fugitives. One of these stumbles upon Pauline's cabin and demands entry. Pauline, thinking that they are the two refugees who first broke into her cabin, warns they away and when they persist in trying to force an entry, opens fire and slightly wounds one of them. They return the fire through the door and when one of the bullets from their guns shatters a lamp chimney near Pauline's head, her feminine nature asserts itself and she dives under the covers. Frank and Jack, startled out of a sound sleep by the shots, investigate and find that their would-be captors have broken into the cabin and are subjecting the girl to insult. They immediately champion her cause and succeed in taking their pursuers captives.

Out of gratitude, Pauline offers to show the two fugitives the trail across the desert to the border. They set out early next morning, leaving the three members of the posse tied up in the cabin. Owing to a wound which Fred has sustained in the encounter, he becomes delirious and they finally lose the trail. But after many hardships, the border is reached. Pauline says good-bye to the boys, sets out on the back trail across the desert to her little cabin and the incident closes.

POWERS.

THE ACE OF CLUBS (March 27).—Reginald, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Staples, is addicted to drinking and gambling. On his return home late one night, after a long meeting at the club, he is met by his father, who has waited up for him. Reginald takes a handkerchief from his pocket and an ace of clubs drops on the table. The father picks it up and tells his son a story of his young manhood, when his boy was a baby. He tells him of his own craving for drink, while the boy's mother slaved at the wash-tub to support the family, while he gambled and drank in a nearby saloon. Returning home one day, he beats his wife and takes from her her petty savings and rushes from the house. She follows him and is struck by a car and taken home.

The shock is sufficient to arouse the manhood in the father, who reforms from that point. The son breaks down at the conclusion of the story and resolves to give up his bad habits.

IMP.

ONE NIGHT (March 22).—The woman, deserted by her husband, has reached such depths of poverty that she is unable to give her baby the necessities of life. Late one night, she leaves the child on the steps of an imposing mansion. Hardly has she departed, when the crook, bent on robbery, breaks in through a window and, after collecting several articles of value, hears the infant crying.

He opens the front door, picks up the child and places it on a sofa in the library and is about to depart, when the site of the innocent little mite touches a responsive chord in his heart. He returns and places the jewelry on the desk, with a note telling what he has done, and why he has done it. Just as he steps from the front door, the baby's mother, repentant of her action, returns to get her child. Finding it gone, she is about to give way to despair when the crook tells her where the child is and leads her within the house.

While they are talking the owner of the mansion returns and, covering them with a gun, is about to 'phone for the police. He is stopped by the crook, who tells him his story and shows him the letter. Convinced that the crook has not lied, the millionaire allows him and the woman to depart, first giving them a cheque to start life afresh.

VICTOR.

THE DANGER LINE (March 26).—While the long feud between the Tuck and Burman families was gradually dying out, beneath the surface their hatred still smouldered. Sue Burman and Ralph Tuck meet and fall in love, despite the feud existing between their families. Lud Conners, a brutal mountaineer, also loves Sue and spies upon her. He informs her father of her clandestine meetings with Ralph and is only prevented from killing Ralph by Sue.

In order that the Burman-Tuck feud may continue, Lud shoots and wounds Sue's grandfather. The Burmans, in an uproar, declare war on the Tucks. Sue's father sets out to "lay for" the Tucks. Jud Tuck, Ralph's father, learning of his son's infatuation, leaves the house with his gun, to protect his son. Tuck and Burman meet, each thinking the feud has been revived, and in a duel Tuck is wounded, and Burman is shot down. Ralph Tuck, upon his father's return, hears that Burman has been wounded and determines to find him and take him home. While on his way home, he encounters Sue, who, thinking that Ralph has shot her father, vows vengeance upon the Tucks. Sue encourages the mountaineers, who go to the Tuck home and demand Ralph, only to find that he has fled to the city.

Five years have passed and Sue is succumbing to the violent wooing of Lud Conners. Sue's father, who became demented following the duel, recovers his senses and exonerates Ralph. Ralph comes home only to find his father has been killed. He takes up his gun to avenge his father's death, but his mother pleads with him to bury the past. Meanwhile Lud is so persistent in his lovemaking that Sue promises to marry him. She and Lud set out for the parson and encounter Ralph on the way. Lud insults Ralph, and a rifle fight ensues, in which Lud is wounded. Sue remembers her promise to Ralph. After taking Lud home, whom she now loathes, she goes to the Tuck home and asks Ralph and his mother to take her into the family.

THE REWARD (March 15).—Mary Lang, daughter of a rich broker, is bored by the banal society existence she leads. Her father has arranged a match between Mary and his young business partner, John Barrick, who deeply loves the girl, but cannot seem to satisfy her romantic nature. Mary destroys all the photographs she has of herself and runs away in disguise to find adventure. Hugh Grey, a smart young reporter, while calling on Lang, chances to see a picture of Mary on his desk. On impulse, he pockets it. Next day when the story of her disappearance is all over the city, Grey recognizes in a girl who the evening before had arrived at his boarding-house, the lost heiress. He immediately lays siege to Mary's affections, and believing that at last she has found her true romance, she promises to become his wife. On the day before that set for the wedding Mary finds the photograph in Grey's possession, and realizes that she has fallen into the clutches of a fortune hunter. She denounces him. Determined at least to win the reward of $10,000 which Lang has offered for his daughter's safe return, the reporter locks the girl in her room and sends for Lang and Barrick. Grey takes the check for the reward and also a trouncing for Barrick for refusing to give up Mary's photograph. Her eyes are opened to the genuineness of Barrick, and she becomes his wife.

ONLY A TRAMP (March 19). A tramp appears on the main road leading into a village. Boys jeer at him and throw stones at him as he plods along. A woman and her husband at their doorway see him and the woman pities him, making as if to interfere. But her husband restrains her, remarking, "He's only a tramp, anyhow!" The tramp goes on to the tavern where he does a bit of work as payment for lodging and meals.

A young girl of the village has met a designing young traveling man from the city, and led away by his good looks and false promises of marriage, is to elope with him that night to the city. The old tramp, that evening, resting in the rear of the tavern, overhears the traveling man laughing coarsely at his conquest and also hears the time and place of his rendezvous with the innocent girl. The tramp's better nature asserts itself and he resolves to save the girl. He follows the traveling man and in a lonely place attacks him and forces him, at the point of a gun, to board a trolley near by and return to the city without meeting the girl. Then the tramp secretes himself near the proposed meeting place and watches the girl arrive and wait in vain for the man. The man, of course, never shows up and she goes sadly home, followed secretly by the tramp, who sees her safely within her home. His only reward is a warning from her father to keep away from the house.

Next morning the tramp goes out of the village and passes the girl's home, followed by boys who throw stones at him and jeer him. The girl and her father are in the garden and see it all. The girl pities him and makes as though to interfere, but the father stops her. "Oh! he's only a tramp!" and the tramp disappears down the road.

THE SLAVE GIRL (Two Parts—March 20).—Bob West, a homeseeker, and his little daughter, Ida, before they reach their journey's end, are attacked by the Indians. West is killed. The savages take the child into captivity. Also they keep a letter written by the father to his sister in the East. Incidentally, it bears the imprint of a smudgy little finger. Ida is rescued from the Indians by Morgan, a slave trader. He takes her and the letter home to his plantation, where he substitutes the little white girl for a mulatto slave child, who recently has died. Ida is put in charge of Sally, a yellow girl, and is brutally treated. Some time later, Mr. and Mrs. Marks, out of pity for Ida, buy her from Morgan. She lives happily with them for twelve years. Fred Gilbert, the Marks nephew, pays them a visit and falls in love with Ida. His uncle and aunt are horrified, believing that the girl has negro blood, and the young people are about to part forever, when Sally, who has become inflamed by jealousy against Morgan, produces the letter written by West just before his death. By a fingerprint test Ida's identity is confirmed, and her white blood proved. The young people marry. Morgan is hunted down by a posse and is shot dead.

THE BLACK SHEEP (March 24).—Bob, the black sheep of the Holmes' family, is continually at swords' points with his father. His mother thinks the father a trifle hard on the boy and takes his part. When the elder Holmes refuses to advance Bob any more money, the mother steps into the breach with money from her own savings. This state of affairs is brought to a climax one morning about 3 A. M., when Bob comes home dead drunk. His father, ignoring the pleas of mother and sister, tells the boy to leave and never return.

Several years pass. The father dies and the sister marries and moves to a nearby city. Bob sinks to the lowest level and to satisfy his cravings for liquor, begs on the streets. The mother, finding the old home very lonesome, responds to her daughter's invitation to visit her. She looks upon the girl's happy little home with pleasure, but her heart and mind turn to the boy of whom she has lost all trace.

An officer arrests Bob for begging on the streets, but instead of taking him in, he gives him twelve hours in which to get out of town. The sister's husband has been detained quite late with a business deal and enroute home he passes through a deserted part of the city. Bob, very much discouraged, thinks of the river as an appropriate ending to such a life as his and starts for the water front.

The sister's husband is attacked by a gang of thugs and Bob arriving on the scene shows there is at least one tiny spark of manhood left by siding with the under dog. An officer sees the fight and is also observed by the gang, who run. Following his natural instinct, Bob runs also, taking the sister's husband with him. When they find they have safely eluded the policeman, Bob notices that his companion has received a deep gash on the head, from which the blood is flowing profusely. He stops the flow of blood and noting that the man is growing weak, he offers to assist him in reaching home.

Upon their arrival at the house, the wounded man discovers that Bob is homeless and offers him shelter for the night, an invitation which Bob accepts. Needing money for a getaway, Bob proceeds to make a grand clean up just before daybreak. In walking about the dark library he knocks a book from the table. The noise awakens the sister, who, grasping a revolver, silently comes into the room. The sister turns on the lights and, covering the burglar with the revolver, commands him to throw up his hands. Bob turns, the recognition is mutual, the girl lowers the gun and puts her arms around Bob. Knowing that others in the house may have been awakened by the noise she heard, the girl bids him put the stolen articles back. She assists him and their work has just been completed when her husband and the mother come down the stairs.

The mother recognizes Bob and takes him into her arms. The husband is told of the relationship, and he in turn tells of the service Bob rendered earlier in the night. Bob reforms and ceases to be the black sheep.

BUBBLING WATER (Two Parts—March 27).—Bubbling Water is wooed by Chief Young Bull of Northern California. They are happy until the arrival of Gordan Lee, a white man from the East, who comes between the lovers and finally wins the beautiful Indian girl for his bride. They are married by Indian custom and live in contentment on Lee's ranch for about a year. Then Bubbling Water is distressed to find her white man growing restless. At last he tells her that he has decided to make a brief trip East. She realizes that once he reaches his old home, he never will return to her. Though heartbroken, she lets him go. Soon after this Chief Young Bull comes, telling the deserted wife that he still loves her and will take her away. But she confides to him her secret—she is to have a child. The young chief, fearing that her loneliness and grief will kill her, trails Lee. He finds him in a gambling den, shorn of his last dollar. When Lee hears the story of Bubbling Water's condition, he breaks down completely and hurries back with the Indian to his own cabin. Young Bull witnesses their reconciliation. For a moment his face darkens with hate of Lee, then fades into the stoicism of his race.

AMERICAN.

ANCESTRY (Two Parts—March 22).—The Duke of Lorenzo discovers the Duchess of Lorenzo with her lover, the Count Riccardo. A duel follows and the Duke is banished for a term of years for duelling; he leaves the Duchess and her child at the ancestral villa.

Twenty years elapse. The Duchess has gone to America, where her daughter dies. She returns to Italy with a young companion, Anna De Voe, who is taken for the Duchess' daughter by the servants and villagers.

Harold Dean, an American artist, has obtained permission to sketch upon the beautiful grounds of the villa. As the Duchess enters the villa, she has a mental shock which renders her mind a blank. Harold assists in resuscitating her, and he and Anna are attracted towards each other. Anna fails to reveal the fact of her identity.

Soon afterwards the Duke returns from his exile, and is informed by his servants that Anna is his daughter. She does not deny the assertion. Harold asks the Duke for his supposed daughter, and is informed that she must marry in honor to her ancestors. Anna, who is in love with Harold, then disclaims the relationship, and Harold is happy to find that no line of ancestry separates them.

IN THE HEART OF THE WOODS (March 24).—Jack Daley, in an effort to forget his rejection by Miriam Stern, goes on a hunting trip to an abandoned cabin in the heart of the woods. Nance, the granddaughter of Ben Morgan, an old game warden, discovers that the abandoned cabin has a tenant. Nance, entering the cabin, makes herself at home and when Jack returns he finds her fast asleep in the bed. Unintentionally awakening her, she escapes before he can question her. Afterwards Nance makes frequent visits to the cabin and, after rearranging the room, hides under the bed to discover if Jack will notice the difference. Jack is so absorbed in reading a letter from Miriam that he does not notice the difference in his room, an oversight which causes Nance to forcibly undo her work as soon as he goes out.

Jack hears her throwing things about and returns. Nance reveals her jealousy of Miriam, whose picture she has seen Jack looking at, and rages at his lack of appreciation of her tidiness. First Jack reprimands her; this soothes her and she becomes repentant. Running home, Nance confides her troubles to her pet rabbit. Later Jack receives a telegram announcing Miriam's marriage, which so upsets him that when Nance arrives with her arms full of flowers, he brushes her aside and leaves her brokenhearted in the cabin. Becoming reckless as a result of the news he has received, Jack defies the signs prohibiting shooting and kills Nance's pet rabbit which had wandered away. Nance, hearing Jack's shot, finds him triumphing over his trophy. Crying over the loss of her pet, Nance refuses to be consoled, although Jack begs forgiveness. Thinking to replace the loss of her pet, Jack sends his dog together with a note stating if she needs him at any time to send the dog after him. As Nance is deciding if she will accept Jack's gift her grandfather is brought in by some hunter who had found the old man accidentally killed in the woods. The loss of her grandfather causes Nance to reconsider Jack's note and she sends the dog after him with the result that the lovers are reunited.

WHEN THE FIRE BELL RANG (March 23).—Joe, the best looking of the five assistants of Chief Grady's fire squad, is in love with Kate, the chief's daughter. Catching Joe and Kate at their lovemaking, the chief threatens to fire Joe and sends his daughter home with a severe reprimand. Soon after the chief is called out of town on business and stops at the fire house to again warn Joe of the consequences of any lovemaking during his absence, but the chief is hardly on his way to the depot before Joe is in the arms of his sweetheart.

Lige Peters, the village cut-up, peeping through a window, sees the lovers kissing and hugging and hurrying back to the fire house tells the boys of the incident. In a spirit of fun they ring the fire bell which brings Joe to the fire house on a run and likewise the chief, who has had to wait for his train. When the boys tell of the joke and its cause, Chief Grady's rage is unbounded. After threatening to fire the whole crew if they don't stop their pranks and with another warning to Joe, he again starts on his journey, but to his dismay misses the train and is compelled to return to the fire house, where he vents his wrath on the boys.

Suddenly the chief misses Joe. Propelled by vague suspicions, he covers the distance to his home in double quick time and on arriving is confronted with a scene which nearly causes his total collapse. Joe and Kate, thinking him out of town, and summoned the local minister and were about to be married. The chief becomes beside himself with rage. Kate, remembering the joke played earlier in the day, dispatches a note to the boys at the fire house to ring the fire bell again. Hearing the fire bell the chief forgets all else but the call of duty and runs to his command. Joe is about to follow when Kate grabs him by the coattail and explains the ruse she has worked on her father. By the time that he finds out that he has been fooled again the marriage ceremony has been performed and there is nothing else for him to do but forgive, amid the cheers of the entire fire department.

ROYAL.

IN WRONG (March 13).—A young couple living in a boarding-house are about to be married. The girl shows her wedding present to the boarders and is advised by the landlady to lock them up over night, as there have been burglars in the neighborhood. That same night she dreams that her gifts have been stolen. Waking, she thinks she had better go downstairs and see if the things are safe. A young man, hearing her in the parlor, and supposing she is a thief, sneaks to the other side of the parlor portieres, and when she comes within reach, grabs her, portieres and all. He then ties her up in the draperies. The house is aroused and the police sent for. Meanwhile, the fiancee is beside himself because he cannot find his prospective bride. When the police arrive and force the captor to untie the portieres, the whole mystery is explained.

THANHOUSER.

THE MASTER'S MODEL (Two Parts—March 16).—Hugo longs to paint a great picture. One day he happens to see on the street the very model he has been looking for. The artist follows the woman and her lover, Tony, into a dance hall. Nita scoffs at his proposal, however, until he offers her a good sum of money, if she will pose for him. Then she accepts, and agrees to choose her own costume for the sittings. Next day she presents herself at the studio, wearing the flowing robes of the Madonna. The picture is painted and Hugo wins the Academy prize. Tony, who is intensely jealous of the artist, sneaks into the studio and is in the act of thrusting his knife through the canvas, when Nita intercepts him.

CAUGHT BY THE HANDLE (March 14).—Horde, a gentleman smuggler, receiving a tip from his confederate, Swagger Tim, that he is to be arrested on leaving the ship, contrives to conceal some uncut diamonds in the handle of Mrs. Riche's umbrella. As it happens, the ship's officer sees him, and though the custom's inspectors can find nothing on Horde and are obliged to let him go at the wharf, the officer advises Schly, a detective, about the umbrella, telling him to keep his eye on Horde.

The next day, at home, Mrs. Riche asks her maid, Tootner, to glue on the loose handle of her umbrella. The maid, on finding the uncut diamonds, and supposing the handle to be "all busted" inside, dumps the fragments into the waste basket. Then she fastens on the handle and puts the umbrella in the rack. Mr. Riche comes downstairs and takes the umbrella out with him. While standing unsuspectingly on the steps, he is watched by Horde from across the street. Schly, the detective, behind a tree, is watching Horde. Meanwhile, Swagger Tim has entered the house and is trying to recover the gems. Tootner hears him in the dining-room and sees him start toward the hall. Mrs. Riche, at the same minute, goes into the hall closet for a coat; and the maid, a moment later, taking her mistress for the burglar, slams and locks the closet door. She tells Mr. Riche that she has caught the thief and he comes inside to phone the police, leaving the umbrella on the porch. Horde makes a dash, gets the umbrella, but is caught by Schly.

Meanwhile Swagger Tim is hiding. The police arrive, and when the closet is opened and Mrs. Riche released in a fainting state, Tootner is fired on the spot. Swagger Tim, in trying to escape through a window is captured by Schly, who drags both smugglers before the Riche family and explains to them about the umbrella. On pulling off the handle, however, no diamonds are to be found. Then Tootner remembers. She rushes to the waste basket. The diamonds are recovered—and Tootner is handed back her job.

ETHEL'S DOGGONE LUCK (Chapter 19 of the "Bill" series—March 21).—Ketcher, a professional dog thief, steals a valuable dog from Mrs. Dapper and after that everybody gets involved, including Mr. Hadley, Ethel, Ed, her sweetheart, Bill and the cop. The intricate action consists in the rapid and surreptitious switching about of several stolen dogs by the clever Ketcher, until nobody can tell which dog is whose, and everybody is accusing everybody else of being a thief. The police court is helpless to disentangle the mix-up. But in the end Mrs. Dapper gets back her dog, Ethel and her young man are reconciled, and, as a finishing touch, a fierce bull dog fastens himself to Bill's trousers.

MAJESTIC.

HER BURIED PAST (Two Parts—March 14).—Muriel Manning, reporter on the Evening Statesman, traces a mysterious murder case, for the solution of which her paper has offered a reward of $500, to Mrs. Martin Madison, wife of the president of the local trust company. Madison is on the point of foreclosing the $500 mortgage on Muriel's home, where she supports her old mother, and the girl is insanely anxious to win the money. She forces a confession from Mrs. Madison, who tells her in full the story of her early disgrace at the hands of Howard Trimble, a gambler. Then, of his recent return from South America: how he threatened to blackmail her publicly except she gave him a huge sum of money, which she was unable to obtain; and how, in a desperate attempt to shoot herself in his rooms, she had inadvertently killed her persecutor. Muriel hurries home to write the story for the last edition. But visions of the woman in her terrible distress, of her two children and of her aged mother, are too much for the young reporter. When the last edition reaches Mrs. Madison it contains only a brief paragraph, referring to the murdered as "unknown." With trembling hands she puts away the pistol she has been holding in readiness. Meanwhile she has found on the floor where Muriel has dropped it, the letter concerning the mortgage. She persuades her husband to cancel the demand, charging the sum to her own allowance.

KAY BEE.

THE PHANTOM ON THE HEARTH (Two Parts—March 19).—Rev. Larney is a vilage clergyman. He has a beautiful daughter, Agnes. Several years before the clergyman's wife deserted him to join a circus. This act has caused the old man deep sorrow. Agnes, having the hereditary taint in her system, is elated when a circus comes to town, and, seeing an advertisement for a parachute jumper, applies for the position. She is engaged and joins the circus in a neighboring town. Her father, on discovering her departure, surmises that the lure of the circus has drawn her and leaves to find her.

Mrs. Larney, mother of Agnes, drifts in to see her old associates of the ring. She is a wreck of her former self. While there she discovers that Agnes is her daughter. She feigns illness and sends Agnes for a doctor, thus preventing her from the ascent with the balloonist, she herself taking Agnes' place in the basket veiled so the balloonist will not discover the sub-substitution. The balloon is struck by lightning while the pastor, who has arrived on the circus grounds in search of Agnes, watches with horrified eyes. The balloon is wrecked and the mother and balloonist both killed. Agnes returns home with her father.

DOMINO.

THE MILL BY THE ZUYDER ZEE (Two Parts—March 18).—A messenger rides into the Dutch vilage of Schermer with the news that the Spaniards are aproaching to attack the village. The burgomaster calls a council of the elders and they agree to surrender, as the town is in no condition to withstand a siege. After the surrender of the town, the Spanish officers are quartered upon the head men of the town for entertainment. The dashing and handsome Captain Rondez is assigned to the home of Dirk Myneer. He is at once attracted by Elsie, Dirk's pretty wife, and tries to make love to her. A spy brings Dirk the news that Major Van Voort is coming to relieve the vilage. To distract the attention of the Spaniards, Dirk aranges a fete at his home to entertain the Spanish officers.

"Dead Theatres"

20,245 changes occurred in 17,000 theatres during the past year, due to the adding of new theatres (5,064); eliminating of dismantled theatres (3,120), and changes in name (4,060), and ownership (8,001).

Because of these numerous changes it is very difficult to maintain an accurate and complete mailing list.

From the results of analyses we have made of other mailing list methods and the lists themselves, it is fair to assume that in the average lists covering the United States, fully one-third of the names represent theatres no longer in existence, and many thousand active theatres are not listed.

We have the only organization and system that is sufficiently flexible and efficient to properly secure, handle and record these changes. Returns of undelivered mail cannot be relied upon to clear the list of "dead" theatres, because mail addressed to a theatre no longer in existence is usually delivered to the former exhibitor or proprietor if he still resides in the same locality, irrespective of his present vocation.

During the course of the fete, Rondez makes ardent love to Elsie, much to her disgust. While he is so engaged, the Dutch reinforcements arrive and are joined by a band of armed villagers. The Dutch succeed in routing the Spaniards.

When Captain Rondez realizes that the battle is lost, he rushes back to the Myneer home. Elsie flees to the old mill for refuge. She reaches the second floor and being unable to prevent Rondez following her there through the trap door, climbs the ladder to the outer platform used in repairing the fan. Rondez follows and while struggling with her there, loses his balance. The rail gives way with him and he falls into the water below where he is shot by two of the villagers.

A CASE OF POISON (Two Parts March 17). —Mr. Barr is a young husband who is inclined to neglect his wife for the other woman. He refuses to accompany her shopping one afternoon and leaves, meeting another girl, whom he takes to the theater. Mrs. Barr is all broken up. She is visited by a friend who suggests that they go to a matinee. They do so and Mrs. Barr discovers Mr. Barr in a box with the other woman. She leaves very much broken up. She attempts suicide on a railroad track, but is frightened by the rumbling of the train. She next visits a drug store where her nervous manner gives away her intention to the druggist. Instead of giving her cyanide of potassium as she requests he gives her a bottle of plain water, marking it cyanide of potassium. She leaves.

Meanwhile Mr. Barr and his girl companion repair to a restaurant, where they are followed by the friend of Mrs. Barr. She takes the telephone number of the restaurant and leaves. She finds Mrs. Barr has taken the supposed poison and phones for Barr to the restaurant. Barr in great agitation leaves the restaurant, and some comedy situations result as he attempts to leave hurriedly. He arrives home after various escapades of a comic nature and is horrified at the sight of his supposed dead wife. He discovers the half drained bottle of water marked cyanide and after looking over his last will and testament he takes same. Mrs. Barr meanwhile awakens and in an angry mood and packs her things preparatory to leaving. She discovers Barr taking the poison and, removing his picture from the wall of the bedroom, slams it over his head, thus pinning him to a chair. After berating him, Mrs. Barr leaves and we dissolve out on Barr as he struggles to free himself from the picture frame.

FEATURE FILM STORIES

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORP.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode 16—Reels 31 and 32—"The Battle of the Bridge"). —After the eventful happenings narrated in Episode Fifteen, Madame Duval and her band for a time made no outward effort to harass Zudora. When Zudora and Storm go skating one day, they are closely trailed by Gyp, one of the "strong-arm" members of the band, while Captain Radcliffe seizes the opportunity to enter the Ramsey house, where Zudora lives, and search her apartment. In the old half-burned trunk, which contained so much of value for Zudora, the shrewd Captain makes an important discovery. The trunk has a false bottom. Beneath it the conspirator finds a rudely drawn map made by Zudora's father, showing the location of rich deposits in the South African diamond fields.

In the meanwhile Tom Hunt and Jim Baird are working on a plan, through which they hope to possess themselves of the band's secrets. Hunt has finished disguising himself while Baird laughs aloud as he reads the following letter of introduction which Hunt is to use in gaining an entrance into the haunts of the conspirators:

My Dear Madame Duval:—This will introduce to you M. Jacques La Fontaine, a celebrated artist and my dear friend. If you can prevail upon him to paint your portrait you will be fortunate indeed. Cordially, ANTOINETTE, Countess Rochambeau.

Paris, France.

In the role of the famous French artist, Hunt goes to the mansion of Madame Duval and is soon made welcome in her salon. The detective plays his part to the life and Madame Duval is completely deceived. Before he leaves he has consented to paint her portrait, and hardly has he gone when Captain Radcliffe, in highly exuberant mood, enters with the map he has purloined from Zudora's trunk. Some time later, Hunt, who has joined Baird, sees the worthy Captain speaking in a hallway with a man, whom he recognizes as a diamond cutter. Following the couple, Hunt and Baird see them enter the lapidary's shop, where the Captain gives his companion a number of rough stones to cut.

On the day following, Hunt goes to keep his appointment with Madame Duval to paint her portrait. But the sitting is interrupted by the fountain signal, which warns Madame Duval of the arrival of some of the band. She excuses herself, pleading fatigue, and Hunt is shown out, only to return secretly a few moments later.

Hunt hides himself behind the tapestry near the entrance to the hidden elevator, by means of which the conspirators are wont to enter the salon. He sees Madame Duval and the gallant Captain take a document from the secret receptacle under the table-top, and then leave the house. Meanwhile, elsewhere things are happening.

Jim Baird, trying to keep in close touch with Hunt, has entered the underground passage, leading from the old garage to Madame Duval's mansion and there he has been discovered by Bill, Ike and Gyp, three of the most desperate of the conspirators. At once a terrific struggle begins, in which Baird, by his superior quickness, is enabled to slip away from his attackers in the semi-darkness and make for the exit. There the battle begins again in deadly earnest. Through the opened door the men tumble in a confused heap, and roll struggling in deathgrips toward the narrow bridge across the swift creek which flows beside the garage.

And there matters might have taken a serious turn for Baird, but for the fact that John Storm has chosen this road for a spin in his car. The young lawyer leaps from his machine and enters the fray. With a few well-directed blows he sends two of the thugs sprawling. Baird and Bill are grappling at the very edge of the bridge coping. In the final test of strength, Bill forces Baird off the bridge, but is himself dragged with his victim, and both fall into the water. Storm, having routed the other two, hastens to Baird's rescue. Unbuckling an extra automobile tire from his machine, he attaches it to a rope and swings it to Baird, but failing to reach him, he plunges into the water and brings him safe ashore, while Bill, vanquished, but still very much alive, makes his escape on the opposite bank.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode 17—Reels 33 and 34—"The Island of Mystery").—The half-burned trunk in which Captain Radcliffe found such interesting material in Episode Sixteen, held many secrets. While the worthy Captain and Madame Duval lay their plans to gain control of this other fortune of Zudora's, which still lies buried in the South African plains, another search of the old trunk by its owner results in the discovery of another and equally interesting paper. In a corner which the conspirator overlooked, Zudora finds a torn fragment, evidently originally a part of her father's diary. "Rich diamond find," it reads, "near large flat-topped boulder 2,000 yards, S. E. by E. of second mile post from Zudora mine."

Her discovery makes Zudora very happy, yet had she known of the schemes, which just then were taking form in the mind of Madame Duval, in that lady's beautiful Grecian salon, she might not have felt entirely at ease. Had she been able to follow her, she would have seen the leader of the band, accompanied by Captain Radcliffe and Ike, one of her "strong-arm" aids, going to the home of a wizened old hag, who lives on Craig Island, a tiny patch of earth and rock in a little frequented part of the bay, which has been aptly called the "Island of Mystery." And here, after making certain arrangements which appear to be satisfactory to the conspirators' chieftainess, the party takes leave of the grizzled guardian of the islet. Afterward, they go to see the old diamond-cutter, who is polishing the stones brought to him by Captain Radcliffe.

Meanwhile Tom Hunt, the detective, with Jim Baird has decided to follow the clue contained in the torn paper and goes to South Africa. For a similar reason, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce determine to make the trip themselves, the more so as they learn of the detective's intentions. Carefully disguising themselves, they book passage on the same boat with Baird and Hunt, whom they plan to waylay at the first favorable opportunity. Zudora and John Storm, quite ignorant that anything is on foot, after saying good-bye to the detective and his companion, are returning from the pier, when they meet Madame Duval as if by accident, although in accordance with her well-laid design. Having found nothing tangible against the clever adventuress, Zudora has entirely ceased to suspect her of complicity in the plot against her fortune and herself, and so when the beautiful schemer invites her for a spin in her big automobile, Zudora willingly accepts, although Storm is not altogether satisfied at the arrangement. But he laughs at his own fears, feeling that he is overcautious and that nothing can happen to his sweetheart in broad daylight.

Yet in this he is mistaken. The machine has not gone far, when in passing a lonely wharf, it is suddenly surrounded by a group of masked men. The two women are dragged out of the car, their screams being choked off by the ruffians, who hurriedly carry them to a waiting motor-boat. This soon speeds away and in a relatively short time the party arrive at Craig Island, where Zudora is placed in the hands of the old hag a prisoner. Of course, the men are Madame Duval's confederates and the whole scene has been carefully staged to deceive Zudora. In the meanwhile, in far-off South Africa, many things have been happening. Hunt has located the rich find, indicated in the writing left by Zudora's father, but discovering that they are being spied upon, he takes measures to throw Captain Radcliffe and Bruce off their trail.

In this he is not entirely successful, however, and Baird and the wily Captain engage in a terrific struggle on top of a moving freight train. The men are battling desperately as the train speeds along a high embankment, and strain perilously near the edge. Suddenly, the fast-moving train leaves the track and crashes down the hillside, carrying the two swaying men with it. Captain Radcliffe is picked up unconscious, while Baird escapes serious injury. A day or two later, a hurry call from New York, the one from Madame Duval and the other from Storm, lead the four men to make haste to return to America.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 9 Two Parts - March 10—"Kidnapped").—Concealed in the shrubbery outside of the Villard home, Ned rises to snatch his bride from the man with the black Van Dyke when he is seized by the Villard chauffeur and the gardener and Marie, June's maid. He is quickly bound and gagged and thrown into the Villard garage. He struggles to free himself as he sees June chatting sociably with Gilbert Blye and Orin Cunningham. Bert Villard, husband of June's employer, arrives unexpectedly from abroad. Ned's captors indulge in a card game and drinking bout which enables him to wriggle free from his bonds and escape when they sink into a drunken stupor.

Meanwhile June has finally consented to go on the proposed yachting trip. Marie, stricken with remorse over Ned's fate, tries to tell June of his capture, but cannot. Mrs. Villard's husband, finding June alone, seizes her in a wild embrace and covers her face with kisses. "Bouncer," June's faithful collie, comes to the rescue, fells Villard, bites him and would kill him but for June's interference. She makes Villard promise not to go on the yachting trip, the price of her silence to his wife.

Ned escapes just in time to see June driving away with the gay yachting party, tracing them to a restaurant, where June is forced from the room, while she is trying to go to Ned, afterward being rapidly conveyed on a motor-boat to a large yacht lying in the river.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THROUGH THE ENEMY'S LINES (Four Reels). — After distinguishing himself by promptly coming to the aid of the hard pressed infantry, Lieutenant Brenner is granted a furlough to visit his aged father, who lives near the frontier. Well disguised as a peddler he starts on his journey and incidentally saves the life of General Bradorf, commander of the opposing forces, who has become separated from his staff and is being attacked by marauders.

When entering his father's house he finds the General there, who has requested quarters for the night. Before leaving the next morning Bradorf finds the photo of a Lieutenant in his enemy's army, and discovers a striking resemblance between the peddler and the Lieutenant. In spite of his suspicion, and as a token of his gratitude he gives Ellinor, the Lieutenant's fiancee, a card asking her to notify him any time she or her kin are in danger.

Shortly thereafter the opposing forces take position on the Brenner estate. The Captain and some of his officers enter the house, and discovering Brenner's disguise arrest him as a spy. He escapes, however, and finally rejoins his own lines. Enraged over the escape the Captain places the old father under arrest, informing him that unless his son returns before the morning he will be shot. By a daring stratagem Ellinor conveys the news to her sweetheart and he dashes homeward. He is sentenced to be shot in two hours. Availing herself of General Bradorf's card she succeeds in reaching him and with an eloquent appeal induces him to save the life of her sweetheart. A happy reunion ends the story.

PARAMOUNT.

A GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE (March 1 - Lasky).—A young New York society man makes a bet that he can rob a house and get away without being caught by the police. Shortly aftr making this wager, he overpowers a professional burglar in his own house—and, instead of giving the man up, decides to use him in winning the bet. However, the house that he attempts to rob is the home of the Deputy Police Commissioner, with whose daughter he is in love.

The succeeding complications, which arise out of this altogether original situation, are due to the Commissioner's willingness to accept graft and the professional burglar's inability to restrain himself when tempted to steal a valuable necklace. The final result is a happy conclusion to the very troubled love-story.

SUNSHINE MOLLY (Bosworth).—"Sunshine Molly" enters the oil town in search of work. Her first good deed is to help old Pete, whom she had met on the road, to carry his heavy bundle. She is seen to do this by "Bull" Forrest. Old Pete shows her the boarding house and she applies for work. Mrs. O'Brien and her daughter, Patsy, a slovenly girl, who have to do all the work, are tired out and seeing in Molly a willing worker, hire her and she starts in at once. "Bull" Forrest enters the dining room at this point and announces: "There's a new female in town." He is reproved by old Pete as Molly enters with food, and Bull in a spirit of bravado pinches her. Molly is furious, breaks a plate on his head and tells him to keep his hands to himself. Bull leaves the dining room in a rage.

Pat O'Brien, whose wife runs the boarding house, owns an oil well in which he has sunk all his money and is greatly worried because it shows no sign of producing. Old Pete, now very weak and near the end, makes Bull a witness to his will in which he leaves his land and all on it to Molly. In the meantime Pat's well turns out to be a gusher and the O'Brien family move to town and enter society. The Widow Budd takes charge of the eating house during their absence and falls hopelessly in love with all her boarders, who show a preference for her daughter.

At this juncture Mrs. O'Brien engages a professional matchmaker to find a man of family to marry her daughter. She is successful and on making known her intention of giving a reception to announce the engagement, Pat thinks it will be a good chance to give his old cronies in the oil fields a treat, so he secretly invites them to the reception. The night arrives and Mrs. O'Brien and her daughter, whom she now calls Patricia, are flattered by the large attendance of polite society, when who should file in but the workmen from the oil fields! Consternation follows, and Pat's wife is furious that he should have dared to invite such common people. Pat, angry at the insult to his cronies, departs with them to the oil fields, leaving his wife and daughter in sore straits, as the fiancee demands a marriage settlement.

Bull Forrest has been shunned by his fellow workmen on account of his insult to Molly, and worried so over it that his nerves became affected, his sight troubled him and caused him to act so queerly that he was thought to be insane, and all avoided him. Molly discovered him stricken senseless one night, took him to his room and doctored him and his hate turned to love.

Mrs. O'Brien with Patricia and her fiancee were compelled to follow Pat to Oilfield and on arriving were given a cool reception by the workmen, and the fiancee in retaliation tells them that he knows "Sunshine Molly" and that she has been a jail bird. The men are enraged at this insult to one whom they all think so highly of, and hurry him into the dining room where Molly is and demand to hear what he knows about her. Molly says that he is quite right as she was arrested once for attacking a man who would not keep his hands to himself, and pointing to him, tells the men that they will find a scar on his left shoulder. Bull tears the clothes away and reveals the scar, the men at once kick him out and he swears to be revenged. That night he sets fire to the oil field, which is destroyed, and Bull seeing him do the dastardly deed, pursues him to an old derrick where he climbs to the top, pursued by Bull. A part of the ladder breaks and the traducer is dashed to the ground and killed. Bull is carried to the boarding house and placed in Molly's room where he is tenderly cared for by Molly. Overcome by her kindness he sends a note to her by Pat asking her to have someone else wait on him, as "he can't keep his hands off her." Molly answers the note in person and tells him that loving each other as they do, it would not be long before "a man can lay his hands on his wife."

THE PARDON (Three Parts).—The chairman of the Board of Pardons has brought to the attention of the Governor, a case deserving special consideration. The family of Robison, a mechanic, has been rendered destitute by his death in an accident. His widow, sooner than accept the dishonorable attention of Trowbridge, her landlord, is dispossessed. She uses every endeavor to obtain employment in order to support herself and little girl, Esther, but in vain. The child is eventually sent to an asylum by the court as the mother is deemed incompetent to provide for its proper welfare. After years in the asylum, without the loving care of her mother, she returns home, but she is no longer the innocent child of the past. Instead, her time is spent with questionable companions. At a third rate dance hall she falls in with Trowbridge, the human wolf that caused her mother much pain in former years. He takes advantage of her romantic nature and induces her to elope with him. Esther's mother, learning of this, follows the couple to Trowbridge's rooms and pleads with the girl to give up her evil intentioned companion. Finding her pleas are ignored, and driven desperate, she shoots Trowbridge dead. For this she is convicted and sent to prison. Esther, realizing then the great sacrificial love of her mother, sincerely repents for her waywardness. Through friends she sets in motion the intricate wheels of justice, and finally succeeds in drawing the attention of the Governor to her mother's sad case. The chairman of the Board of Pardons, convinced of the merits of the case, uses his influence with the Governor, who, swayed by many emotions, signs the pardon which once more unites the unhappy mother and her repentant daughter.

THEN THE ICEMAN CAME.—Patricia Bernice McGuigan, a graduate of a correspondence school of manicuring, determines to seek fortune's smile by trimming the digits of a small community. She decides that a town, not too near a railroad station, is the one to favor with her presence. Bidding good-bye to her home and her sweetheart, Patsy the iceman, she goes to a small burg to pursue her calling—the "skin-game." While rolling along on a stage coach, she trims her first customer, the driver. Handsome Harry, a debonair and fastidious bandit, holds up the coach, and separates Patricia from her coin. When they arrive in town, they report the robbery, and the community offers a thousand dollars reward for the bandit's capture.

Patricia makes an immediate hit with the rubes, and soon has all the village cut-ups fighting for a chance to be trimmed. Not a few of them lose their hearts to the fair manicurist. One day, the afore mentioned bandit, wishing to be spruced-up, calls at the manicure's parlor. Patricia decides to earn the reward by capturing the bandit. Pleading that she must fetch more water for her patron, she alarms the sheriff, who shakes in his shoes when he learns of the dreaded presence of the highwayman. Patricia, however, takes the sheriff's handcuffs, and slips them about the bandit's wrists while his attention is diverted. Collecting her reward, she informs Patsy of her good fortune, asking

THE COLOSSUS OF MODERN RAILROAD DRAMAS

FROM N. Y. AMERICAN

"Dashing at headlong speed, a locomotive and three cars plunged over a bridge and into the icy water. The catastrophe occurring at Forty-fourth street and Broadway yesterday afternoon resulted in many deaths, including among its victims the president of the railroad company and his daughter. It happened at the Vitagraph Theatre and was the biggest achievement of that company, that is big in achievement.

"Donald I. Buchanan and Ralph H. Ince wrote a moving play around a railroad company's indifference to the safety of its passengers so long as it makes money.

"Love, millions, heroism and treachery make their appeal to the audience, which applauded as loudly as though the heroic actors had been there in the flesh to hear their tribute.

"The drama begins with the death of a farmer who had been run over by a train. The president of the road and his son are aboard the train and go out to investigate the cause of the 'delay.' The farmer's son dramatically charges them with his father's murder.

"Subsequently the farmer's son and the railroad president's son become college chums. In a quarrel after a card game the farmer's son saves the other's life. The quarrel ended in the death of one of the gamblers. The two young men clasp hands in a pact of silence, each believing a blow from the farmer's son had killed the gamester.

"Both young men love the same girl and the rich man wins her hand, through the unselfish renunciation of the other.

"After twenty years the railroad president's son has succeeded his father and the farmer's son has become the District Attorney. That official presses the people's case against the road, and his former friend, in a panic of fear, threatens to reveal that his former college mate is a murderer.

"The railroad official's pretty daughter foils the plot by discovering a letter in which proof is given that the ruffian died not from the blow of her father's rescuer, but of one of their own number. She carries it to the District Attorney, arriving in time to save him from suicide.

"The wreck occurs as the girl, so like her mother, is hastening to her father with papers she hopes will save him. Learning that the timbers of the bridge over which she must journey are rotten, the District Attorney and the president of the road hasten to the spot; one official to gather evidence for his case against the company, the other to save his daughter's life. The railway official runs across the marsh, signalling the train to stop. But no one sees or heeds him. As the train wavers upon the rotten timbers, then plunges into the river, the director of the road's destiny is overtaken by his own.

"The District Attorney, arriving in time to aid in the work of rescue, recovers the body of Viola Ruskin and places it beside that of her parent, pressing his first and last kiss upon her cheek.

"The Juggernaut has slain his second love, as its wealth won his first. Anita Stewart's unique loveliness never shone with brighter lustre. She was seen as the mother and the daughter. Earle Williams, as the worker who rises to fame, is manly and handsome. Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Currier, William Dunn, Eulalie Jansen and Jack Brawn are others in the cast."—N. Y. American, March 9th, 1915.

"'The Juggernaut,' the big railroad wreck photoplay that the Vitagraph Company has been preparing for six months, came on the screen yesterday at the Vitagraph Theatre and proved to be worth all the $25,000.00 it cost."—N. Y. Evening Sun, Monday, March 8th, 1915.

"Nothing is more exciting than a real train wreck, and the next best thriller is a well executed motion picture wreck, such as that which occurred in 'The Juggernaut,' which is appearing this week at the Vitagraph Theatre. One sits nearly an hour watching the film present a story of love and the rivalry of two college friends, before the thriller arrives. But when it does come, it is all the more effective. Over the bank of a river as it is starting to cross a weak bridge at high speed the train crashes into the water. The audience receives a thrill."—N. Y. Herald, Tuesday, March 9th, 1915.

"In 'The Juggernaut' interest centres in the powerful story until the final climax."—N. Y. Evening Telegram, Tuesday, March 9th, 1915.

him to call at once. Meantime, all the rubes in town have lined up, each thinking that he is the favored suitor. Their surprise may be imagined when Patsy, the iceman, comes along and takes the blushing Patricia from their midst.

PICTURESQUE WALES.—All who view this beautiful scenic will agree that Wales is a veritable jewelled spot. Splashed in sunshine, and vivid with gorgeous colors, the Fairies' Glen, one of the views shown, is appropriately named. In the neighborhood of Bethws-y-gold, the waters toss along in tiny cascades. In plumes of feathery spray, the Swallow Falls tosses its way through the mossy boulders of titantic proportions. Conway Castle, a feudal relic, built by Edward I, in 1284, shows but little the ravages of time. The River Conway flows by through the shadows of thickly foliaged trees.

JAPANESE ARTISANS (On the same reel as foregoing).—One would not believe that tub making would be classed as an art, but after viewing this interesting film, which shows the industry in all its phases, it will be readily acknowledged that more than ordinary skill is necessary in the making of that homely article. A series of views, which will appeal to all, is shown of the Japanese cooks making rice cakes.

BUDDHIST TEMPLES (Pekin).—(On the same reel as "The Police Dog," an animated comedy cartoon picture, a synopsis of which was published on page 1200 of the issue dated February 20).—One is transported back through centuries when viewing these relics of bygone ages. One of these temples imposing and magnificent, is sometimes used as the residence of the Dalia-Lama, or high pontiff of the church. Other interesting scenes of Oriental splendor are shown.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode 13—"The Devil Worshippers"—Two Parts—March 22).—Elaine Dodge, who has quarrelled with her self-appointed protector, Craig Kennedy, receives a proposal of marriage from her lawyer, Perry Bennett, and begs for time to decide. She calls up Kennedy, and is deeply resentful when their conversation is interrupted midway by his seeming to "hang up." The apparent discourtesy has in reality been caused by the clumsiness of Jameson, Kennedy's assistant, who has upset a bottle of nitro-hydrochloric acid over the 'phone wires, which were instantly burned. In conjunction with Wong Sin, the Chinese adventurer, the Clutching Hand has a seance parlor fitted up adjoining the Chinese Temple. To this place Elaine is lured by a pseudo-medium, who claims that she has a message for Elaine from her dead father. Elaine is accompanied by her Aunt Josephine and by Perry Bennett. The "medium" claims that the spirit of Taylor Dodge will not communicate while "one named Josephine is in the room." Elaine's aunt is prevailed upon to go, leaving Elaine, Bennett and the "medium." Aunt Josephine, alarmed at the uncanniness of it all, decides to call on Craig Kennedy and inform him of the queer turn events have taken. She finds only Jameson who shows her a note left by Kennedy, in which he advises Elaine to beware of a certain Madam Savetsky. After some queer "spiritual" rites, Elaine is horror-stricken to be confronted by the "ghost" of Wong Sin, whom she believes herself to have slain in the episode of the Blood Crystals. She sinks, fainting, and she and Bennett are immediately overcome by aides of the Clutching Hand, who bear her to the Temple of the Heathen God. As she is being prepared for her exit from this material world to consort spiritually with Ksing Chau, the Evil One, an old heathen steps upon the dais of the deity and tries to dissuade the others from continuing with the ceremony. Wong Sin, maddened by this attempted interference, attacks the old man, who repulses him and the mob with prodigious strength, and, his disguise torn off, proves to be no other than the relentless Kennedy. Holding off the crowd with an automatic, he retreats with Elaine to the seance room, where, assisted by the suspicious Jameson and a squad of police, Wong Sin is taken prisoner. Promised immunity by Kennedy, the Mandarin agrees to disclose the identity of the Clutching Hand, and bending toward the detectives ear whispers into it a name that causes the veteran hero of a thousand baffling mysteries to grasp in unbelieving amazement at the monstrous disclosure.

THE TALE OF A SHIRT (March).—In a desperate effort to be ready for his wedding, the efforts of the prospective groom prove to be too strenuous, and his shirt is soon beyond repair. Fate decrees that it is the only clean shirt in the house. The valet is hastily dispatched to purchase a new one, but, it being a holiday, no shirt is obtainable. Valuable time flickers by, but after a diligent search through an old trunk, a long forgotten shirt is unearthed. Fate has a card up her sleeve, however, and the bone-headed valet accidentally spills a bottle of ink over the immaculate bosom. The near-groom is again shirtless. In the scuffle that follows, the wedding suit is also ruined. He threatens the valet with instant death if he does not at once procure a new outfit. The valet sallies forth, and, with the aid of force and a sugar barrel, succeeds in getting a complete new outfit by overcoming a poor fat man who is unable to resist. He returns to his master, who soon dons the clothes which are, however, about eight sizes too large for him; but love is not particular, and soon the wedding bells are ringing. The fat man, incased in the sugar-barrel, nearly breaks up the wedding ceremony, but succeeds in compelling the groom to return his clothes. Embarrassing moments follow, but all's well that ends well, and the newly wedded pair go to their home—but the groom is minus his shirt and other necessary articles of attire.

HORSE BREEDING (Western France—Pathecolor—March).—What was once a lordly estate has been turned into a vast and profitable breeding farm. Prized highly for their size and strength, the Percherons bred on this farm are in great demand for draught purposes throughout the world. Many fine views of these splendid animals are shown, giving the spectator an opportunity to closely study these massive horses. Many intimate views of their breeding and daily life are unfolded.

PICTURESQUE SWEDEN (Angerman River—March).—On same reel as foregoing. Rising near the Norwegian frontier, Sweden's most beautiful and picturesque river, the Angerman, travels on its sinuous way. The Lake of Kult contributes no little share of the ever flowing waters and adds greatly to the scenic surroundings. The Great Falls, tumbling in mighty volumes over the rocks, prove an alluring incentive to the tourist. Many other beautiful views are shown along the beautiful Angerman River until it peacefully flows into the Gulf of Bothnia.

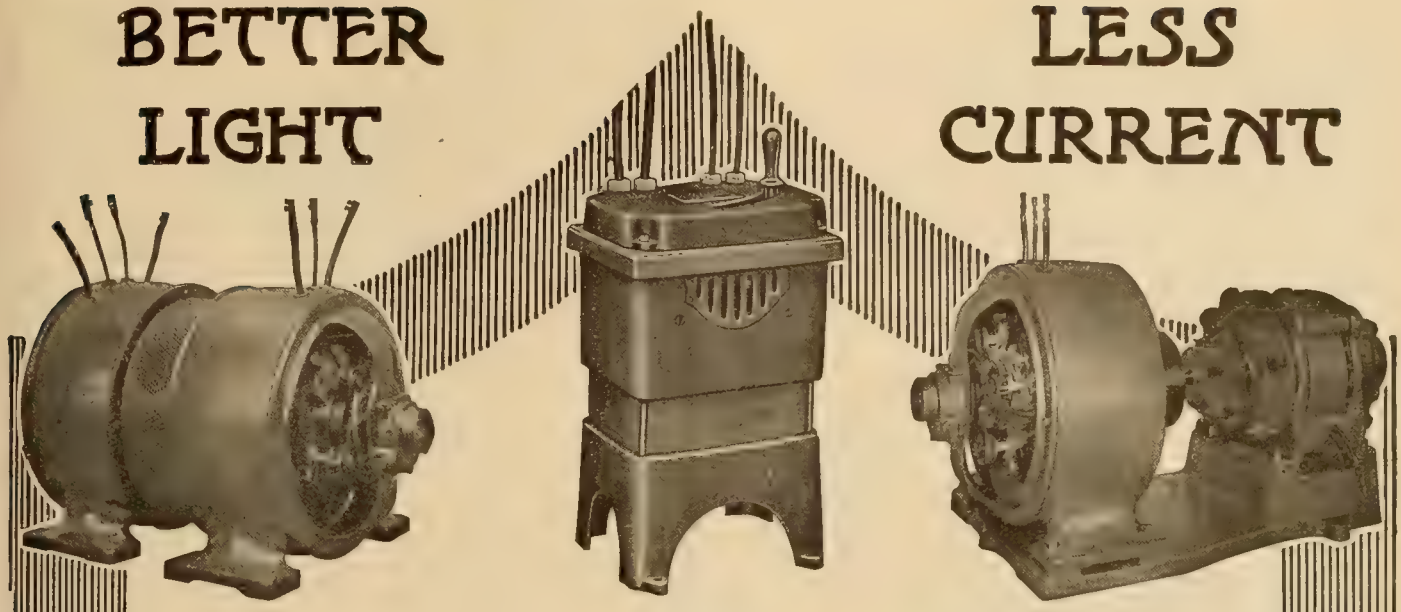
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

SECOND AND FINAL NOTICE

ALL MANUFACTURERS, DEALERS, EXHIBITORS—NOTE!

Patent No. 890,101 issued June 9th, 1908, to A. L. Simpson; Patent No. 1,128,867 issued Feb. 10th, 1915, to J. H. Genter, are conceded basic patents on metalized screens.
The law governing patent infringers is well known. A dealer or exhibitor is just as liable as a manufacturer. Infringers will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

THE WONDERFUL RESULTS AND SUCCESS OF MIRROROIDE

have caused many unreliable persons to manufacture imitations of this world's famous screen under misleading names. They got the exhibitor's money, stung him good. You as an exhibitor and reader of the different trade periodicals have read their alluring ads during the past six years.

How many are still manufacturing screens under their original names? Note—is it not a fact that every few weeks a new screen (?) is advertised?

Now, to protect all exhibitors against imitations as well as ourselves, we will begin proceedings against infringers.

Mirroroide is manufactured under the above patents, is made in the largest factory of its kind in the world, by a corporation with ample capital and resources. Under the original name and by the same firm since 1909. Every screen is sold under a positive 5-year guarantee.

Get our large free samples in pale gold, silver white and silver flesh. Test against any screen on earth. Get in line with the 8,492 satisfied Mirroroide users.

What One Operator Thinks of Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, New York, March 6, 1915.
36 East 23rd St., New York. 858 East 165th St.

Dear Sir: I cannot help reading your book "Motion Picture Electricity" over again. This is the fourth and not the last time. It is so interesting from beginning to end that I cannot put it down before finishing. It is written plain and the figures are easy to understand. I believe that this book gives more knowledge to an operator than many years of actual experience. I see now, after reading your book, that even though I am considered a good operator, there is a whole lot I did not know. It gives a clear understanding about Electricity, Motors, Generators, Rectifiers and many other things which every operator should know.

Excuse me for writing about matters which you know, but I cannot find any other way to express my appreciation for the knowledge I received through your Book. Am sure that I will recommend it as often as possible.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) MICHAEL FRANKEL,
Operator at The Ashers Wonderland,
Member of the M. P. M. O. Union, Local 306.

MOTIOGRAPH

THE STANDARD OF VALUE AND QUALITY

LOWER PRICE—BIGGER VALUE—WHY?

The late model MOTIOGRAPH is much lower priced than other projectors and yet —when you check it up point by point with others costing considerably more, you find not only equal—but actually greater value in the MOTIOGRAPH than in any of the others.

You find a bigger and better Arc Lamp.

You find a Lamp House that has no equal on the market.

You find mechanism parts, such as Star and Cam ground and hardened to insure accuracy and long life.

You find the picture Rock Steady, Brighter and Clearer with these superior points and with lower cost of up-keep, as well as longer life.—You will never be ENTIRELY satisfied until you have installed the MOTIOGRAPH in your booth.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

THREE WONDERFUL YEARS

By Edwin Thanhouser

I WISH that every exhibitor in the country could have come with me in my travels during the three years that the Thanhouser companies worked without me.

A man in the shoe business may easily forget shoes while on pleasure bent, but not so with one devoted to the producing art. That is something that is graven in a man's soul, from his hair down, from his toes up. He breathes it—lives it!

Volumes could not give you an accurate idea of the data I gathered by visiting the greatest film makers in the world, and—seeing pictures all the time! It was a labor of pleasure, a labor of joy—for I looked forward to again taking up my work, making pictures for you and the legion of Thanhouser admirers.

Those three years gave me a tremendous advantage over my confreres in the industry. All the film art on God's green earth was spread out before me in a gorgeous panorama reaching from London to Asia, and not a single matter of business was on my mind to divide attention! I am artist enough to know that art is fathomless—and the moving picture art particularly so.

That's why I journeyed, like the disciples who drank knowledge at the feet of the wise men, to add to my producing resources. I did it leisurely, carefully, thoroughly. I felt like a soldier taken suddenly from the swirling, whirling vortex of furious battle, and placed on a high pinnacle from which he can look down on the conflict and study his next move.

I am the ONLY MAN in the producing business who ever did this! Nobody knows better than YOU what my work up to three years ago meant to your box office, but I'm here to tell you now that today I PLEDGE YOU A HUNDRED PER CENT. improvement!

My energy is fresher! My material is newer! My facilities are grander, and my staff is the most tip-top up-to-the-minute aggregation of loyalty that ever made a man's heart glad.

Edwin Thanhouser.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 9

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

One of our salesmen signed a contract with a house in Los Angeles. He spent half a day with the owner of the theatre showing him the finer points of our organization, of the films we were going to give him, of advertising matter we had available for him and how to use it.

When he was through, the exhibitor made this statement, "You are the only boys in Los Angeles who are operating on the right basis—co-operation and services to customers. I like your system."

Investigation in our San Francisco territory brings to light the fact that from 80 to 90 per cent of the exhibitors in that section handling World Film are making money. Messrs. Turner & Dahnken of the Tivoli Circuit, admit our features have built up their business. They have already increased the prices at the Tivoli Opera House on the strength of the plays and stars on World Film program.

They have handled World Film Features properly and advertised them well. We have co-operated with them in every detail. They get more people and a better class of people going to them than any other house in town.

Ten pages of this magazine would not be enough to tell all the established, substantiated facts which prove THE BLACK BOX to be the greatest serial ever conceived or produced.

No serial has ever approached the Booking Record of THE BLACK BOX before the release date.

No serial has ever drawn the crowds in record breaking numbers such as are reported to us daily from all sections of the country.

No serial has ever had the Mighty Helping Hand of the UNIVERSAL extended to it to so great an extent as THE BLACK BOX.

No serial has ever had so complete and comprehensive an Advertising Campaign as THE BLACK BOX.

No serial has ever created so great a furore among the fans with its very first episode as this marvelous masterpiece, THE BLACK BOX.

All of which goes to prove that the Fans, as well as Exhibitors, know and appreciate Universal Pictures above all others.

ANNIVERSARY OF

"TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY"

AND

A Few Thoughts Related to the Subject

March 20th marks the first anniversary of the release of that great screen triumph, "Tess of the Storm Country." . . . In that fact itself, there is nothing particularly significant, but in its underlying and correlating influences there is abundant food for thought.

True to its name, "Tess of the Storm Country" took the country by storm; the story, as a screen theme; the tender interpretation of the stellar character by inimitable Mary Pickford, and the impressive production rendered the subject by Edwin S. Porter, were and are unsurpassable.

At the time of the release of this epochal screen drama, which for simple beauty and strength is still unrivalled, there were some who termed it a happy accident, an unusual combination of story, star and atmospheric possibilities. It is therefore gratifying, now that this subject has terminated a complete year of continuous popularity, to recall that the producers responsible for this superb photo-drama were also the creators of a series of screen successes with such variety of appeal as "Marta of the Lowlands," starring Mme. Bertha Kalich; "Such a Little Queen," starring Mary Pickford; "Wildflower," starring Marguerite Clark; "The Sign of the Cross," starring William Farnum; "The County Chairman," starring Maclyn Arbuckle; "The Man from Mexico," starring John Barrymore; "The Morals of Marcus," starring Marie Doro; "David Harum," starring William H. Crane, and that transcendent and supreme film achievement, "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick, which has been termed "the foremost dramatic triumph of the screen."

With that spirit of progress which has dominated all our former activities, a number of subjects are now in the course of production that will be as consistently superior to our past releases as they were to all other contemporary feature productions.

The productions of these three manufacturers have always been of superior excellence. The artists appearing for them are among the most popular favorites of the American and English stage.

Recently several other prominent names have been added to the list of performers. Famous Players Film Co. will soon release "Jim the Penman," starring John Mason. Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. will present Edith Wynne Mathison in "The Governor's Lady," and Bosworth, Inc., has announced Fritzi Scheff in "Pretty Mrs. Smith" for the near future.

Besides these, there are many plays featuring stars already popular with Paramount patrons—Marguerite Clark and Hazel Dawn with Famous Players; Blanche Sweet and Wallace Eddinger, Lasky, and Dustin Farnum and Elsie Janis for Bosworth.

These productions and players are bringing crowds to Paramount Theatres everywhere.

Our nearest exchange will gladly give you information concerning Paramount Service.

The Siren's Reign

A Three-Act Modern Drama
Released Through

GENERAL FILM'S REGULAR SERVICE
FRIDAY, APRIL 2d

"THE SIREN'S REIGN," is Kalem's answer to the thousands of exhibitors who have made the request, "Give us another production like 'The Vampire'!"

The stars who enacted the leading roles in "The Vampire," appear in "THE SIREN'S REIGN." Alice Hollister, who portrayed the title role in the former, plays the Siren in this new Kalem production; Harry Millarde, the vampire's victim, appears as the Siren's husband; Anna Nilsson, Kalem's beautiful leading lady, enacts the role of the girl who vainly endeavors to make the Siren see the error of her ways.

We have no hesitancy in declaring this drama superior to "The Vampire!" If you are a Licensed Exhibitor you are entitled to receive it as part of your REGULAR SERVICE, without extra cost. BOOK THIS PRODUCTION!

You can secure the 1, 3 and 6-Sheet, 4-Color Lithographs from the General Film Company, or A. B. C. Co. of Cleveland, O.

THE GIFTED FAVORITE, MIRIAM NESBITT

In a Drama Strong with Action

The Feature, "Killed Against Orders"

By Mary Rider. Released Monday, March 29—3000 feet.

So vibrant is this strong play with tenseful situations that it contains enough material to make three ordinary "features." The Edison grip-full policy compacts them all in three reels of emotional action and momentous acts. Miriam Nesbitt, ever a sympathy-winning favorite, holds all hearts as the girl, bitter against the world that forced her father into a murderer's cell—though innocent—turning into a cunning crook with masterful verve. A real feature in regular service.

An action-full romantic story in the most romantic of periods

"THE BOSTON TEA PARTY"

CARLETON KING, PAT O'MALLEY, AND MAXINE BROWN

The big moments in this play come from the love theme skillfully worked into the background of that famous and stirring adventure, "The Boston Tea Party." In days when brave men plotted, with their necks for the forfeit, this dashing play gives us most melodramatic of situations, prettiest of scenes, beautiful dames, set in blood-stirring moments and times. Historically—a gem. Released Friday, April 2nd—2000 feet.

Margaret Prussing in "When Gratitude Is Love"

This play of the broad open and woods gets into the blood with a touch of real life, with situations that appeal without far-fetched straining after effect. It fittingly introduces the new Edison leading woman, Margaret Prussing, as charming as she is talented. She is winsome in this role. Released Saturday, April 3—1000 feet.

COMEDY DRAMA IN SPECIAL SERVICE

"My Friend from India" has all the spicy humor that the quaintest of comedians, Walter E. Perkins, injects when he steps on the screen or stage. Inimitable, and distinctively different in his fun making, this comedian is refreshing beyond description. Now Ready. In Three parts. Through the masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program

The New Edison Laugh-full Comedy

The Roman Gladiator Dies!

Partners in Laughter Music.

Those Fun-for-all Comedians, Waddy and Arty

(Wadsworth and Housman) In a rip-snortin' comedy

"MUSIC IN FLATS"

The trouble begins when Arty would a-"singing" go and sings (!) outside the door of a maiden lady whose face—speaking softly—looked like a wet speckled hen. Arty, the artful laugh manufacturer, wades into this sea of fun with all hands and feet. As the singer who never sung he takes the biscuit—and, suddenly, all the non-desirable accumulations about a flat life. Then arrives Waddy—but what's the use of trying to describe Arty and Waddy's fun! There is a give and take—a handing back and forth of the laughs—that no one comedian could ever kick up. Their comedy is really funny stuff—the kind that sets us laughing like care-free children, "tickled to death." The Arty and Waddy Comedies have put more gingery life into programs than any team yet appearing on the screen. And it's not a weekly presentation of the same old mannerisms, but something new—something fresh and different every time. That's the new Edison comedy. A great string of 'em is now on tap. Tap this rich vein of humor and money. Book all the Waddy and Arty Comedies.

Carleton King, the Comedian of the Stage in the comedy

"A LUCKY LOSER"

The stage lost a comedian of first rank when Edison signed Carleton King. In "A Lucky Loser," he finds himself in all his old-time funny style and makes his "night out" hilariously funny. The situation's rich—a wife picking her hubby's pocket when on the way to a quiet little game and he nabs the wrong "thief." King is happily and well named when it comes to getting over real comedy that needs no subtitle to explain. He is earning the success in screen comedy that he has in dramatic roles. (Released Wednesday, March 31—1000 feet.)

HANLON BROTHERS' FAMOUS "FANTASMA"

Those Exhibitors who have booked this most famous of all fantasies have learned what we meant when we said that no play—making no exceptions—ever enjoyed the wide popularity that this great mixture of fun, fairy adventure, beautiful romance, fantastic fun and wonderful illusions. The original Hanlon plays the world-famous clown. In five parts—Ready. Secured through special service of the General Film Company.

THE JUGGERNAUT

IN FIVE PARTS

THE COLOSSUS OF MODERN RAILROAD DRAMAS

FROM N. Y. AMERICAN

"Have you seen the big wreck?"

Wherever you happen to be, on the subway car, in a restaurant, on the street corner, at a soda water fountain, at a tea or dinner table, you are liable to hear this question. It is an ill-informed person, indeed, who makes the reply, "No. Where is it?"

For the railroad wreck is not on one of the great steel network of railroads leading into and out of New York. It is in the very hub of the city, where the city's revolutions, so to speak, begin. Four million persons move back and forth, in and round and round the spot where that wreck occurs. Many of them, horror-haunted, yet fascinated, stop to look at it in all its grim details.

Have you ever seen a pretty young girl on the way to happiness, to the very fullness of joy, and seen her dashed to death? That is the sight that awaits you at the railroad wreck, of which all the town is talking.

Have you seen a girl, young, beautiful, innocent, expiate the sins of one of her parents in a grim, sudden, inescapable way?

Have you watched a love affair in its earliest and most beautiful stage, the stage that is most delicate, most enchanting, because as yet no word has been spoken, when looks alone have been eloquent? And have you seen that beautiful love flower blighted by the frost of death?

Have you ever looked on while a man reaped what he had sowed? Looked on while the chains forged by his own act tightened around him until they crushed him?

All these you will see in the big railroad wreck that occurs on the crowded corner of Broadway and Forty-fourth street, twice every day. The Vitagraph Theatre furnishes the spectacle, which is a mountain peak of attainment in the brilliant career of the Vitagraph Company of America. Furthermore, you will see a spectacle so real and so dramatic that it holds the audience breathless.

The train, bearing the railroad president's daughter and her fellow passengers, nears a bridge, the timbers of which the company have allowed to rot "to save expense." The railroad president, learning of the situation, tries to intercept the train, and by his signals stop it. But the train rushes steadily on to its doom. The girl's face, pure, serene, beautiful, shines starlike out of the dusk of the car. The train swings boldly upon the bridge. The bridge totters. Its rotten timbers part. The train pauses, trembling, human-like, at the doom it faces, then plunges into the water below.

The scene of the attempted rescue, of the white faces turned toward the sky, of the girl with inky, dripping hair and closed eyes, being laid beside her father, who has died of the horror he witnessed, is grim tragedy, but real, powerfully true.

"The Juggernaut" crowds the Vitagraph Theatre to the streets.—N. Y. American.

"'The Juggernaut,' the big railroad wreck photoplay that the Vitagraph Company has been preparing for six months, came on the screen yesterday at the Vitagraph Theatre and proved to be worth all that it cost."—N. Y. Evening Sun, Monday, March 8th, 1915.

"Nothing is more exciting than a real train wreck, and the next best thriller is a well executed motion picture wreck, such as that which occurred in 'The Juggernaut,' which is appearing this week at the Vitagraph Theatre. One sits nearly an hour watching the film present a story of love and the rivalry of two college friends, before the thriller arrives. But when it does come, it is all the more effective. Over the bank of a river as it is starting to cross a weak bridge at high speed the train crashes into the water. The audience receives a thrill."—N. Y. Herald, Tuesday, March 9th, 1915.

"In 'The Juggernaut' interest centres in the powerful story until the final climax."—N. Y. Evening Telegram, Tuesday, March 9th, 1915.

Facts and Comments

AN IMPORTANT decision has just been rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department of this state. The exhibitors in Yonkers had made a test case against a local ordinance passed by the Board of Aldermen. This ordinance attempted to close the moving picture theaters on Sunday. A pianist in the employ of a prominent exhibitor submitted to arrest for an alleged violation of this ordinance. This enabled the exhibitors to take it up to the Appellate Division and the latter tribunal has now rendered a decision setting forth that the Aldermen have no authority to pass a law which is in conflict with the statutes of the state as interpreted by the higher courts. The decision of the Appellate Division is unanimous and again confirms the view always held and carefully set forth in these columns, that there is at the present time no law whatever to prevent the moving picture exhibitors from showing pictures on Sunday anywhere within the state. A similar fight was made and won in Binghamton some time ago. Of course, there may be two opinions even among exhibitors as to Sunday opening. We have heard exhibitors say they wouldn't care to open their theaters on Sunday. The law does not compel them to open the theaters and they may keep them closed if they wish. On the other hand there is no reason on earth why they should not open them if they so desire. There are restaurants and other places that might keep open on Sundays if they cared to, but their owners prefer to keep them closed out of a personal regard for the character of the day. The same rule might well be made to apply to motion pictures.

IN A college paper published in the state of Kansas we find a most interesting reference to the value of the film in teaching. The paper speaks of films illustrating certain manufacturing processes to engineering students and dwells with due appreciation upon "the relaxation and enjoyment derived from the best class of motion pictures." An entire page is taken up by what is called "the symposium on the moving picture question" to which distinguished educators in the state contribute. In reading through the symposium we find that all the contributors endorse the educational value of the films and it is evident that they have given considerable and intelligent study to the subject. "In the realm of geology and geography the film is especially useful," says one contributor, "who, having seen the desert, oasis and the caravan in "Cabiria" will not have a better conception of the realities of life in that sort of environment." The educational film will, we hope, be in part at least, a means of combating the evils and follies of censorship most effectually.

THE chaos which has overtaken the feature field is exciting the attention of exhibitors to a greater degree than ever. A friend and correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in deploring the over production and haphazard distribution of so-called features, says: "The people must gradually and properly be introduced to these features, telling them and bringing to their attention the value of these productions and lastly educating the public to pay more to see them. As a result of the methods to-day, the people have become saturated with features and are bewildered. It has become so very ordinary and common to see five and six reel features that they are losing their drawing power. What, after these features, if they lose their drawing power? It costs considerable money and time, as we all know, to produce a good picture. In spite of that they are being thrown about without any regard to their intrinsic value and the public is beginning to take them as ordinary pictures." The feature is becoming the Frankenstein of the exhibitor and there is as yet no sign of the long wished for clearing of the situation.

IT IS a deplorable thing when an exhibitor is compelled to publicly announce that he must cancel a series of pictures depicting crime "as unfit for the young people of his town to see." The stand of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD on the pictorial exploitation of the details of crime is too well known to need repetition. But recently we were present in a theater when upon the showing of a certain film one or two of the women took their children by the hand and hurriedly left the theater. One offensive picture is very much like the poisoning of a well. A few drops of venom make the whole well unwholesome. We hope that some public spirited citizen will arise and institute legal proceedings against films of this kind. They are of infinite harm to the industry and a wicked libel upon the greatest and noblest factor in modern civilization.

"We Have Just Begun to Fight"

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE most gratifying sign on the horizon of our art industry today is the general awakening to the extent and the nearness of the dangers and evils of censorship. Even less than six months ago the producing interests viewed censorship with provoking indifference. There seemed to be a fond belief that the Fifth Avenue Board was really all the protection the picture needed. It took a series of striking and threatening events to bring about a clear understanding of conditions. Only when one state after another threatened to follow the example of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kansas, when the Supreme Court of the United States declared that the state had the right of censorship, that the producers realized what was before them.

It is idle to speculate whether earlier and more harmonious work by the producer might have prevented the obnoxious statutes in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kansas. Nor is there much use or comfort in holding a post-mortem on the legal fight, which so far has gone against the contentions of the legal talent employed. The Courts, it is true, have not decided every phase of the question; they only passed upon what was brought before them. Undoubtedly there are aspects of the question that have never been touched. It is altogether possible that new decisions upon a new set of facts and upon new legal points may be rendered hereafter.

For the present it behooves all the opponents of censorship to shift the lines of battle from the courts to the legislatures. For the time being we have been beaten in the courts, but this does not mean that the fight against censorship has been lost. It simply means that we must change our methods of attack. We must now enter upon a campaign, which has a two-fold purpose. First of all we must do all in our power to educate the public. The next step will be to inform and enlighten the men who make our laws. We need no lawyers to conduct this fight. At a recent informal meeting of exhibitors and producers this point was emphasized by both interests. The fight for this double campaign of education needs nothing more than intelligent and faithful co-operation between producers and exhibitors. There ought to be no middlemen; no mediums of any kind.

If the action of the producers and exhibitors in Pennsylvania and New York may be considered typical of the work in other states much good may reasonably be expected. In both states the exhibitors have risen to the occasion and have shown themselves entitled to the confidence of the producers. Even while these lines are being written practical steps are under way to repeal the censorship law in Pennsylvania and to stop the further progress of the ridiculous Mitchell bill in New York.

What we wish to say at this time is intended not so much for Ohio or Pennsylvania or Kansas or New York as for the exhibitors of the forty-four other states in this Union. A report of the drastic action of the Pennsylvania chief censor in arresting an exhibitor upon what appears to be doubtful evidence has been sent to all the exhibitors throughout the Keystone State with this warning: "It may be your turn next." Indeed it may. Perhaps at this moment you may seem free from the evils of censorship. It may look to you as if your state enjoyed a mysterious immunity from censorship. Do not delude yourself. The censorship law got on the statutes of Pennsylvania almost secretly without any discussion either in the press, or as far as we know, on the floor of the legislature. No provision had been made for a fund to enforce the law, which probably accounts for its easy passage and the general lack of public or legislative suspicion. The next year "teeth" were put in the law, a salary was allowed and an army of candidates appeared. This year the salary is to be raised, more than doubled in fact.

You exhibitors in other states ought to profit by the example of Pennsylvania. It is in your power to prevent censorship. This requires unremitting vigilance and a ceaseless campaign of education.

We advise you to seek the aid of the press. We are glad to say that the press of Philadelphia has been roused to the dangers which lurk in censorship for motion pictures. The newspapers in the Quaker City have had their attention forced upon the evils of censorship as an entering wedge against the freedom of the press. The great mass-meeting of protest and the arbitrary methods of the chief censor made the editors think of their own safety and liberty and they have started a campaign both against the censor and against the law which created the censor. Care will be taken to inform the press throughout the state of the possibilities of newspaper censorship. At the opening of the legislature the censorship law seemed glued fast to the statute book. Only one amendment had been proposed and that came from the chief censor, who wanted almost three times the salary he is getting now. Today, thanks to the vigorous work of the exhibitors splendidly aided by two of the organized groups of producers, the situation is much more encouraging.

The task of exhibitors in the states which are still free from censorship is much easier. It is a task, however, which cannot be shirked. Begin your campaign of education at once. Even if it looks to you as if the sky were entirely clear in your home state, remember there is the Federal Censorship Bill. The men behind this bill make a good deal of the report which the Committee on Education made to the House of Representatives. Canon Chase read the report with all the relish of Micawber reciting his affidavit to David Copperfield. Let us once for all grasp the fact that the men behind this bill are forever "on the job," the chief promoter having his office almost in the shadow of the halls of Congress.

It is painful to note that even at this late hour there are persons, some of them charged (by themselves) with the task of enlightening the exhibitor, who persist in the assertion that Federal censorship does away with local and state censorship. We repeat that Federal censorship grants no immunity whatever from other forms of censorship. We are not fighting forms of censorship. We are fighting the substance and principle of censorship.

It is not and in the nature of things it cannot be a matter for concessions and compromise. We cannot admit the assumption that the motion picture "needs some kind of censorship." We have no other answer for this proposition than an emphatic and unalterable No. The motion picture needs supervision, or if you please, regulation by public opinion, but censorship is an entirely different scheme.

It means a radical departure from all the traditions and all the experience of the English-speaking races. It means going back to the early part of the eighteenth century. It means giving back to the government its old power of curbing public discussion. It is irreconcilably opposed to the genius of American institutions. The American way is to trust the people. There remains that ever-recurring question; who will censor the censors?

Stagey Settings

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

VISITING a theater some weeks ago—I am becoming an antiquarian—I went in receptive mood, determined to enjoy myself. Why not? Is there no pleasure to be found in studying the past through its relics? I have quite a collection of bric-a-brac in the way of theatrical memories, dating from Black Crook, Uncle Tom's Cabin and East Lynne, to the Broadway jingle of yester-year, but I am still in search of the comparatively modern play that may have interest as a rare curiosity rather than as a work of inherent or archæological importance.

Unless one can gush with matinee maidens over Cinderella plays, where girlie grows up and marries grey-templed guardie, who has been so nice to her all the time, or weep over the sad story of the lady who was betrayed by the very warmth of her heart rather than by doing wrong on purpose, one becomes cynical about gush and weeps between chocolate drops. Realizing, however, that any tendency to doubt was not conducive to that condition of mental receptivity bordering on inanity, in which one must hypnotize one's self in order to enjoy a modern theatrical performance, I put Satan cynicism behind me and went in a blank cerebral condition, even as a little child.

The curtain rose on a room with an exterior exit and a window up stage. No sign of the disheartened heroine, nor even of the hero with his hair brushed back. Of course the villain was not in evidence, but he might be expected to appear outside that window at the very moment he was not wanted, a haunting spectre of the past. Meanwhile some cheery neighbors would look in and pass the time of day, incidentally suggesting that PAST whose haunting spectre surely would be seen through that window, else why the window? Who ever saw the stage window of a country house looking out on a vegetable garden or an apple orchard?

There was no escape from the inevitable. It happened. The hero was noble; the villain was as mean as he could be, and the heroine—there was almost a sob in her voice at times. Several of us chewed the stubs of bad cigars during the entre-act, while others drowned their sorrow in the adjoining cuh-fay, pronounced "calf-fay" in France, where it came from. I preferred to stand when the next act began—a wise precautionary measure. It was set in a forest, and one look at the trees was enough. I left without asking for a return check.

How fresh and beautiful it would be if we could transport some exteriors from the screen to the stage! Art and Nature may not be the same when Art idealizes all that Nature at her best has realized for us, but mere imitation, especially when it eliminates the spiritual, is far from being art. Nature in the scene painter's hands is a dreadful thing to contemplate. Her rolling hills, forest-crowned, her distant peaks of glittering snow, her stormy moods on wave-dashed shores, her laughter in sparkling waterfalls, her tender moments, with a note of the infinite in her sigh, what does the stage know of such compelling influences? Are all of her exhaustless treasures for the screen alone? Must the theatre, as Eleanora Duse asserts, be destroyed in order that the dramatic art be revived? If this must come to pass, moving pictures may be the means to that much-desired end.

Instead of wandering out on the barren plains of theatricalism, let us treat this new art as craftsmen do their ornate products, as architects dome churches according to the blue arch above, as textile workers pattern beauty from garden designs, choose our exteriors with taste, take them from viewpoints of advantage, and symbolize our interiors so that they minister to the spirit of the stories we visualize. Let the scientist get behind the beauties of nature to penetrate their secrets—the artist must lead them to do his bidding in new forms of expression.

Let the windows of the country home look upon the rosebush, upon the orchard in bloom, upon the flowing river, upon a far stretch of grain or green meadow, in which there is movement, if only that caused by the summer breeze. If anything is ghastly about the stage setting it is its lifelessness. Nature seems suddenly stricken. The total absence of movement has a peculiar, deadening effect on the acted story, a contributory cause of theatrical decadence and of moving picture popularity. Stage directors refer back to stage directors. Those of the studio are beginning to forget the stage and provide setting in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the story to be visualized.

The tremendous concentration of energy now employed in the production of moving pictures needs constant direction, stimulation and inspiration, to keep that production along lines calculated to insure its own continuance and healthy stability. Its stimulation may come from intelligent criticism and its inspiration from vigorous authorship, but its direction is largely in the hands of those who select end prepare what is to be projected on the screen. They should keep the pictured story free from what is sordidly ignoble, from what is theatrically artificial and deadening, from all that stupifies the charm of our development.

Consider the advantage we have in one use of settings, especially in gorgeous plays of the "Kismet" or the "Garden of Allah" type. The working out of careful and complete details is a matter of constant repetition on the stage, especially if the play is presented throughout the country, whereas the "once over" is enough for a picture play going to all parts of the world. Insistence on beauty, accuracy and good taste in one, means an overwhelming outlay—in the other a matter of very little additional expenditure.

Consider also our opportunities for giving home rooms those small and expressive touches, which indicate personality or which make the place sweet and lovable. Consider how your own abiding place is equipped with little things that please your fancy or satisfy your desires. Let walls and floors help the story with all that is suggestive of comfort, restfulness, beauty, or their absence, in accord with the spirit of the story, and forget that there is such a thing as a stage setting. As for exteriors, God-made or man-made, their appropriateness has carried many an ordinary photodrama into the masterly class, and their beauty is an undeniable factor in motion-picture success.

It is well nigh impossible to eliminate canvas flats from stage settings, but cornices and ornamental mural designs can be built out into actual relief for the studio. The day has passed for unnatural and hideous makeshifts that do not cast their own shadow, but are seen in such false relief that they cast a shadow of ugliness on otherwise attractive backgrounds. The setting should deepen and beautify those organ chords of harmony which thrill an audience most when they are in tonal sympathy with the whole rhythm and theme of the pictured story. The effect is worth striving for.

Why Kick the Stove?

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

SUPPOSE that you burned your finger on the kitchen range. Should you blame yourself for your carelessness or seize an axe and reduce the stove to junk? Naturally you realize that a hot stove is no place for your finger.

From all parts of the country come advices to the effect that legislators are seeking to establish State censorships. From Washington we learn of a movement for a Federal censorship.

Will you kick the stove or curse your carelessness?

Sit up a little closer and look over some exhibits. George Bleich runs the Princess Theater, Owensboro, Kentucky. Recently he apologized in print to his patrons for having run a certain film which he designates as "putrid," an unpretty word, but forcefully correct. A Texas exhibitor writing of his film service tells that he takes an entire program "to be able to have a Blank film every day," repeating some of the best. In Greater New York an exhibitor issues a program. Monday and Tuesday he has features. Wednesday he has "three reels and a Blank." From Newark a theatergoer writes that certain comedy releases are pulling stronger than five-reel features.

Now go and see some of these comedies. Go and see them because, even in veiled allusion, we cannot detail in print. Don't merely see the Blank films, but see others of almost any brand, done in a weak imitation. Then again, consider the censorship question and again ask yourself:

Will you kick the stove or curse your carelessness?

This paper has ever led the van in the fight against a senseless and incompetent censorship. It still takes the stand that a censorship is an offense against the Constitutional rights of a citizen. We still contend that it is class legislation, an unjust discrimination, to censor or attempt to censor motion pictures while ignoring stage and other literary productions. It has always contended that the common decency of the people, plus proper police supervision, is all that is needed; but it cannot be denied that motion picture comedy, not any one brand, but a large percentage of the product, is rapidly reaching the stage where active police interference will not only be proper but will be demanded by the better class of citizens who object to having the younger members of their families being exposed to the debauching influence of suggestion that is all the more vicious because it is presented in the guise of comedy.

Under ordinary circumstances the great body of citizens have held back local censorships. Back files of The Moving Picture World relate instance after instance of the defeat of proposed censorships through an appeal to the common sense of the citizens. But with the public mind in a receptive mood it is not surprising that the fanatics should have taken advantage of that condition to renew their agitations for an autocratic control of what is now the most important amusement enterprise in this country. Some are fanatics, others are merely grafters, but they find the time is ripe to unite in their several schemes.

Will you kick the stove or curse your carelessness?

This writer in the course of his professional work has seen practically everything in the amusement line. He was in no small part responsible for the change to decency that for a time made the burlesque shows profitable. He knows the Western honkatonks and the Middlesex in London. He has seen the Barbary Coast in San Francisco and the waterfront "dumps" of New York, and the worst that he has seen is no worse than much in the present line of comedy. He knew a dive keeper who would not admit boys to his place, not because there was any age limiting law, but because, to use his own words, he was "not running a show for kids"; and yet even the traditions of his "joint" do not equal some of the bits of business that have been witnessed on the screen in the past few months.

To avoid censorship we must avoid the necessity for censorship, and censorship is, above all things, to be avoided if for no other reason than that the censorship, once established, will not rest content to prevent only that which common sense declares must be omitted, but all the material that fools and faddists contend should be deleted. Under strict censorship, half of the reasonable product would be thrown completely out and the rest edited down to the milk and water mildness of the Sunday School cantata, or the public school graduation dialogue.

It is easy to observe the rise and fall of comedy. About five years ago the public tired of the senseless chase picture in which characters ran through from five to eight hundred feet with no reason whatever. The chase was declared taboo and in its place came polite comedies that had little more than their politeness to commend them. Then came a revival. A company, bolder than the rest, decided that the old chase plus an idea would be welcome. It was, in fact it was so startlingly successful that the other makers sought to follow suit. They copied the style, but they lost sight of the most important factor of competent acting.

As time passed, good ideas grew more scarce; to replace idea, "ginger" was used. That marked the first downward step. The moment recourse is had to sensationalism there is no turning back and no standing still. The appeal must constantly be made stronger or jaded appetites will rebel. And the pity is that immorality, like profanity, will always elicit a roar of laughter, sometimes when the moment later the spectator feels the revulsion of disgust. The manager hears the laugh and does not sense the mental processes. And, mind you, the protestants come back again and again until the limit of decency is passed and an uproar is started by the very ones who are primarily responsible for the offense.

On the other hand, many gloss over the offenses for the sake of the humor, and they, too, by their countenance, increase the harm and lead to the belief that the stuff pleases.

Directors see what seems to be the demand. If the stuff is not in the scripts given them, they put it in, deliberately and intentionally. To use their own expression, they "rough it up." The manufacturer regards their action with approval until the time comes to get from under, and then he shifts the blame to them, and finis them.

What really is wanted is humorous action, genuinely funny action, as extravagant, or nearly so, as the stuff now current, but with a reason for the happenings, with an idea behind the action. The story must be intelligent and amusing and it must be told in amusing action. There must be a real reason for the happenings and they will then be funny without vulgarity. There is nothing really humorous in the sight of a man raising a woman's skirts. It brings a laugh and the women will laugh louder than the men, as a theatergoing experience of more than twenty years has proved; but it is not a genuine, sincere laugh. It is the immediate and transient product of shock that may be replaced by disgust a moment later. Precisely the same general effect may be gained by putting a girl in a bathing suit without marked offense, if there is a real reason for the bathing suit. But when a director has to make two thousand feet a week he has not the time to sit down and figure out reasons. He trusts to vulgarity to replace reason, and being successful once, gives worse offense the next time.

It is the almost invariable rule in vaudeville that a comedian's cleverness is in exact inverse ratio to his use of profanity and filth, not that he is clever because he does not use these devices, but because he does not have to use these devices since he is clever. It is the same way on the screen. Given scripts with a real story told in humorous action and they will succeed without offense; but such scripts would cost more money and might be difficult to obtain, and so the "ad lib" production runs on and on to the ultimate benefit of no one but long-haired reformers and the general hurt of the motion picture business.

And when the time comes that we have a nation-wide string of State censorships, when all villains must use pop guns and rubber knives, when bar rooms are wholly replaced by soda fountains, when all heroes are ministers and all heroines leaders in the choir, when no greater breach of the marriage vows will be permitted than baking heavy biscuits for breakfast, when utter immorality will be represented by a gum-chewing toper who drinks three milk shakes in succession,

Will you kick the stove or curse your carelessness?

That picture may strike you as being amusing, but will it be when it comes true? You know what censors have done; but do you realize all that censors can do when backed by public approval, as they will be if these coarse comedies continue? Think that over, Mr. Manufacturer, and decide NOW whether you are going to like it. Think that over, Mr. Exchange Man, and estimate how many customers you will have. Think that over, Mr. Exhibitor, and figure on your chances of being in the picture business then. Isn't it time to do something before it is too late?

This is no arraignment of the present National Board of Censorship. It is a plea that their rulings be observed. They can keep us out of fanatical censorships if only their decisions be respected. You'll still have trouble with the ultra-good, of course, but you'll have public opinion with you instead of against you. And that's what counts.

A Protest

Editor, Moving Picture World,

Dear Sir: I am only one of the millions who enjoy the "movies," and because I should like to feel sure of continued enjoyment I make this protest against the rude, "bad taste in your mouth" sort of stuff that all of the companies more or less are dishing up to a helpless public as "comedy." The artistic work that is being put out in the dramatic line by the best companies must command the attention and delight of all lovers of the beautiful and unusual. A great deal of the work calculated to bring the laugh put out by these same companies does, I grant you, win the loud guffaw of the coarse-minded man and the crackling, empty giggle of the empty-headed woman; but the thousands of finer feeling are only disgusted and revolted. The rise of the picture play to the position it occupies today among the intelligent and refined people has not been over-rapid, and its decline with such people will not be slow if the companies cannot offer refined and pleasant comedy. Let them, therefore, pause and consider whether the loyal support of the best people is not worth while, and whether as a public mission it is not eminently worth their while to educate the vitiated tastes of those less refined. God knows there are enough degrading influences at work in the world without the moving pictures going into the business.

The Value of a Picture

A Plea for the Glory of the Picture Business as It is To-day.

By Hanford C. Judson.

IT HAPPENS to be that the Kalem Company is selling four times as many "bookings" of its masterpiece, "From the Manger to the Cross," for the present lenten season than for the same time last year. This picture is more than three years old and certain things connected with its steady growth in popularity are well worth pointing out. No one can deny that there are many machine-made pictures of little value and some that in their vulgarity may tend to degrade the finer sensibilities; but on the other hand, how many offerings there are whose value can not be estimated. Taken together, program offerings and features, they bring to our eyes such a confused and heterogeneous flow of situations and faces that it is almost impossible to find any distinct tendency or promise for the future in them. We see the art in its present state commercialized; we hear it said that the poor offering sells as well as the good one that has cost more to make; but we are too close to the business to see it in the proper perspective and so we put the emphasis on the wrong things.

Let us get to some distant period and look back on to-day. Perhaps—indeed there is every reason to think it likely—in some future issue of this Moving Picture World, say a hundred years from now, an article will voice a plea for a return to early methods of picture making and recall the glorious decade of from 1910 to 1920. Truly glorious this age will seem, for then all that to-day troubles us will be forgotten and the pictures that we fail to make enough of will remain, if not actually then by direct and careful derivation. But the value of prophesy lies solely in the reasons behind it. We can not profitably dream of the technique of to-morrow: this is to-day. But in the humanity it puts into its pictures, that time will have no advantage over us. It is not probable that the makers of the future will use more care, earnest effort or money than many present makers use, and one thing is sure of to-day, that it is magnificantly open-minded and progressive toward the best.

This is true and, it being true, what is the value of our censor wisdom to-day, new born and our eyes not opened yet to this new gift of life of ours, a new art? We can not grow and progress without freedom. Liberty of normal growth should not be denied to us. We have grown; and our growth is due to censorship; but not state censorship, for the votes were cast in the box offices of thousands of theaters. A few years ago the Jesse James pictures were making a hit and "The Great Train Robbery" was making a hit; but they would never pay to-day. Patrons want a different kind of offering. Exhibitors know the houses where such pictures would pay and know that the newer theaters in the residential sections and in the smaller towns, where they would never go at all, are now playing to the bigger part of the business. The health of the business is due to its extending borders; the new patron wants better pictures, better than the average to-day and he will get them, for he and his family have the money to keep exhibitor and maker in business.

If pictures were as a rule vulgar, they wouldn't have cleaned, and undoubtedly they have had much to do with cleaning the whole field of amusements. The writer was just talking with William Wright (Bill Kalem); he doesn't need to be introduced, and there is no one who is better qualified to speak on this subject. There were, he says, not so long ago, not only here in New York—and he thinks that conditions here are worse for several reasons than anywhere else in this country—but in many smaller cities, plenty of loose and vulgar vaudeville shows such as no one sees to-day. There never has been any censorship of vaudeville; but they are gone. The police perhaps closed some of them; but pictures closed the rest and they won't come back. It is because pictures are decent enough to be seen that some are crying "Censor them; censor them!"

Morosco Producing "Help Wanted"

Lois Meredith Secured to Appear At Head of Cast in Original Role.

THE Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, associated with Bosworth, Inc., and which will shortly release its initial production on the Paramount Program, "Pretty Mrs. Smith," featuring Fritzi Sheff, has selected for its second release, "Help Wanted," the well-known Morosco success by Jack Lait.

For the principal role of this stirring comedy-drama, the producers have secured Lois Meredith, the piquant and charming little leading lady who appeared with such success in this part last season at the Maxine Elliott theatre, New York City. Miss Meredith has already reached the Bosworth - Morosco studios at Los Angeles and is now actively engaged in the production of the forthcoming release.

Lois Meredith.

One of the youngest stars of the American stage, Lois Meredith has had a remarkable career in theatricals despite her age, and many will readily recollect with what success she appeared before Metropolitan audiences in such productions as "Everywoman," "Racketty Packetty House," "Within the Law" and other Broadway attractions of equal prominence. In the character of Gertie Meyer, the innocent little stenographer who becomes enmeshed in a web of complications as a result of her rejections of her employer's unscrupulous attentions, Miss Meredith immediately won the hearts of the largest audiences which packed the Maxine Elliott during the run of the play there.

The original production of "Help Wanted" appeared at the Cort theater, Chicago, where it scored an instantaneous triumph and played to big business for the full length of the season, establishing new records for attendance and receipts. The subject received wide publicity throughout the country and appeared in serial form in the newspapers.

FLINTOM REPORTS BETTER BUSINESS.

A. D. Flintom, the head of the Monarch Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, made a special trip to New York to confer with President Cobe, of the Alliance, upon several important matters.

Mr. Flintom states that the conditions in his territory, which embraces the states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, are very satisfactory, and are continually getting better. He also asserts that there is more money in circulation and less idle hands now than there has been since the present period of depression began.

"The week previous to my departure from Kansas City both the main office and our Des Moines exchange had one of the largest booking sheets in the history of our firm. I believe that if all the exchange men would go ahead, regardless of hard times, and give the exhibitor the pictures that attract money into the box office that there would not be so many 'long faces' in evidence."

Preparing Vault Regulations.

Experiments of Importance to All Film Men Are Made by National Fire Protection Association in Co-operation with Manufacturers' Committee.

By Lynde Denig.

TO WILLIAM SISTROM, of the Universal Company, belongs first credit for a tactful, strong and seemingly successful presentation of the case of the manufacturers in relation to the "Rules and Regulations Governing the Storage and Handling of Nitro-Cellulose Motion Picture Film," as recommended by the National Fire Protection Association. Early in January he was instrumental in organizing a committee representing the film manufacturers, and since that time he has exerted every effort to bring about co-operation between the Board of Fire Underwriters and film men in preparing regulations satisfactory to all concerned. A direct result of a suggestion of the committee was a series of tests arranged by the National Fire Protection Association and conducted in the yard of the New York Fire Department Repair Shop, West Fifty-sixth street and Twelfth avenue, on the morning of March 11.

The immediate purpose of the tests—to be followed by others of a more exhaustive nature—was to learn the correct size of the pressure relief opening of a storage vault, relative to its capacity and the number of films contained. Incidentally they were intended to verify the accuracy of experiments made by the United States Geological Survey, through which it was determined that for every kilogram of film there should be a pressure relief opening of two square centimeters. It is probable that the final tests, based on the results of March 11, will be made with a full-sized vault.

Apart from the useful information gained, the gathering in the repair shop yard was significant in showing the willingness of city authorities and fire underwriters to meet film men more than half way in the consideration of their problems. A list of those in attendance, however, does not reflect credit on the picture manufacturers, all of whom will be affected by the conclusions reached by the Fire Protection Association. On this occasion the entire film industry was represented by Mr. Sistrom and J. M. Nicholaus of the Universal company and Alfred Weiss of the Mutual company, whereas the showing of fire experts and city officials was impressive. In the party were F. G. T. Stewart, of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters; C. A. Gasser, of Newark, inspector of the bureau of combustibles; W. H. Carter, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and A. G. Wilbor, of Hartford, Conn., all members of the committee representing the National Fire Protection Association; Charles A. Hexamer, secretary of the Philadelphia Underwriters' Association and chairman of the committee on combustibles and explosives of the National Fire Protection Association; William McDevitt, engineer of the Philadelphia Fire Underwriters and chief inspector of the Board of Fires; Chief Hammitt, Chief Demarest and Inspector Hille, all of the New York Fire Department; Captain Carpenter, of the Bureau of Safe Transportation of Explosives of the American Railway Association and A. E. Ewen, of the New York Fire Underwriters.

From drawings made by Mr. Stewart, the fire department had constructed a steel pipe 3 feet and 10 inches long with an internal diameter of 12 inches, giving a capacity of 3 cubic feet. For each of the eight experiments, the size of the vent was altered, the amount of film placed in the pipe was weighed and a record was kept of the time it took to burn and the extent of the pressure. The film was ignited by a spark plug. For most of the men present the sight of burning film was a novelty and the notes taken on its action under the varying conditions will be of assistance in determining the nature of the more complicated experiments, according to Mr. Stewart.

When asked about the result of the tests, Mr. Stewart said that he would not be able to make any report until further information had been gathered from the additional trials that probably will be conducted during the week of March 21st. Particular interest attached to the last of the eight tests in which 49 lbs. 2 oz. of film in separate cans were placed in the pipe with about 12 lbs. of naked film for a torch. The relief opening was 3 inches in diameter. Under these conditions the film burned in one minute, forty-five seconds, many of the cans opened, indicating that they contained sufficient gas to push off the covers, and even where the covers remained in place, the contents of the boxes was completely destroyed.

In commenting on the lesson of this experiment as it may be applied to storage vaults, Mr. Stewart said that keeping reels in cans is a safeguard against fire; but that once the flames gain headway the protection is of no avail, which recalls the Vitagraph fire when a room was burned out and even the films deposited in boxes not reached by the blaze, were charred and useless.

Tracing the progress of the important work being accomplished by the committee of which Mr. Sistrom is the moving spirit, one must return to a meeting on the afternoon of January 19, attended by F. G. Meyer, Famous Players' Film Company; W. J. Lockart, Kriterion Film Service; Arthur James and W. F. Rogers, Mutual Film Corporation; C. A. Willat, Willat Studio and N. Y. Motion Picture Corporation; Mr. Sistrom and Mr. Nicholaus, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Carl Anderson, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Mr. Sistrom reported that a committee of the National Fire Protection Association had issued a schedule for "rating moving picture film factories using nitro-cellulose film," that this schedule was not binding on any actual rating bureau; but that it probably would be adopted in part, at least, by the Rating Bureaus of the Eastern territory. He further reported that he had been in communication with Mr. Stewart, chairman of a committee representing the National Fire Protection Association, and that Mr. Stewart had expressed his willingness to hold the final report until representatives of the film interests had been heard from, providing they took prompt action. Among the most important conclusions reached after a general discussion were these:

That the recommendation made by committees representing fire insurance interests are of extreme importance because of the influence they have on local rating bureaus and municipal authorities.

That the principal objects of the proposed organization should be to co-operate with committees representing insurance interests, or local government authorities in drafting regulations covering the operation of film plants and exchanges, and to take necessary action from time to time to disseminate accurate information covering approved methods of guarding against the actual fire hazards connected with the industry, it being recognized that erroneous ideas as to the actual risks must necessarily result in impractical regulations and excessive insurance rates.

At the next meeting, January 26, the committee agreed to a set of regulations, which Mr. Sistrom was asked to place in proper form and bring to the attention of Mr. Stewart. The chief points of issue between the manufacturers' committee and the recommendations of the National Fire Protection Association, were in relation to the size of vaults used for the storage of films, their location and the maximum number of reels the vaults might contain.

The opening paragraph in the Protection Association's proposed regulations read: "Nitro-cellulose motion picture films should preferably be stored in a separate building or vault; if a limited quantity is permitted in a building with other occupancy, or in an exposed building, it must be in standard fireproof vaults, safes, or cabinets."

This suggested the vital question, "What is a limited quantity?" Also in the very nature of the film business, the use of separate buildings for the storage of films would be well-nigh impossible in many instances, not to speak of the heavy expenditures involved. Another questionable clause stated that "No one vault or compartment shall exceed in size 750 cubic feet."

In the regulations prepared by the manufacturers, the sections concerning vaults read in part: "Ordinarily no one vault should exceed in size 750 cubic feet, but vaults larger than this may be allowed provided the number of reels stored therein is not in excess of three reels per cubic foot." Then in reference to pressure relief: "The sectional area of the pressure relief opening shall be at least .....square inches. If size of vault is less than 150 cubic feet, opening may have a sectional area of ..... square inches. The pressure relief opening may be covered by ....., or other approved material, providing at least ..... square inches are left open to the outer air."

The regulations as drafted by the manufacturers' committee were approved by Mr. Stewart with only two important exceptions in regard to vaults and the number of reels to be exposed in any one room at one time. Mr. Sistrom reported that for the purpose of personally acquainting himself with the conditions in an exchange, Mr. Stewart would visit the Mutual exchange and added, "he seems inclined to make a distinction between cabinets used temporarily, and cabinets used as a substitute for vaults for overnight or permanent storage. The rules as drafted by the Protection Association will probably have to stand as applied to these latter cabinets; but the pressure relief requirements and the limits as to size and number will probably be waived for cabinets used for active reels in exchanges or laboratories. Their objection to granting a concession on the size of vaults and imposing a limit on the number of reels per cubic foot, is the difficulty of enforcing the rule. They will probably insist on retaining 750 cubic feet as a maximum. On the question of the size of the pressure relief opening, they are entirely open to conviction and suggest that our committee co-operate with them in conducting a series of experiments to determine the size of opening required to limit the interior pressure to a specified maximum."

The proposed tests were arranged, as already stated, and they will be continued until questions of importance to the film industry the country over have been answered. Little has been said about the work of Mr. Sistrom and his manufacturers' committee; less, in fact, than the importance of its work warrants. Picture producers are being offered an exceptional opportunity to take a hand in forming the regulations by which they are governed.

Rolfe Plans Many Things

Has a Number of Prominent Stars Under Contract and Will Release Through Metro.

B. A. ROLFE, releasing through Metro Pictures Corporation, announces the engagement of several other prominent dramatic stars for appearance in forthcoming Rolfe Metro productions. Edith Wynne Mathison, who appeared for Charles Frohman in his production of "The Spy," in "The Blue Bird" and "The Piper" for Winthrop Ames, and who was recently chosen by the directors of the Fine Arts Theater, Chicago, to appear in a special production of "Everyman," and who is accorded the reputation of being one of the foremost dramatic actresses of the American stage, will appear in one of the May releases of the Rolfe organization.

Olive Wyndham, at one time playing leading roles opposite Kyrle Bellew, and later appearing in the original cast of "The Man from Home" in the role of Ethel Granger-Simpson, as Ann Lester in the original cast of "The Only Son," Ruth Wilson in the Fulton Theater production of "Chains," and as Mary in the famous production of "What Happened to Mary," has been cast by Mr. Rolfe for the leading role in George Gibbs' highly interesting play, "The Flaming Sword," the character of which will permit of Miss Wyndham's broad dramatic handling. A prominent male star will, in all probability, appear opposite Miss Wyndham. "The Flaming Sword" will be staged at Rolfe's Eastern studio and will be released the latter part of April on the Metro Program.

S. Miller Kent, famous for his work in the former stage success, "Raffles," makes his first screen appearance on the Metro Program in Rolfe's production of Clyde Fitch's famous dramatic thunderbolt, "The Cowboy and the Lady," which, in contradiction to its title, is not a typical Western play. "The Cowboy and the Lady" will be released on the Metro Program April 12. Helen Case, a prominent motion picture actress, plays the leading feminine part opposite Mr. Kent in "The Cowboy and the Lady."

Valli Valli, well remembered from her excellent work in "The Chocolate Soldier" and the Shubert-Gaites production of "The Purple Road," in which she was promoted to stardom, will make her screen debut under the Rolfe banner and will characterize the Metro Program early in April in Mrs. Fiske's former stage success, "The High Road." Jane Grey, now playing in "Kick-In" at the Republic theater, and without doubt one of the best known of the younger stage stars, will appear in the Rolfe Metro production of "Fighting Bob," which will be seen late in May.

Orrin Johnson, already seen in the Rolfe production of "Satan Sanderson," and which will be the first release of the newly-formed Metro Pictures Corporation, will make his second appearance on the Rolfe Metro Program in Sir Gilbert Parker's famous play of thrills and romance, "The Right of Way," which enjoyed wide vogue on the American stage, a decade ago.

Mr. Rolfe recently engaged Oscar Apfel, Lois Weber and Phillip Smalley as directors, and these, in conjunction with J. W. Noble, who is responsible for the staging of such of the Rolfe pictures as have already been seen, makes it possible to stage and release two pictures a month, which is to be the policy of the Rolfe Company since the advent of the Metro organization.

Miss Weber is now at work on "The Right of Way," in which Orrin Johnson is to appear, while Apfel is working with "Cora," in which Emily Stevens makes her appearance, and Jack Noble is staging "The Flaming Sword" with Olive Wyndham.

Grace Darling Meets Colonel Selig

Grace Darling, the pretty lass who has been granted a roving commission by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, and who has visited the Panama Canal Zone, the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and other interesting localities for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, created a furore when she visited Chicago recently. From the time she arrived at the Dearborn Street station from San Francisco, until she left on the Twentieth Century Limited for New York City, she was the center of attraction. Thousands of people followed the charming young lady through the streets and she was escorted by policemen, who were obliged to clear a path for her. While in Chicago Miss Darling received a dozen or more marriage proposals.

Meeting of Grace Darling and William N. Selig.

She visited the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company, and as a "camera girl" filmed a big scene in the forthcoming production of "The Quarry." She shook hands with William N. Selig, visited the Chicago department stores on a shopping expedition; visited the life-saving station, the Art Museum and other points of interest in the Windy City. Thousands of people jammed the railway station when she left Chicago for the East and bade her farewell.

Grace Darling's personality has grown almost universally popular. Her adventures, which are published simultaneously in the Hearst newspapers and in the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, are anticipated by the countless friends and admirers of this vivacious young lady.

ENID MARKEY IN "THE ROUGHNECK."

Enid Markey appears to fine advantage as the spoiled daughter of a wealthy mining man, in support of William S. Hart in "The Roughneck," a Kay-Bee release on the Mutual Program, April 9.

Universal City Opened.

Only City in the World Built and Used Exclusively for the Making of Moving Pictures Dedicated by Carl Laemmle.

(Special to The World.)

TEN THOUSAND persons cheered vociferously at ten o'clock Monday morning, March 15, as Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, unlocked the gates to the main entrance to Universal City with a massive gold key, which had just been presented to him by Laura Oakley, chief of police of the only city in the world built and used exclusively for the purpose of taking moving pictures. Mr. Laemmle had announced that there would not be any long drawn out speeches, no meaningless ceremony, and thus it was. The formal dedication was very simple, very impressive. The thousands of guests and the officers and directors of the Universal, as well as the officials of the neighboring city of Los Angeles, were drawn up in front of the gates behind the Universal band, and as the gates were opened with the golden key they marched in to the strains of the Star Spangled Banner.

In the front rank were the officers of the Universal, exchange men, exhibitors, newspaper men and friends who had journeyed out there so pleasantly on the special de luxe train over the Santa Fe, nearly two hundred strong. Into the gates they marched, followed by the tremendous crowds which had been gathering at the city ever since the sun was up. All the street traffic was jammed to the guards. Street cars, jitney busses, automobiles, even flying machines, were busy bringing people to Universal City from Los Angeles and nearby points. By afternoon the dedication crowd had grown to twenty thousand, and still they came.

As this tremendous crowd passed in the gates they were met by the stars of the Universal lined up to meet them. As the procession passed through the two long lines of famous players, Vice-President R. H. Cochrane unfurled the official banner of Universal City. As Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Powers marched between the lines of their joyful employees, they were bombarded with thousands of carnations and other flowers, until the whole way looked like a bower of flowers.

All the actors then ranged themselves on their respective stages on the greatest outdoor stage in the world, where they were reviewed by the column of guests, headed by Mr. Laemmle. This took several hours, and at the end several thrilling scenes were staged for the edification of the crowds, many of the spectators getting in the films. In one of these scenes was the McRae Company, which was producing a film in which a village was to be destroyed. The village had been erected in the side of the mountain and when the water was released there was danger for a time that serious injury would be done to some of the populace. The force of the water was more than was expected, and when the dam broke there was a small panic, until it was realized that it was all for a film drama. As it was, several people had to go to the costume department for dry clothes, and Mr. Laemmle, who was standing near the edge of the dam, had to climb on top of a convenient automobile to escape a wetting. Scenes were also put on by Francis Ford's Company, and the Joker and Nestor Companies. In the early evening there was a barbecue, at which the costumes of the Indians and the cowboys and the Orientals made a brave show.

During the day three minor accidents occurred which were promptly treated at the Universal City Hospital.

Francis Ford took several scenes for a big serial which will be released in the near future by the Universal, and Al. E. Christie's "Nestor" Company and the "Joker" Company occupied the balance of the day.

The thousands of visitors swarmed all over the fascinating Magic City, and everybody was enthusiastic over the very successful dedication of the Universal's colossal plant. President Laemmle and other officials of the company expressed themselves as highly gratified with the opening of the new city.

The Governor of California was unable to be present and sent his regrets, and Elbert Hubbard, who had also intended to be present, sent the following: "Dear Mr. Laemmle: Since I wrote you last, some lecture dates have come along that I cannot cancel, so I will be unable to be with you as I had much hoped to be. However, I will be out in California a little later in the season and then I hope to make a journey to Universal City, for I, myself, am a 'Universalite'. I wish you every success. Sincerely yours, Elbert Hubbard, East Aurora, N. Y."

The day's festivities closed with a grand ball in the evening, which was held in the big electric studio.

Hand-shaking was one of the main features at the ball, and after the inspection in the afternoon. Those who were most conspicuous in this respect were Max Asher, Sydney Ayres, Pauline Bush, Grace Cunard, William Clifford, Francis Ford, Victoria Forde, R. Gallagher, Ella Hall, Warren Kerrigan, Robert Leonard, Edward Lyons, Anna Little, Lee Moran, Cleo Madison, Edna Maison, Herbert Rawlinson, Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby, Vera Sisson, Marie Walcamp and Murdock MacQuarrie, Wellington A. Playter, Jack Clark, Eddie Polo, Gene Gauntier, William Worthington, Mark Fenton, Laura Oakley, Otis Turner, Henry McRae, Al. Christie, Neal Burns, Louise Orth, Peggy Pearce, Billie Rhodes, Jack Dillon, Lon Chaney, William Dowlin, and the Princess Hassan, who was garbed a la Orient.

Just before the barbecue began, Laura Oakley, the chief of police of the new city, made the first arrest since the official opening. The guilty party was Carl Laemmle himself, and he has the honor of being the first person who was apprehended in the city. The charge was that he had left the gold key, which cost exactly $285 in coin of the realm, in the door when he unlocked the gates of the city. As chief of police Miss Oakley has to watch these matters, and she had been cautioned especially by I. Bernstein, manager of the West Coast plant, and the man who made most of the arrangements for the festivities, to guard that key as she would her life. Mr. Laemmle was released from custody only upon the payment of a substantial fine, which went to buy votes for the moving picture industries candidate for the Queen of the Southland at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The ball in the evening in the new inclosed electric studio was a gala affair and one long to be remembered. President and Mrs. Laemmle led the grand march, but when it came to the fox trot R. H. Cochrane was able to show the Westerners so much that they did not know about this dance that he had the floor almost to himself. He was the dancing sensation of the ball.

Tuesday's program was also taken up with sensational sets and included spectacular leaps from the Wall of Lucknow by Eddie Polo and his company of East Indians. Eddie Polo was for years one of the best-known and most daring stunt pullers of the Barnum and Bailey Circus, and he is renewing his life of daring all over again in moving pictures in Francis Ford's Company. In the afternoon there was a half mile horse race between the various directors for a cup given by Mrs. Julia Cochrane, a rodeo on the working campus and aeroplane flights by Aviator Stites, who had by this time recovered his nerve. In the evening a special Universal party enjoyed a gay dinner and dance at Nat. Goodwin's cafe at Santa Monica by the Sea.

UNIVERSAL AVIATOR KILLED.

While flying 150 feet above the ground, Frank Stites, an aviator employed by the Universal Company for the opening ceremonies at Universal City, Cal., ran into an air pocket, lost control of his machine and fell to his death. The accident occurred on the afternoon of March 16th, when Stites was preparing to drop bombs from his biplane for scenes to be used in a war picture. On the previous afternoon the aviator had made two unsuccessful attempts to fly over the heads of the thousands of people assembled for the opening of Universal City. His third effort proved successful. Before the accident on Tuesday afternoon Stites had been circling about for nearly half an hour without trouble. Suddenly the nose of the biplane turned downward and he plunged to earth. He died before reaching the hospital.

JAY CAIRNS IN SANTA BARBARA.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a decorative post card from Jay Cairns, mailed in Santa Barbara, Cal., announcing the arrival of the writer in that city, where he has gone to supervise the publicity of the new American feature series and $20,000 prize photoplay. Subsequently Cairns' partner, one Finn, hailing from the Nichols-Finn Advertising Agency of Chicago, arrived in New York and called us by 'phone to say that Jay was busy innoculating his new Western confreres with some of the virus of that society stuff he acquired "forty-five minutes from Broadway." Jay is strong with the parlor tricks.

NEFF HAS FILM EXCHANGE.

M. A. Neff, former president of the National Exhibitors' League, and at present national vice-president of the Ohio State Branch of that organization, is operating the Star Film Company at Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Neff writes that he is doing a nice business, although the only advertising he has done was on a postal card. Here's success to the Star.

Seeing New Orleans.

Blaisdell Mixes With Crescent City Picture Men.—Finds Unsettled Conditions.—Visits Oldest Picture House in Town.

By Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

LAST Saturday morning, March 6, I arrived in New Orleans. During the forenoon I talked with several exchangemen. There can be no question that among the renters of films there is a feeling that conditions in the Louisiana metropolis are not what they might be. As one man expressed it, the low price of admission is not so much to be deplored as is the low rental of features.

The European war has hit New Orleans hard. Among the chief commodities traded are cotton, lumber, sugar and oil. The export of these has been markedly curtailed. There were goods to sell, but they could not be sold because they could not be delivered. Many men were thrown out of employment, not only in New Orleans, but in the large territory wherein are raised the commodities named. Depression has sharpened competition. Many exhibitors, and in the winter season there are about seventy-five in New Orleans, have taken advantage of the situation. Some have extended their programs so that while giving a five-reel feature they will also show their regular run, making in the aggregate from eight to eleven reels for five cents. Of course, as one exchangeman pointed out, there are the old-fashioned exhibitors who still adhere to the plan of giving not over four reels for a nickel or six reels for ten cents.

There is another factor affecting the exhibition of pictures just now, and that is the Lenten season. New Orleans is a strong Catholic community, and during Lent there is a diminution in the attendance at theaters.

A. G. Shear, manager in New Orleans for the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, whose territory includes Louisiana, half of Mississippi and the lower section of Alabama, said that shortly before Christmas exhibitors in the country which his branch supplies were complaining bitterly about conditions. "The trouble was partly due to bad weather," said Mr. Shear. "I will say it has been the worst I have seen in my eight years in this city. With the Consolidated just now business is very fine. Many of the lumber mills that were shut down are now working, that is in Louisiana, where are situated the principal ones.

"In New Orleans a majority of the exhibitors are using two programs—that is, three-reel programs. Speaking about cheap entertainment, in some of the suburban theaters seating from a thousand to twenty-five hundred, they will give you a stock company of twelve or fifteen players putting on standard and popular dramatic subjects for five cents. Yes, I know the Lenten season has hit New Orleans a little, but so long as the sun shines on both sides of the street, Lent or no Lent, the exhibitors are going to do business."

J. A. Nicoll, manager of the Pathe exchange, whose territory includes Mississippi and the Southern part of Louisiana, reported business on the increase. This exchange has been open but eight months. There were two employees in the beginning. Now there are eleven. Mr. Nicoll said that many exhibitors were using services comprising not less than seven or eight reels daily. One of the features of the Pathe Exchange is the poster room.

N. I. Ehrlich, manager of the General Film Company, who for ten years has been in the film business in New Orleans, while asking to be excused from making any statement as to trade matters, very courteously showed the World man through his most completely equipped exchange.

E. B. Smith, manager of the Mutual branch, who supplies exhibitors in Louisiana, Mississippi, parts of Arkansas, Alabama and Tennessee and a little of Florida, said he had every reason to believe that after the middle of April business would pick up to normal conditions. Most exhibitors, he said, are running circuit service—regular program and booking about three features a week. In the city many of the nickel houses raise the admission to a dime when showing a feature. Mr. Smith said that "Winning Back" was doing an enormous business. There was no doubt as to the manager's own opinion of the picture. He could not conceal his enthusiasm.

Louis E. Loeb is the manager of Southern Paramount Pictures, which is a branch of the Atlanta office. Mr. Loeb has only been in New Orleans a few weeks. He is not new to the film business, however. He began out on the Pacific Coast with Mr. Hodkinson, and thinks the Paramount magnate is a mighty good man to tie to. Mr. Loeb has scant patience with those who complain of business conditions. His idea is that this is just the time to start something.

The Crescent City Film Exchange has offices at 820 Perdito street. The company handles all machines and accessories. J. L. Williams and D. Williams constitute the firm, the latter being the manager. They reported business good.

K. A. Bugbee is the New Orleans manager of the World Film Corporation. He supplies Mississippi, Alabama as far as Montgomery, and part of Arkansas. The office has been open a little over a year. Mr. Bugbee estimated that in New Orleans and its suburbs there were nearly a hundred picture theaters which number in summer is increased by airdomes to about 125. He said there was just at this time a strong demand for religious pictures. We also had the pleasure of meeting Maurice F. Barr, the traveling representative of World Film in the New Orleans district.

Paul L. Ford represents in New Orleans the United Program Film Service of Louisiana. Mr. Ford said that while probably in no other city in the United States were conditions during Lent quite the same as in New Orleans, at the same time the United was doing well and expects to take a decided spurt very shortly.

In the evening we dropped in on Josiah Pearce & Sons, the pioneer exhibitors of New Orleans. It took some few minutes to locate Mr. Pearce senior and Mr. Eugene, there being so many of their houses. To be precise, there are six in the big Louisiana town. Eugene Pearce took the writer in tow and showed him the Electric Theater at 926 Canal street, the first picture house in the city. It was nine years ago that the Pearces opened the Electric. It is to-day practically as it was in the beginning. While there are but 150 seats it still makes money.

The Tudor is a handsome house with 700 seats. It is designed on the old English baronial style, with beamed ceilings. At regular intervals in the cypress paneling, which extends all around the house, are fifty heads. These artistic decorations were executed by the students of the Sophie Newcomb female branch of the Tulane University. The mural decoration over the screen and the stenciling on the ceiling contribute to the charm of the house. The screen is so elevated and the pitch of floor and balcony is so calculated that a small person can always see the pictures regardless of the size of the one immediately in front of him. Eighty thousand dollars was expended in converting the building into a theater. The projection room, as in all Pearce houses, contains two machines. In the Tudor's operator quarters there is an 18-inch exhaust fan and also an up-to-date sprinkling system.

The Pearces opened the Bijou Dream five years ago. The house has a solid mahogany front and contains 434 seats. The regular price of admission is 5 cents, except on Saturday and Sunday. On this particular Saturday evening William Farnum in "Samson" was the feature. Mr. Pearce remarked in the course of the chat that he had no difficulty in getting "big stuff" for his houses, that there was plenty of it in the market.

The Trianon, another Pearce house, has 494 seats. Ordinarily four or five reels are shown for ten cents, but at times this number is reduced to three. It is a fine theater.

BLAISDELL.

STRAND CORPORATION BUYS NEWARK THEATRE.

The Strand Theatre Corporation, owners of the Strand theatre, Broadway and 47th street, New York City, recently purchased the Newark theatre, Newark, N. J., and will convert it into a picture house fashioned after the Strand. The renovated structure will be named the Palace, and will have accommodations for 2,150 persons. The consideration involved in the transaction was said to be approximately $450,000. An orchestra numbering 20 pieces will furnish music, and the program will be on the same order as that given at the corporation's New York house. It is understood that the theater will be the biggest in the City of Newark. Plans for renovating the structure are being drawn by Thomas W. Lamb and William E. Tehman.

The Newark was opened in the fall of 1886 by Hon. H. C. Miner, and was at that time the largest and handsomest theater in the State of New Jersey. In those days the balcony and gallery of theaters were supported by strong upright beams, and as the Newark did not conform with this style of architecture but had its balcony and gallery suspended by the cantilever process, it attracted wide attention. The theater was purchased from the estate of H. C. Miner.

Edward Spiegel, Max Spiegel, Mitchel H. Mark and Henry Waterson, are the members of the Strand Theater Corporation who negotiated the deal and who will look after the interests of their new Palace theater.

Paramount Celebrates

The Corporation Is Now Six Months Old and Will Soon Have Bigger Offices.

THE Paramount Pictures Corporation is just completing the first six months of its existence and will celebrate the occasion by moving into its new headquarters at 120 West Forty-first Street, New York. The removal will take place in a week or so. The new quarters are remarkably well equipped and as ample as the managers of the corporation could wish and they have long since felt the need of spacious offices.

William W. Hodkinson.

William W. Hodkinson, the president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, speaking of the past, present and future of his organization, took a hopeful view of things.

"Whatever measure of success has come to us," said Mr. Hodkinson to a reporter of The Moving Picture World, "we owe chiefly to the confidence which we have been able to inspire in exhibitors. We have from the very start tried to make the needs and the welfare of our exhibitors the main subject of all our endeavors. I think we have now amply demonstrated that we are and always have been in a position to give the high-grade exhibitor a regular supply of high-quality films. Paramount today more than ever is synonymous with quality. There is scarcely a day but that I receive unsolicited assurances of co-operation and confidence from exhibitors in every part of the country. We are constantly trying to improve things for the benefit of the exhibitor. Of one thing in particular, I want to assure every man who uses or who may hereafter use Paramount service, there positively will be no deterioration in the service. We will advance, but we will never go back

"We are and always will be anxious to attract merit from producers other than the men who now supply our pictures or a majority of them. In other words the exhibitor is through the efficiency of the Paramount organization purchasing in the open market and getting the best which the open market, I mean the open market of the world, contains. I sincerely believe that the Paramount organization can do the buying for the exhibitor much better than the individual exhibitor could do, for I am glad to say that our resources and our facilities today are stronger than ever before. Let me add that they are built on foundations that cannot be shaken as long as motion pictures continue to be the most popular form of amusement.

"Our efficiency is gaining in volume, I might say, automatically. In this whole Paramount scheme of things I want to assure the exhibitor of protection against inferior films or against any change of policy which I think might not work out for the benefit of the exhibitor. The Paramount is committed irrevocably to this policy of giving the exhibitor the best and with this policy it will sink or swim. The Paramount is not and never will be an organization dominated solely by manufacturing interests. It is capable of assuring the producer of quality a better return on his films than he can obtain in any other way. I will gladly furnish the figures if any Paramount exhibitor is interested in the situation and wants to see them. This is the way our system of efficiency has worked out: Films that, under the ordinary treatment, would decrease in value after a limited period of time have, under our system, shown a much longer life and an ability to hold their maximum earning power. The old system of exhausting the film in the first few weeks is really suicidal and has been found unprofitable to the producer and to the exhibitor. I can show you our first production, 'The Lost Paradise,' and prove to you by figures that it is earning money even at this time and earning more than it could ever have earned under previous conditions, although the average rental price to the exhibitor has been greatly reduced. We have studied out the situation to a nicety with all the charts of the country before us and we have arrived at a degree of efficiency which has never been attained before.

"I repeat that we have the exhibitor to thank for this situation and that with the continued support and confidence of the exhibitor the Paramount will go on making substantial returns to the producer, thereby giving the exhibitor the highest grade of quality and reducing distribution more and more to an exact science. Distribution is the great problem of the industry. Paramount has proved itself an ideal distributor. Why? Not only by reason of its organization, splendid as that is, but more by reason of adhering to a high standard of quality without a moment's swerving. It is our intent not to allow a picture of less than Paramount quality to go to our exhibitors. To merit the confidence of exhibitors is our first aim and Paramount could not be perpetuated in any other way. I am glad to be able to assure Paramount exhibitors that we will be in a position to supply them with pictures of Paramount quality quite irrespective of any developments which might occur in the future. I want the exhibitors to know that we have the resources for supplying a Paramount program in the future regardless of all contingencies.

"I am now considering plans whereby the exhibitor will hereafter be given more of a voice in the selection of the products of competing manufacturers who may want to go on the Paramount program. I think that it would be a good thing all around if producers whose average falls below a certain per cent. on a vote of exhibitors were to be excluded from Paramount program. I probably will have more to say on that subject in the immediate future."

PARAMOUNT ABSORBS SOME EXCHANGES.

The increase of capital stock of the Paramount Pictures Corporation to $10,000,000, noted in the Moving Picture World last week, for the purpose of taking over a number of the exchanges handling its program, covered the following interests held by the directors of the Paramount: Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco, with branches at Seattle and Los Angeles, owned by W. W. Hodkinson; Famous Players' Film Company of New England, located at Boston, owned by Hiram Abrams; William L. Sherry Feature Film Company of New York, owned by William L. Sherry; Famous Players Film Exchanges of New York, Philadelphia and Washington, owned by Raymond Pawley; Famous Flayers' Film Service of Pittsburgh, owned by James Steele.

The purchase of these exchanges does not affect the distribution of Paramount pictures as it existed theretofore. Other exchanges handling Paramount pictures not included in the purchase, are: The Kansas Feature Film Company of Kansas City, Famous Players' Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis, Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, Tex., and also the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake and Denver, which is working under a subsidiary franchise from the Progressive of San Francisco; the Famous Players' Film Service of Chicago and the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit, which are working as subsidiaries of the Famous Players' Film Service of Pittsburgh.

SWAAB VERDICT REVERSED.

On Monday, March 15, Justice Von Moschzisker, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, handed down a decision reversing a verdict for $20,424, awarded to Louis M. Swaab, proprietor of a moving picture film exchange at 1327 Vine street, Philadelphia, against the Vitagraph Company of America, and allowing him nominal damages and costs. Swaab had charged that a conspiracy had been entered into by part of the so-called moving picture film trust, in an effort to force him out of business. Justice Von Moschzisker claimed that Mr. Swaab failed to prove that any special conspiracy had been entered against him.

DAVE THOMPSON EXALTED RULER AND PAPA.

Like trouble, good luck sometimes comes in bunches. Dave Thompson, Thanhouser director, resigned a few weeks ago with the purpose of taking the first rest he has had in four years. One day last week he was elected to the office of Exalted Ruler of the Elks Lodge of New Rochelle, N. Y. Arriving at his home rather late in the evening he discovered that he had still further been honored by election to the office of papa, Mrs. Thompson having presented him with a ten and one-half-pound boy. The question now is: how is Thompson going to get that much-needed rest?

After His Visit to the Coast His Faith in Greater Motion Pictures is Unbounded.

JESSE L. LASKY, who has just returned from the Pacific Coast and who shows the effects of the "wonderful climate" in his appearance, had a talk with a Moving Picture World representative about California and some future plans of his company.

"I come back from California," said Mr. Lasky, "very much of a convert to the splendors and advantages of Californian climate. California seems indeed an ideal country for the production of great moving pictures. We have in the state of California every imaginable type of scenery. If you ask me to compare California with Italy I will say that the climate of California is more reliable than that of Italy and the scenery is far more varied. There is a great deal in California that you cannot get in Italy. Nor is the climate the only advantage which California offers to motion picture producers. California abounds in cosmopolitan types. We can get Japs, Chinese laborers, Mexicans and other foreign nationalities. I have seen Arabs tilling the field in their native costume.

Jesse L. Lasky.

"I went to California for the purpose of increasing my knowledge of moving picture production. You know that I entered the motion picture field very suddenly, as it were, and I have always realized that I had very much to learn. I felt that I lacked the advantage which actual technical experience affords. The purpose of my trip was to learn as much as possible of the practical workings of every department in the work of producing motion pictures. I hope I have in some measure succeeded in accomplishing this object of my trip.

"We have always felt and in fact we have always forseen the fact that there must be eventually two distinct branches in producing motion pictures of a superior type. One branch has to do with supplying the regular feature program. The other branch must devote itself to the production of special plays which are of some magnitude involving extraordinary efforts of the best talent and the expenditure of much money. We intend to be heard from with these special productions of the type of "Cabiria" and others. We are now concentrating our efforts on a certain production of this type. It will take several months, perhaps a year or more before this production can be placed before the public. As it is a subject which might invite imitation, we have thought it prudent for the present to withhold announcing the theme with which it deals.

"In conjunction with Mr. DeMille and with the advice of others, I have practically reorganized our studio. The purpose has been to fully maintain the high average of our regular work and to let preparations for the special productions interfere in no way with the regular work. For this purpose we paid particular attention to the scenario department. In my judgment the scenario department almost wholly controls the whole situation for the producer. On the legitimate stage the theatrical manager does not consider his work even half finished after the scenario is written, but he discusses and considers all phases of the scenario before the work of actual production begins. The idea of meeting release dates at all hazards and manufacturing rather than producing has been the bane of motion pictures. The man who attempts to work out a scenario on schedule time without talking over the various phases of the scenario for a week and maybe even for a month, will have very many failures debted against him. I refer to the legitimate stage when I said this just now, but there is no reason why the same proper preparation and same consideration that is bestowed upon the legitimate production cannot be devoted to screen productions. Without proper organization and the advice of producing experts, no real success can be expected. We have added Margaret Turnbull, the well known novelist, and a staff of capable writers to our scenario department to develop a system of preparation and elimination that promises to give the best results. A committee composed of Mr. Cecil DeMille and myself and others passed on all material that had by this time been worked into scenario form. We took up each subject separately and carefully and prescribed according to its needs. Some of the plays were eliminated entirely for the simple reason that they would not fit well. Others were cast aside because they contained too much sex appeal which will, of course, not do for the screen. Others again were found wanting because in the last analysis they depended upon the cleverness and brilliancy of dialogue and we found that there was no body to the play. It seems most desirable to develop each play along the lines that seem most probable to yield the best results. There are many strong dramatic stories which have pages of monotony. These can easily be eliminated and the "punches" accentuated. Wherever we thought that a play could be improved by suggestions and more careful and thorough consideration it was given back to the department with the proper advice. If we found that a certain play could not be filmed because for the time being the only actor who could make it a success was not available, we simply placed the play back on the shelves to await our opportunity later, or made changes that would dispense with the employment of one certain star. I am prepared to say that I consider motion pictures a most important branch in the amusement world of to-day, and of the future, and when I speak of the amusement world I mean to include grand opera, the legitimate stage and vaudeville."

Mr. Lasky was full of his subject, his words flowing easily as they will from the lips of one who is sure and enthusiastic about his subject. The telephone, however, had become quite insistent and impatient. At the other end were the guiding spirits of a directors' meeting, and the stern necessities of time brought the interview to a close.

Are Advertising for Picture Trade.

People of Las Vegas, New Mexico, Conducting Novel Campaign to Attract Better Class of Producing Companies.

THE time has passed when new proofs of the great importance of the motion picture industry excite comment, but an interesting deduction concerning the regard in which the industry is held by municipal governments is to be made from the advertising campaign which is being conducted by the Commercial Club of Las Vegas, New Mexico.

The people of Las Vegas pay a great deal of attention to the exploitation of the natural advantages of their country for the purpose of attracting new industries and, through their Commercial Club, of which Philip H. LeNoir is secretary, are just now telling what a wonderful place the Las Vegas country is for the manufacture of motion pictures. They call attention to the fact that Las Vegas is cool all summer long, has a clear bracing climate which carries with it the kind of light necessary for first class photography, has a variety of scenery which lends itself to the making of any kind of motion pictures, and, in addition, has the clearest of clear, pure water, of inestimable value in the treatment of motion picture film after the exposure is made. All of these advantages, they point out, are available for the motion picture manufacturer in a community thousands of miles nearer New York City, the natural center of the motion picture industry, than California and the West Coast, favored sections for the manufacture of pictures.

Correspondence from Mr. LeNoir indicates that many motion picture companies have already discovered the natural advantages of Las Vegas and are making pictures there, but also sets forth that there is plenty of room for as many more producing companies of the right class as care to take advantage of the extraordinary facilities which are offered.

HIRSH GETS COSMOS EXCHANGE.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, Nathan Hirsh, president, have recently purchased the renting exchange of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation, and is certainly active in the game. They have bought three Great Northern releases entitled "Through the Enemy's Line," four-part military picture, wonderful lithographs, something extraordinary, "A Deal with the Devil" and "Fight for Fortune," the latter two being heart-interest dramas, and also a four-reel Itala with "Cabiria" stars entitled "The Aerial Revenge." They are also booking the pictures that the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation previously controlled, including their latest release featuring Beulah Poynter in "The Little Girl That He Forgot."

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Regarding the Childish Word, "Movie."

IN a brevity in my Chicago letter last week, it was stated that out of 733 editors throughout the country who cast a vote for or against the use of the coined word "movie," 511 voted "yes," and 222 "no." It is to be regretted that the reasons for their voting for or against were not given and printed.

Within the past week I have read an article in one Chicago newspaper in which the hope was expressed that the word "movie" would be retained, because it comes in so handily in the writing of newspaper headings! In another instance a writer was gleeful over the fact that even the infant, among the first words mastered by him, used the word "movie," and that "movie" was also the children's word and so had come to stay. But somehow, much as I still like the old nursery rhymes and love to hear children repeat them, I am of the opinion that it is best to put away tenderly childish things when one has reached manhood or womanhood.

The coinage of "movie" was most assuredly childish. It stands for "moving picture." The coined word, please note, is not taken from the name of the thing itself, but from the qualifying word "moving." It is not at all unreasonable, therefore, to call everything which is not at rest a "movie," including the sun, moon and stars, the earth, an automobile, an airoplane and the city garbage cart. Even man himself when in motion is a "movie," and so is a fly, and so is that other pestiferous insect with a name nearly alike.

Is this childish word "movie," on the ground of etymology, a correct word to represent "moving picture" in our dictionaries? Is it a correct word from the common sense point of view? Is it a correct word for grown-ups to use, unless they are still fit for the nursery in mind and accomplishments?

By all means let the children use "movie" to their little hearts' content; but in the name of all that is logical and customary in the making and adoption of the words of a language, let us, grown-ups, put it tenderly away.

Selig Special to San Francisco Fair and Return.

The Selig Polyscope Company has planned a notable and most enjoyable trip for its friends, and for exhibitors and their families and others, this summer, from Chicago to the Panama-Pacific exposition and return. One or more Selig special trains will be in readiness to leave Chicago on Thursday, July 8, at 10.00 A. M., each train being composed of twelve section drawing room sleepers, a parlor observation car, a day coach and a large baggage car. Each Selig Special will be electrically lighted throughout, and a large force of train attendants will be on hand to provide for the wants and conveniences of the tourists. Unescorted ladies will be specially cared for by responsible matrons.

The cost of the round trip for each tourist will be $118, including round trip railroad transportation, hotel accommodations at points of stop-over, transfer of passengers and checked baggage. If side trips are desired, special journeys have been prepared, totalling about $6, making the cost of the entire trip, including entertaining, a little less than $125 in all.

The Selig Polyscope Company wishes it strictly understood that the project is not a money-making proposition in any way, as the amount asked for will not nearly cover the cost of the journey. The plan is purely and simply to gather exhibitors and friends of the Selig Polyscope Company together for an enjoyable trip to California, during which the sight-seeing and travel will not only be enjoyable, but thoroughly entertaining and delightfully educational. Both on the outgoing and on the returning trip there will be many pleasant surprises for the guests on each Selig Special. Talented artists have been secured to furnish special musical concerts, cabaret entertainment and other pleasurable divertisements.

A daily newspaper will be published on the train, furnishing every tourist with the current and latest news. At all the principal cities en route, going and returning, each Selig Special will be met by Boards of Trade, and the guests will be given the keys to several cities, and everything will be done to contribute to their entertainment and welcome.

The Selig Special trip will cover a tour of seventeen days from Chicago to San Francisco, Los Angeles, other points and return. The journey out will be by the C. & N. W. Railroad and Union Pacific to Ogden, thence by the Southern Pacific to San Francisco. Returning the trip will be over the Southern Pacific Coast Line to Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, thence to San Diego and Riverside. Train will be taken at the latter point to Salt Lake City; thence via the Denver and Rio Grande, to Glenwood Springs, Royal Gorge, Colorado Springs and Denver, from which point the trip to Chicago will be made by the Union Pacific and the C. & N. W. R. R. Two widely different scenic routes will thus be covered in going and returning.

Guests will have three and one-half days in San Francisco, a half day in Santa Barbara (where the Santa Barbara Mission will be visited), three days in Los Angeles (where the tourists will be entertained royally at the big Selig Zoo), one day in San Diego (where the Panama-California exposition will be taken in), two and a half hours in Riverside (in the center of the great orange groves), one day in Salt Lake City (with a sight-seeing tour, including a visit to Saltair Beach and the great Mormon Temple), one day in Colorado Springs (where visits to the Garden of the Gods and Manitou will be made), and one day in viewing the beautiful sights of Denver by automobile.

For full particulars of the Selig Special round trip, application should be made to the Publicity Department of the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, when special literature will be promptly furnished.

Moving Pictures Used in Making Chicago the "City Beautiful."

Chicago's plan commission, consisting of several hundred members, selected from substantial and progressive citizens who have the future welfare of the city close at heart, sat in annual session the other day while a screen reflected the progress that had been made in working out plans for a more beautiful and greater city.

Chairman Charles H. Wacker declared that the time is not far distant when the commission may be able to have adopted by the City Council, after a referendum vote, the commission's plan of Chicago as the basic physical policy of the city.

The moving pictures shown, which revealed most strikingly the work accomplished, and that to be accomplished in the near future, are being made not only for public exhibition in Chicago itself, but for other cities also. Regarding their worth both for local publicity and externally, Mr. Wacker said:

"These pictures will be the means of drawing the attention of the entire United States to Chicago in a way that will prove of inestimable commercial value. Their influence on Chicagoans will be instant and virile, and will insure the official adoption by the city of the commission's plan of Chicago."

The educational campaign engaged in by the commission, by means of moving pictures, will be supplemented by explanatory literature and stereopticon views.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Francis X.Bushman, Essanay's popular leading man, left for San Francisco, Friday, March 12th, where he will be the guest of the Panama-Pacific moving picture exhibitors. While in the city of the Golden Gate it is needless to state that much of his time will be spent in the Panama-Pacific exposition, where a host of exhibitors will be his guides. Mr. Bushman will attend the mammoth ball of the organization and is expected to return to Chicago on or about March 26th.

Edward A. Salisbury, owner and producer of the Salisbury Wild Animal Life pictures, left this city for New York on Tuesday, March 16th. He will stop off in Washington and will give a special showing of his pictures before the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture. Arrangements will also be made for the exhibition of these pictures before President Wilson and the House of Representatives. In New York Mr. Salisbury will stop at the Knickerbocker Hotel.

Lem S. Miller, of Cincinnati, was in the city from March 10th to Saturday, March 13th, on legal business. Mr. Miller stated that the Cincinnati local organization of exhibitors is now in excellent condition, and that many new members had joined since the late state convention at Columbus. He also said that the condition of the exhibition business in Cincinnati is very fair.

Carl Ray of the Carl Ray Moving Picture Co., of Los Angeles, spent a few days in the city last week. Mr. Ray was formerly one of the best known exhibitors in Michigan, but sold out his interests in the East and is now located in California.

Arthur F. Dunn, secretary and treasurer of the Speed Controller Co., Inc., of New York City, which handles the "arc controller," paid this office a call last week. Mr. Dunn made his headquarters with John Rock, of the Vitagraph Co., during his short stay here, and placed an order with him. On his way to Chicago Mr. Dunn stopped over at Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit. He placed one of his machines in the Reel Theater, Cleveland, and took an order for two more, for the new Broadway Strand, in Detroit.

Rapley Holmes and Mrs. Gerda Holmes recently concluded their engagement with the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., this city. During their connection with the Essanay forces, Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have appeared to fine advantage in various strong characterizations, and the best wishes of a wide circle of friends follow them to their new field of endeavor.

"The Governor's Lady" is the chief attraction at the Ziegfeld for the week commencing Saturday, March 13th. Edith Wynne Mathison, a prominent English stage star, is featured in this production, which is the output of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Henry W. Savage's big educational feature, "Uncle Sam at Work," has been so enthusiastically received by Chicagoans that the engagement at the Auditorium Theater has been prolonged for another week, its fourth in this city.

Salisbury's Wild Life pictures still draw crowded audiences to the Studebaker. They will remain for another week.

The Alfred Hamburger theatrical syndicate has added the Argmore Theater to its chain of houses on the North Side. The Argmore is on Argyle street and Kenmore avenue. The house has been leased for a certain period at a yearly rental of $7,200. The Argmore seats 800 people and is finely equipped and beautifully decorated. This makes the tenth house now controlled by the above syndicate in this city.

John Edward O'Toole was appointed Chicago branch manager of the Kriterion Company on March 8th. He is in temporary offices at 814 Schiller Building, from which he will remove to Suite 318-19 Mallers Building, on Saturday, March 21st. Mr. O'Toole was solicitor for the Mutual in Chicago under F. J. Flaherty, Chicago branch manager, from 1912-1913. He was afterwards assistant manager in the Wabash branch of the Mutual, in 1914, under Messrs. Seery and Eisner. In that year he was appointed manager of Warner's Features with headquarters in Dallas, his bookings embracing that city, San Antonio and El Paso. In November the Dallas exchange was sold to E. T. Peters, after which Mr. O'Toole returned to Chicago. Mr. O'Toole is very enthusiastic over the demand for the Kriterion product in Chicago. When I saw him the other day he had already twenty-six houses on his books for Kriterion service and as many more to start Monday, March 22nd. It is understood, of course, that the Kriterion service does not furnish entire programs to these houses, but that the service is used with the products of other manufacturers.

Aaron Trinz, one of Milwaukee's pioneer exhibitors, paid us a pleasant call one day last week on his way back from New York City, where he and his wife have been spending their honeymoon. Mrs. Trinz was formerly Miss Rose Jacobson, of Milwaukee. Mr. Trinz stated that his new theater, the New Savoy, 27th and Center streets, Milwaukee, will be opened about the 15th of April. This fine modern house will seat 1,200 people and will cost, when completed, about $65,000. General Film and Paramount features will be offered at the New Savoy, Mr. Trinz stated. Henry Trinz, brother of Aaron, opened the first picture theater in Milwaukee, in 1906. This was known as Trinz's Electric. Aaron Trinz, the subject of this article, opened the second picture theatre, the Electric, in 1907, about six months afterwards. Mr. Trinz reported that business in Milwaukee was very good when he left, and that the Lenten season had no effect, whatever, on the theaters. Aaron Trinz and Henry Trinz are brothers of Mr. Trinz, of Lubliner & Trinz, this city, who control the Biograph and Vitagraph Theaters.

Tom Kress, who at one time was assistant manager of the Kansas City branch office of the World Film Corporation, and later assistant to John Edward O'Toole, manager of Warner's Features at Dallas, has been appointed special representative of the Kriterion in Chicago territory.

Select Film Agency Gets Busy

Al Lichtman Engaged as General Manager—New Booking Agency Completing Organization.

ONE of the most important announcements of the week is contained in the fact that Al Lichtman, one of the best-known feature authorities in the country, has been enaged by the Select Film Booking Agency, which last week began active operations, as general manager.

Mr. Lichtman was formerly sales manager of the Famous Players' Film Company, having acted in that capacity from the inception of that concern until last fall, when he severed his connections with the Famous Players in order to organize the Alco Film Corporation.

During his association with the famous Players' Film Co., Mr. Lichtman became popularly known throughout the country as one of the ablest and most enterprising of film men. One of the pioneers in the feature branch of the business, and familiar with every varying phase of feature distribution and exploitation, he is, by aptitude and experience, peculiarly adapted to advance the financial and artistic success of the feature photo-productions to be distributed through the Select Film Booking Agency.

As announced recently, the Select Agency was organized for the purpose of booking a series of greater photoplays to a circuit of theaters selected according to their relative importance in their territories, and equipped to present pretentious feature film offerings for indefinite runs. This organized effort to adopt for the screen the methods in vogue in the theatrical business marks a new era in the distribution of motion pictures. The first subject to be booked through the Select is the Famous Players' Film Company's superb photo-spectacle of Hall Caine's immortal novel and play, "The Eternal City," with Paulina Frederick.

In order to offer feature producers an incentive for the creation of unusually elaborate photoplays, for the profitable booking of which there has heretofore been no adequate means, the Select Film Booking Agency will perfect a complete organization, including competent staffs of operators, electricians, scenic artists, press agents, advancemen, stage managers and carpenters, and the various other factors necessary in the operation of a fully equipped theatrical organization. This systematic force will be so conducted that it can be placed at the instant service of producers of such features as can be booked on their individual merits as regular attractions.

"The Eternal City" is now entering its fourth week of capacity business at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, and bookings on this greatest production of the Famous Players' Film Co. are now being arranged for Chicago, Detroit, and other important cities throughout the country.

EXCHANGES MUST PAY ALCO RENTALS.

Judge Mayer in the United States District Court handed down a decision in the Alco Film Corporation bankruptcy case granting the application of the receivers of Alco for an order to compel the former Alco exchanges to pay over to the receivers 70 per cent. of the rentals taken by them since the Alco passed into the hands of the aforesaid receivers. This ruling applies only to pictures delivered to the exchanges by Alco when that company was actively in business. No offset is allowed the exchanges during the administration of the receivers and decision is reserved on the question of offsets during the period prior to their appointment. Reservation was also made by Judge Mayer on the decision relating to the rights of the California Motion Picture Company.

ALL-STAR AGAIN IN COURT.

At a meeting of the creditors of the All-Star Feature Corporation held before Stanley W. Dexter, referee in bankruptcy Tuesday afternoon, March 16, William P. Jeffrey was appointed trustee to administer the affairs of the bankrupt company in place of the receiver previously appointed, M. W. Goldsmith.

KLEINE CONDENSERS GOING FAST.

Exhibitors are awakening to the value of good condensers and buying them in increasingly large quantities, if one may judge from the statement of the Kleine Optical Company which is at present disposing of extraordinarily large quantities of these important adjuncts to good projection. The Kleine Optical Company makes a specialty of its White-Label condenser, which is made of pure optical glass and does not discolor to the detriment of the picture.

Doings at Los Angeles.

WEEKLIES are preparing to shoot the Venice road race on the Irish day at Venice. This race will be a classy one, and some big stuff is promised the film men who come to the beach to shoot the flying automobiles. Already some scenarioists are doing scripts for the race, and dramas as well as funny pictures, will be made at the big event.

Here is another advertising tip to the wise exhibitor. This idea will apply to other pictures, as well as the one told about. At Pomona, a city near here, a theater manager showed "Cinderella," with Mary Pickford starred. To doubly draw people to his house he arranged with a shoe merchant to exhibit a small satin slipper and to tell the girlies of the town that if they could wear the dainty piece of footgear they would be presented with tickets to the show. The girl had to be over eighteen years old and the fit had to be perfect. Now the shoe man has doubled his sales, while the theater is crowded. And, incidentally, several nearby towns are jealous of Pomona and its wealth of women with dainty little feet.

Jesse L. Lasky departed for the east at the time of writing this letter. He was called suddenly to New York by a wire from Samuel Goldfish. He said, before he left, that Ina Claire was here to work in a big film. She will be remembered in "The Quaker Girl" and "The Girl from Utah" on the real stage. Mr. Lasky also said that the following stars were coming on west to play in big productions: Edgar Selwyn, Valeska Surratt, Donald Brian and Margaret Mayo. May Allison has left this company and is now at Santa Barbara with the American, where she is working in a big film with Harold Lockwood.

The stages at the big Bosworth studio are bare and forsaken. Not a player is to be seen, and the big director has gone on his vacation. One of the local papers says that it is rumored that he will join the Universal to produce some big stuff.

The Albuquerque studio is still dark, and will probably remain so until its manager, G. P. Hamilton, comes back and gets to work. He is expected here soon.

Ha, ha, ha! Wow! Lookout, fellers, here comes the band! And so it came to pass that another good time was written on the Photoplayers' history book, that of Roscoe Arbuckle, one oversized comedian from the Keystone. He was a toastmaster royal, and every member present pronounced the dinner a grand success.

The Black Boxers have returned from a trip to the Exposition town, where they enjoyed—enjoyed, mind you—a tour of the grounds, and incidentally snapped a few souvenir pictures of the expo. The Big U players went up on a boat and returned on the same one, and both ways the captain turned the big coasting vessel over to the director. The Christy comedians accompanied the Otis Turner people on the return, and altogether there were four cameras in the bunch. Herbert Rawlinson wished for his Hup. It does not rock like a boat.

"Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" is the title of E. Phillips Oppenheim's play which is to be gelatinized by the Favorite Players, with Carlyle Blackwell in the lead. The direction will be by our old friend, William D. Taylor, of Captain Alvarez fame.

William Russell has arrived at the American studios in Santa Barbara (that place where they keep their news in the film vault) to work in the new million-foot serial which is being started at this plant.

Nothing else but "The Clansman" has run five full loaded weeks.

Tom Santschi and his Seligers have completed "How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell," with nearly all the Los Angeles police force in the picture.

"The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs" is the latest four-reeler to be put on at the American plant. Wallace MacDonald has joined this mountain studio and is playing with Harold Lockwood. The story is by Jacques Futrelle.

They may have fan-tail pigeons, bulldogs and cats galore, but here is a mascot that is different. Miriam Cooper, of the Reliance Mutual firm, has taken a black and white spotted calf as a pet, and, furthermore, she is making a real pet of the baby bovine.

Having a lioness claw and scratch him was the initiating experience of Wellington Playter, formerly of the F. P., but more recently of the Big U. He was working for Henry McRae at Universal City and the lioness sprang at him, tearing most of his clothing off. He now understands the perils of producing moving pictures.

Another taxpayer to the state automobile treasurer is Willis L. Robards, of the Premier Company, he having cashed in for a new Hup. Someone said that Will had sent in a challenge to Barney. Ed. Brady has left Tom Mix's Selig outfit and is now working at this place.

J. Warren Kerrigan has ceased work, to enjoy a vacation, and he is now en route to the Exposition City to rest up and incidentally take in the big show.

Painters with great big paint atomizers have been busy the past week spraying the high fences that surround the Mutual studios and those of the Lasky Company. Each place is now finished in a sepia tone, and the Picture Row is taking on the aspect of a regular place.

Lumber is already on the ground where the new Inceville studios are to be erected, and ere another week flies by there will be a volley of hammer shots around this place which will last for several months. The whole lot is being mapped off and made ready to receive the studios and other equipment buildings. Lewis J. Cody, for many years a well-known legitimate actor, has joined the Ince forces and will be seen in forthcoming releases. He was recruited from "The Whirl of the World" company which played Los Angeles last week.

Dorothy Gish, already introduced, is to appear in several different roles to demonstrate her wonderful versatility. The Mutual will release films regularly in which Miss Dorothy is featured, but each will be a different story, in which she will portray an entirely different part.

Here is a chance for Premier anglers. Someone said that you fellows catch trout up there during the rainy season. Why not ship us some in a nice little parcel post package. We could write a column then.

With "The Movie Magazine" for the fans and everyone, "The Photoplayers' Weekly" for all, "Static Flashes" for the camera man, "The Picture Player," another bi-monthly, and a few papers and magazines devoting considerable space to the picture business here, it would seem that this place is not behind in the motion picture industry.

Director Joseph J. Franz has joined the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company and is busy producing. He left Premier a few days ago and is now at Santa Barbara. Wallace MacDonald has also joined the American players at Santa Barbara and is appearing in a four-reel feature. Los Angeles hates to see this young man go away, but work is work.

A company of Laemmle players, headed by Frank Lloyd, are camped in the mountains near Calabassas, a little Mexican town, where they are shooting a lot of hill scenes.

A case of wine, an order for a new suit and a box of cigars await W. S. Hart, the Ince character player. It happened this way: Some of the crack bowlers of Inceville inveigled "Bill" into entering a game of tenpins. He beat them badly, and so he holds the record score, 286, which is still standing. Oh, yes, he received a ten dollar bill with the prizes.

The first set-to of the season between the Universal ball team and an outside one will take place on the fifteenth, the day of the opening of the picture city. The boys are in fine trim and bid fair to walk away with the game.

* * *

The big train special with Carl Laemmle and his followers will be here but a day after this letter is mailed. Monday next the city will open and then we'll have some pictures and details of the new picture municipality.

CLARKE IRVINE.

The Censor's Club

Sensational Arrest of the President of the Philadelphia Exhibitors—Investigation of Breitinger's Conduct in Office Will Be Demanded.

A MEETING of the Legislative Committee consisting of exchange men and exhibitors of Pennsylvania and held at 1339 Vine street, Philadelphia, on Thursday, March 11, was interrupted and brought to a close in a most dramatic and sensational manner. Charles Segall, as president of the Philadelphia local, was a member of the committee and took an active part in the proceedings.

Much useful and practical work was being done by the committee when someone noticed the presence of a stranger in the anteroom. Being asked to disclose his identity he said he was a constable and that he had a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Segall. He was told that Mr. Segall was busily engaged and was urged to go away. The constable turned a deaf ear to these gentle pleadings and replanted himself on his chair with every indication of perserverance. He was left in full possession of the anteroom, and, although his presence cast somewhat of a shadow over the subsequent proceedings, it was not allowed to interfere with the transaction of business. At last, however, the patience of the constable gave way. The sun was rapidly journeying westward, and the constable did not propose to wait until it had reached its goal "in its other chamber of the east." He realized that an arrest after sunset on a petty misdemeanor might be bad policy, and he began pounding at the door of the meeting room. The door was promptly opened and the constable tersely demanded that Mr. Segall go with him. Mr. Segall protested and was joined in this protest by all present. He demanded to know what the charge against him was, and thereupon the constable read a warrant and affidavit showing that the chief censor of the state of Pennsylvania had laid certain information against Mr. Segall, claiming that Mr. Segall had shown an uncensored film, called "The Cave of Death," made by the Kalem Company, in his theater. Mr. Segall emphatically denied ever having run such a picture, but the constable declined to discuss the issue with him and once more requested him to obey the warrant. Mr. Segall thereupon immediately made arrangements for a bondsman and accompanied by all the members of the committee and a crowd of reporters went to the police station at Fairmount avenue and Third street, where bail was entered and he was set at liberty. It was not, however, before he had been needlessly humiliated, having been put in a cell. Philadelphia papers, which gave a good deal of space to this occurrence, declare in their reports that this humiliation was entirely uncalled for and that even the men in the police station seemed to shrink from the performance of such an unpleasant duty which had been forced upon them by the action of the chief censor.

There was a hearing the next day in the Police Court, before Magistrate Hogg, at which Mr. Segall was represented by S. F. Wheeler, former president of the Philadelphia local, an attorney and well-known exhibitor in Philadelphia. Mr. Wheeler roundly denounced the chief censor for his arbitrary and oppressive proceeding. The chief censor, who at a long distance may resemble the fabled dragon breathing fire, is quite meek at close range. He listened to Wheeler's attack in stolid indifference and only interrupted when Mr. Wheeler charged that the arrest had been unnecessary and was due to spite work on the part of the chief censor. At this juncture the chief censor turned to the constable and called upon him to attest the fact that he, Breitinger, had not ordered the constable to arrest Segall.

"Did I tell you to arrest Mr. Segall?" asked Breitinger of the constable, pointblank.

"You certainly did," replied the constable, unequivocally.

This caused considerable merriment in the court room.

The defence made by Mr. Segall was a general denial. He testified that he had not used General Film Service in some time and that no film issued by that company had been exhibited in his house for months. In spite of this categorical denial, fully substantiated by other facts, the magistrate found Mr. Segall guilty and fined him $100. It is said that an appeal will be taken forthwith.

Exchange men and exhibitors of Philadelphia intend to forward a protest to the Governor against Breitinger's actions. The charges to be filed with the Governor which will be coupled with a demand for an immediate and rigid investigation of Breitinger's conduct in office allege that Breitinger drafted the bill under which he is now holding a salaried office; that while in Harrisburg and a member of the Legislature he accepted money from the exhibitors' organization in Philadelphia for alleged legal services; that he is exacting unlawful charges for inspection, claiming a special maintenance fee, which means from 56 cents to $1.27 a reel and which he is charging in addition to the $2.50 for each thousand feet inspected. It is further charged that Breitinger is maintaining an expensive staff of assistants and an expensive projection room, and that the exchange men are unlawfully taxed to maintain the same. It is also alleged that Breitinger caused the exchange men to pay for the board of his assistant in a Philadelphia hotel for a period of three months at the rate of $126 per month. The rest of the charge is taken up with the alleged arbitrary and oppressive proceeding in the case of Charles Segall.

Cincinnati Mayor Backs Down

Dodges a Fight with State Censor Board by Approving Modified Picture.

By Kenneth C. Crane, Special Correspondent.

AFTER the furore created by the entry of the municipal authorities into the censorship last week, when "Three Weeks" was barred from exhibition by Mayor Spiegel, of Cincinnati, notwithstanding the official approval of the State Board of Censors, things have now quieted down; the quieting influence being the mayor's decision that the film, as slightly changed, might be shown, after all. The board of censors withdrew its approval for the exhibition of the picture temporarily, on account of its understanding that certain eliminations had not been made; and, in the interim, the mayor declared that he would not announce his action in advance of the board's final decision, but would act, when the time came, firmly.

The mayor's opposition, as heretofore reported in these columns, was based not so much upon the incidents in the picture as shown as upon its title and the moral, or lack of morals, revealed; and in this position he was enthusiastically supported by the Joint Law and Order Committee of the Federation of Catholic Societies and the Protestant Federation of Churches, which issued a statement deprecating the failure of the State Board to reject the film, and stating that "We thoroughly concur with his honor, Mayor Spiegel, in his expressed opinion that any exhibition based on Elinor Glyn's novel should be barred." After this, the mayor's quiet backdown, to avoid a direct clash of authority with the State Board, was rather unexpected. The film was shown the latter half of the week at the Alhambra, where the trouble arose, and drew heavily, on account of the liberal advertising which the incident had given it. And, in the meantime, the fact remains that legal sanction is asserted in support of municipal censorship, whenever any city in Ohio see fit to exert the authority.

Michigan Censor Bill

Proposal to Establish Legal Board to Pass on Pictures Meets Opposition.

PRESIDENT H. F. FOWSER, of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, ex-President Peter J. Jeup and several other members of the organization went to Lansing, Mich., on Tuesday, March 16, to attend the hearing on the Censorship Bill, which was introduced a few weeks ago. The bill, as introduced, is in part as follows:

"There is hereby created under the authority and supervision of the Commissioner of Labor a board of censors of motion picture films. Upon the taking effect of this Act, the Commissioner of Labor shall appoint with the approval of the Governor, three persons, one for one year, one for two years, and one for three years, who shall constitute such board. Upon the expiration of the terms of each member as appointed, a successor shall be appointed in like manner for a term of three years. Each member of the board of censors shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 per year.

"The members of the board shall be considered as employees of the Commissioner of Labor and shall be paid as other employees of such commissioner are paid.

"The board shall charge a fee of one dollar for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand lineal feet; for any reel of film exceeding one thousand lineal feet the sum of two dollars shall be charged. All moneys so received shall be paid each week into the state treasury to the credit of said board of censors.

"The board of censors may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status of other states as a censor congress, and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board, and all films passed, approved, stamped and numbered by such congress, when the fees therefor have been paid to the Michigan board, shall be considered approved by such board.

"Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the state of Michigan unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Michigan board of censors or the congress of censors shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $25, nor more than $300, or imprisoned no less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both for each offense.

"Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the orders of the Michigan Industrial Accident Board."

Exhibitors throughout Michigan are absolutely opposed to censorship on the ground that it is altogether unnecessary. The above bill if passed would do things: First, cause endless trouble to the exhibitor, and, second, increase his expenses. If the exchanges have to pay the state for having the film censored, indirectly this expense must come out of the exhibitor. Michigan exhibitors feel that the stamp of the National Board of Censors on a film is sufficient proof that it is worthy of being shown.

It has been suggested that exhibitors throw slides on their screens urging their patrons to write their representatives and senators as being opposed to state censorship.

Iowa Censorship Bills Killed.

Secretary Eddy, of the Iowa League, Reports Measures to Censor Motion Pictures Killed in Legislative Committee.

E. C. EDDY, secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of Iowa, wires an interesting bit of news to the Moving Picture World in the following:

"Des Moines, Ia., March 16, 1915.

"Censorship bills killed in Committee. Iowa will have no censorship of pictures. Iowa League on record against Censorship of any kind. This position won the fight."

The exhibitors of Iowa are to be congratulated upon the valiant fight they have made against legislative interference with the motion picture business in their state. The result shows what can be done when concerted action is taken by the exhibitors themselves, for it was their efforts that killed the obnoxious bills.

Here is an example for other states threatened with similar interference; organize and make effective the influence of the screen. Concerted opposition in every state where censorship exists or is proposed will wipe all such statutes off the books and prevent them from being written in.

CLEVELAND POLICE ENFORCE CENSORSHIP.

Uncensored motion pictures will have a hard time escaping the vigilance of the law in Cleveland, Ohio. Mayor Newton D. Baker has ordered the police to help in the suppression of uncensored pictures. The mayor's action was brought about by the fact that he recently went into a picture house and saw a number of objectionable and scandalous scenes in a film. The mayor says that these parts had been eliminated by the state board of censorship but were put back into the film by the exhibitor.

As Mayor Baker was consulting with Harry C. Vestal, chairman of the Ohio Board of Moving Picture Censors, several members of the Cleveland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in a meeting at 242 Superior avenue, N. E., were seeking the aid of city councilmen to assist them in their fight against a proposed ordinance which would make it compulsory for all motion picture machines to be operated by hand power instead of motors. The members of the league clearly stated how impracticable it would be to adhere to the ruling of the proposed ordinance. There were about seventy members of the league and twenty-five representatives of the local Motion Picture Operators' Union present at the discussion.

CENSOR VESTAL RESIGNS.

Harry E. Vestal, of Ada, Ohio, who, it will be remembered, was one of the first members of the Ohio board of censors, has resigned from the board. He is now on a visit to California. Just what his plans will be, upon his return, has not been made public.

New Orleans Exchange Men Organize.

Propose to Form a Credit Association for Southern Territory—Exhibitors Favor Plan.

A MEETING of New Orleans film exchange men has been called with a view to forming a film credit association for the Southern territory, Paul Ford, manager of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana taking the initiative after learning from personal talks with the film men that with but one or two exceptions all were in favor of the move.

A canvass of the exchanges by the World's correspondent revealed a belief by the exchange men that such an organization is necessary to the most efficient conduct of their business. Some expressed uncertainty as to whether in view of the sharp competition among the exchanges, the plan would be workable, but it is believed that the organization will be so perfected that there can be no doubt of its workability.

That such an organization is highly desirable for the protection of the exchanges, both as to collections and so as to set limits on competition, is generally agreed. The plan has already been tried here, along similar lines to those in force in other cities, and would probably be in force at this time but for an unpleasantness within the organization which brought about its dissolution. It is expected that a plan will be agreed upon at the coming meeting that will guard against such mishaps and put the association on a permanent basis. There will be a social feature to the new organization, including perhaps a weekly lunch for exchange managers.

The exhibitors are, as a class, in favor of putting the business on a sound credit basis. Leaders in this line state that it is to the advantage of the legitimate exhibitor no less than to that of the exchange man to get the business away from the competitive credit system. This system, they say, has had the effect of fostering "fly by night" competition, of enabling one exhibitor to play unsound credit against another's sound credit or cash.

CURRENT VITAGRAPH THEATER PROGRAM.

"The Juggernaut" will begin the third week of its successful run at the Vitagraph Theater on Sunday, March 21st, presenting what is conceded to be the most thrilling wreck scene ever flashed on the screen. Another feature picture, military drama in three parts, entitled "Lifting the Ban of Coventry," has been added to the program for the week and will be of exceptional interest because of the many West Point Academy scenes, taken with full permission of the War Department.

A comedy relief to the two dramatic pictures include a Wally Van-Nitra Frazier-Albert Roccardi, one-part laughmaker, "Cutey Becomes a Landlord," the story of a college boy who rents his father's house, is butler to his own tenants and has a complicated love affair and one of the drollest of the many droll Sidney Drew comedies, "When Dumleigh Saw the Joke," an amusing one-part story of a joke that brought a dead man to life and landed another in jail.

A PICTURE TO BE SUPPRESSED.

Repulsive, harmful and void of any moral lesson worth pointing, is a picture purporting to be founded on Edward Sheldon's play, "The Nigger." It is a production that never should have been made. It presents the worst sores in American civilization without any decency or restraint and without suggesting a remedy. A drunken negro, frothing at the mouth, is shown in a close-up as he hides behind a tree, waiting to assault a little girl wandering through the woods. The child dies from the effects of what a sub-title describes as "the usual crime," and after that we have a man-hunt with bloodhounds, a lynching and the spectacle of a negro being burned at the stake. Nothing so nauseating as "The Nigger" has been shown on the screen. As seen by a representative of The Moving Picture World, it is a brutal appeal to the most dangerous of human passions and prejudices.

GREAT NORTHERN PICTURE AT SING SING.

An unusual treat was afforded the inmates of Sing Sing prison last Sunday, the 14th instant, by the Great Northern Film Co., 110 West 40th street, which placed at the disposal of the institution's entertainment committee the well-known feature "Lay Down Your Arms," the fame of which had even penetrated the massive stone walls of the penitentiary. A wild outburst of enthusiasm and gratitude occurred at the close of the production, the magnificence of which was appreciated by the humblest, as well as the most brilliant men, in the audience.

Court Upholds State Right Contracts

Right to Seize and Hold Films Working Outside Allotted Territory Fully Established in Important Decision.

A DECISION of considerable importance to exhibitors, exchangemen and state right buyers has been rendered by Justice Edgar J. Lauer of the Municipal Court of the City of New York, Borough of Manhattan, Ninth District. Justice Lauer had presided over the trial of the action brought by The True Feature Company against John Fiske to recover possession of the two films entitled respectively "The Heart of the Hunchback," and "The Cyclists Last Lap." A writ of replevin had been issued under which the marshal of the court had taken the films in question from the possession of the defendant. The further facts in the case appear in the opinion of the Court, which is as follows:

I am satisfied that the plaintiff is the owner of the films in question. The ownership has been traced from the Art Film Company of Berlin and, while there are possibilities that the films taken from the defendant might have come from some other source, the proof is sufficient, I think, to show that they were the identical films owned by the plaintiff.

It appears that on the 26th day of September, 1913, the plaintiff leased to the Prince Feature Film Co., of Philadelphia, the films in question under two separate instruments as follows:

Sept. 26, 1913.

Agreement made this 26th day of September, 1913, between the True Feature Co., of New York, and the Prince Feature Film Company, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Witnesseth:—That the said Prince Feature Film Co. agrees to rent from the True Feature Co. one (1) copy of their feature, "The Cyclist's Last Lap" and to pay for same at the rate of twelve cents per foot, all shipments to be made F. O. B., New York, and forwarded C. O. D. Said film is loaned to said Prince Feature Film Co. for a term of ten years, upon the express condition that it shall not be exhibited outside of the State of Eastern Pennsylvania, county boundaries of which are Tioga, Lycoming, Union Mifflin, Juniata, Franklin and all other counties east of these named; Southern New Jersey, county boundaries of which are Burlington, Ocean and all other counties south of those named; Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia, and that no duplicate copy be made therefrom, and in case of breach of this agreement, the said True Feature Co. shall have the right to cancel this lease forthwith, whether with or without legal proceedings. The True Feature Co.,

JOSEPH I. KLOTZ,
ELMER O. PRINCE.

The only difference in the instruments is in the name of the film, or feature, as it is designated. The Prince Feature Film Co. was the designation under which Elmer O. Prince of Philadelphia did business. He sold the films, according to the evidence, to one, Eaton, who, in turn, sold them to the defendant. One of the officers of the plaintiff saw the films exhibited in New York City, contrary to the terms of the lease, and caused this action to be instituted to recover the possession of the films. It will be noted that the instrument executed between the plaintiff and Prince was in the nature of a lease, the plaintiff agreeing to rent the feature films for an outright sum at the rate of twelve cents per foot, the lease agreeing not to exhibit them outside of the specified territory, and it being provided that upon a breach of the agreement the plaintiff "shall have the right to cancel this lease forthwith, whether with or without legal proceedings."

Prince had no title other than that as lessee under this agreement and could confer no title by the sale thereof. I can find no basis for holding otherwise in any of the authorities cited by the defendant. It is contended, however, that this action of replevin would not lie, that a notice of the cancellation of the lease is necessary. I do not agree with this contention. The commencement of the action in my judgment was sufficient notice of the cancellation, if the cancellation was in this case required.

The defendants were in possession of property to which the plaintiff had title. The defendants claimed ownership thereof. They did not claim by virtue of the lease to Prince—they claimed by virtue of a purchase from somebody who had no right or title to sell. The act of Prince in selling something that did not belong to him, something on which he merely had a lease, something which he borrowed, which was the property of another, was larceny and certainly the defendants can procure no title by a purchase of stolen property, even though they acted in the best of faith. Plaintiff's right to take his property under such circumstances by a writ of replevin is quite clear. It does not depend entirely upon the breach of condition, although, in my judgment, if it did, the institution of the action would be sufficient notice of the intention to consider the lease as cancelled for the breach thereof.

I have given very careful consideration to the briefs submitted by counsel in this case and have been at some pains to examine the authorities cited. It would serve no useful purpose to enlarge upon this opinion and I have confined myself merely to the expression of conclusions which I have reached.

Judgment is accordingly given for the plaintiff.

EDGAR J. LAUER, Justice.

When seen by a representative of The Moving Picture World Joseph S. Klotz, the general manager of the True Feature Company said: "There has been considerable abuse of state rights by the fly-by-night concerns scattered all over the country. These concerns have long been a thorn in the flesh of reputable state right buyers and reputable producers and importers. We went to great expense in ferreting out these violations of territory, but we are glad to have established a precedent which will benefit every man who has a film to sell on the state right plan, or who is a responsible state right buyers."

W. H. BELL IN TOWN.

W. H. Bell, old-time exchange man, now handling feature films through his own company in Chicago, Ill., is in New York city this week looking over the picture situation. He is stopping at the Hotel Astor.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS REORGANIZE.

A mass meeting was held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Local No. 1, at the Hanover Theater, 571 Fulton street, Brooklyn, on Wednesday, March 10, at 11 P. M. Lee A. Ochs, the president, acted as chairman.

The Brooklyn exhibitors were reorganized into a local, to be known as the Brooklyn Branch of Local No. 1 of the above league. The following officers were elected: C. R. Martineau, president; I. N. Hartstall, vice-president; Charles Fischer, secretary; William B. Fulmer, treasurer.

The meeting was attended by a representative body of exhibitors. Matter of adverse legislation was brought to their attention, and the importance of uniting for their welfare was strongly impressed on their minds. Much enthusiasm was evinced by those present, and all promised to do their share in improving present conditions.

Next step to be taken by the officers of Local No. 1 will be to reorganize the Bronx exhibitors into a branch, to be known as the Bronx branch of the above organization.

KENTUCKY CONVENTION AT LEXINGTON.

Louis Dittmar, president, and Fred Dolle, secretary-treasurer, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky, have returned from a directors' meeting held in Lexington, Ky. It was decided to hold the annual meeting of the Kentucky division at the Phoenix Hotel, at Lexington, Ky., on April 21 to 22. The convention promises to be one of the largest ever held by the association, due to the fact that the business has expanded throughout the country towns of the state to such a marked extent during the past year. Motion picture exhibitors are taking more interest in the organization and of their business than formerly, and it is stated that a good many new members are expected to join the state organization at this meeting. Exhibitors throughout the state are anxious to promote their business and handle it on a higher degree of efficiency than heretofore. Mr. Dittmar is very enthusiastic over the meeting and expects to bring up a number of discussions of business practices and methods. Extensive displays of equipment, machinery and films will probably be arranged by the supply houses.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

The New Hampshire Exhibitors' League, which was organized last fall, is starting off remarkably well for a new association. It was successful in its fight against a bill which provided for the licensing of moving picture operators and another prohibiting Sunday shows. All members say that the credit must go to "Charlie" Bean, of the Pastime theater, at Franklin, N. H., who is the president of the baby league. Charlie was a former New Hampshire senator.

CARBONS FURTHER EFFECTED BY THE ALLIES BLOCKADE OF GERMAN COMMERCE.

Apparently the present limited supply of German carbons is to be further curtailed as a result of England's latest move against German commerce.

The Charles L. Kiewert Company has just received cabled information from their Mr. C. G. Kiewert who has been in Europe since shortly after the beginning of the war, to the effect that two consignments of BIO carbons now enroute from the factory will probably get through, and are due to arrive in New York early in April, but that future shipments will depend entirely upon a modification of present blockade conditions, because otherwise shipment of any goods of German manufacture would be practically impossible.

PHILADELPHIA SHOW CARD CONCERN IN NEW YORK.

The Show Card Company, specialists in theater lobby and front display advertising, reopened for business this week with spacious quarters in the Grange Theatre Building, Broadway and 136th street, New York.

H. S. True, general manager of the company, is a pioneer distributor of banners and other hand-made signs, by mail, and announces that some sharp reductions in prices have been made. The line of work produced by the Show Card Company includes muslin and oilcloth banners, hand made posters, lobby display cards, etc., with excellent facilities for handling rush orders, shipments of same being made on day order is received. A "suggestion bureau" is maintained on the subject of display advertising, and correspondence is invited from managers desiring to be on their mailing list for suggestions for copy, etc.

Edwin Arden With Pathe

Prominent Dramatic Star to Take a Part In "The Exploits of Elaine."

EDWIN ARDEN, one of the most famous actors of our times, has been added to the cast of "The Exploits of Elaine" and will appear in the second serial which will continue the exploits of the famous "Elaine." Such an announcement cannot fail to interest every follower of American drama since Mr. Arden brings to his work with Pathe a vast experience gained from playing leading parts in many of the most noteworthy American plays and in companies with the most celebrated actors and actresses of the last twenty years.

He was born in St. Louis of old Virginian parentage, his father being the editor of the St. Louis Evening Republican, and an officer on General Sherman's staff. He became connected with the stage by accident. His father was appointed receiver for the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, and employed the boy (he was only sixteen), to attend to the finances of the company playing there. Not long afterwards he became assistant treasurer of Pope's theater, now the Century. While holding this position he met Thomas W. Keene, who was playing there, and took a great fancy to him. Young Arden was invited to go along with the great tragedian and play in Shakesperian repertoire. He accepted with gladness and from that day to this has followed the stage with unswerving devotion. Under Mr. Keene he became both leading man and manager.

After years with Mr. Keene he came to New York and allied himself with the Madison Square Company at that time representing the very best on the American stage. Here he played with Le Moyne, Ada Dyas, Wm. Gillette and others. His next protracted engagement was with the Boston Museum, the company of which enjoyed equal celebrity with that of the Madison Square. Here he played leading parts with Dion Boucicault, Edwin Booth, Clara Morris and John Gilbert. Then followed four years in which he was starring on his own account in "Eagle's Nest." Broadway engagements with Wm. H. Crane, Julia Arthur and Wm. Gillette, "Hearts are Trumps," "Secret Service," and "Because She Loved Him So," are a few of the famous plays in which he appeared.

Recent important engagements have been thirty-five weeks in "To-day," at the 48th Street theater, New York, leading man with M'me. Simone in the "Thief," and "The Whirlwind" with Elsie Ferguson, Marie Tempest and others equally famous.

Mr. Arden truly represents the very best in present day acting. In himself he unites the great names of the past with the great names of the present. His value to the already fine cast of "The Exploits of Elaine" can hardly be overestimated.

John Barleycorn's Influence Extending Temperance Societies All Over the Continent Featuring Bosworth Film.—Passes Canada Censors.

AT a meeting of the Dominion Alliance, the prohibition society of Canada, a unanimous vote of thanks and an expression of approval was given to the great temperance sermon, "John Barleycorn," by Jack London.

The well-known film production by Bosworth, Inc., has just been passed by the censor boards of Toronto and Montreal and in Toronto the picture is now receiving the active support of the Methodist Book Concern, which is planning to exhibit the film in the smaller towns of the Dominion, not only putting money into the treasury of the Methodist Book Concern, but helping to send the divinity students, who take the film from town to town, through colleges.

"John Barleycorn" in Montreal is now actively supported by the work of some 2,500 ladies of the W. C. T. U. home which has just been completed. These ladies have just undertaken to sell 10,000 tickets to their friends and acquaintances, from the sale of which they derive a substantial profit.

In Toronto also, the W. C. T. U. women are planning a similar campaign for the purpose of raising funds for the local organization and the members of Parliament who are actively in favor of prohibition are backing the film for the good it will do in spreading the gospel of temperance.

In Massachusetts, the Anti-Saloon League has started a campaign with "John Barleycorn" as its official film, the idea being to carry the fight against liquor into every state in the Union. In Minneapolis, the Anti-Alcohol Society has also started a similar campaign and reports are being received daily of temperance societies who are presenting it,

Testimonial to David Horsley

Builder of First Hollywood Studio Received Like Conquering Hero on Return to Los Angeles.

DAVID HORSLEY was met at the station upon his arrival in Los Angeles on March 7th by fully two thousand people and escorted through the streets with all the enthusiastic ceremony of a conquering hero. Mr. Horsley was the "discoverer" of Hollywood, having selected that picturesque and climate-favored valley for motion picture purposes in 1910, when he erected the Nestor plant.

The newspapers of Los Angeles had been notified of Mr. Horsley's coming, and their columns were livened with enthusiastic announcements dwelling upon the great benefits that had come to the city through local acquisition of the motion picture industry, which has brought thousands of people to the city with a proportionate and continued influx of money to its business men and trades people.

Harry E. Tudor who manages the Centaur West Coast interests had arranged an elaborate reception, and Horsley Park was thronged with prominent film people. Later on a novel dinner was served in the Arena. Sixty guests made up of newspaper representatives, City Council and Board of Trade members and old friends of the motion picture fraternity, sat down at a table decorated with growing foliage and tropical plants to represent an African jungle, macaws and parrots whistled and talked among the branches while three little marmousettes and several other miniature denizens of the tangled forests chattered and cut up capers in full enjoyment of their liberty in the life-like setting of their native habitat in the centre of the table. Twelve beautiful specimens of jungle royalty, each one amply qualified to win and hold the individual title of "king of beasts," all under the watchful eye of Captain Bonavita, sat on pedestals arranged in a semicircle just outside the bars.

Mr. Horsley was taken entirely by surprise by the whole arrangement and expressed his gratitude in a characteristically witty and interesting speech in which, incidentally, he outlined his plans for his new Los Angeles studios, the method to be employed in working the animals in pictures on a grand scale and the application of his new double exposure camera in the production of Mina Films.

Muriel Ostriche Recovers Sight

Actress Is Stricken While at Work in Yonkers Studio—Blind for Two Days.

MURIEL OSTRICHE, who was temporarily blinded while working in the Mittenthal Brothers' studio in Yonkers, N. Y., on the afternoon of Saturday, March 13th, had completely recovered her sight after three days' of treatment and last Wednesday was able to continue in the scenes being made for "When It Strikes Home," the first production of the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company. For a time it was feared that blindness would be permanent.

Miss Ostriche, long a favorite in Thanhouser pictures, had been weakened by the strain of constant studio work. A close-up was being made near brilliant lights when she pitched forward on the floor, her hands pressed against her eyes. Mr. Harris and Director Perry N. Verkroff carried her to Mr. Harris's automobile and she was driven to her home in New York.

Several physicians were called in consultation and after two days of blindness Miss Ostriche recovered rapidly. When she returned to the studio on Wednesday the actress, who is taking a leading part in "When It Strikes Home," was ready to go ahead with the deferred close-up.

BIG ESTATE FOR PICTURE PURPOSES.

The magnificent 35,000-acre estate of H. L. Middleton, at Boulder Creek, Cal., has been turned over temporarily to the California Motion Picture Corporation for the filming of "The Lily of Poverty Flat," Bret Harte's world-famous story, which is going to be released on April 29 through the World Film Corporation. It is situated next to the famous State Redwood Park in the "Big Basin" and forms an ideal background for the California Film-drama. It is rugged, densely wooded, marked by lofty crags, precipitous gorges, gulches of Arcadian beauty, meadows and glades rarely visited by man, and giant timber as yet untouched by the woodsman. A whole village has been built for "The Lily of Poverty Flat," consisting of 25 log cabins and frame dwellings. This motion picture scenery which, for solid realism and heavy expense, has never been duplicated in the history of photoplays, is an extraordinary replica of the typical gold-seekers' settlement of the days of '49.

"The Evangelist"

Notable Lubin Production Based on a Play Which Set Broadway Talking.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE EVANGELIST" is certainly not the least successful play from the fertile pen of Sir Henry Arthur Jones. It brings home a striking truth in most dramatic fashion. Mr. Barry O'Neill, who directed the play for the screen, has successfully extracted every ounce of dramatic value and has given us a production which deserves to rank among the very best which Lubin has released.

The purpose of the play is to tear off the veneer of hypocrisy which has covered society from the very beginning. On the one side we see the world of forms and conventionality moving in its old accustomed grooves, content with its superficial order and its trite morality. On the other side we see a man of forceful character inspired by the teachings of Jesus, put aside rather than tear off the mask of hypocrisy and preaching in all sincerity the doctrine of universal love and forgiveness. The clashes between these two elements are brought out with a skill that rises far above the average. All through the play runs the idea that a love of sin and passion is blamable in the highest as well as in the lowest strata of society. When the Evangelist rebukes a proud society woman who has forgotten her marital vows but disdains to receive a fallen woman into her home, a scene of extraordinary dramatic power is presented to the spectator. The filmed version of the play is rich in striking moments which hold our interest from the very beginning to the end. It is altogether probable that the play would have been a success even with an ordinary cast of actors, but it is due to the producer to say that he has employed a cast of notable arists, every one of whom seem specially fitted for his or her task in the play.

The part of the Evangelist is taken by George Soule Spencer, whose portrayal of a true disciple of Christ, animated by a love for erring humanity, could not be improved upon. Equal praise is due to Miss Gladys Hanson, whose art and personality seem to lend themselves specially to the camera. Every other part in the play is exceedingly well taken. The types are most convincingly throughout, while the settings are beyond all praise. A word at least must be said about the skillful handling of the groups in the strike scenes and in the mob scenes generally. The photography has the Betzwood stamp of perfection.

NEW LUBIN STUDIO OPENED.

The biggest artificial light studio in the country was informally opened at the Lubin ranch in Betzwood, Pa., last week, when Director Edgar Jones began the making of a series of three reel pictures there. This is the third big studio to be built at the ranch during the past few years. The new studio, which has just been completed, is equipped with every modern scientific appliance for the making of photoplays. The Lubin engineers have been working for many months on the big studio and the system of artificial lighting has been so designed and arranged as to permit the ultimate taking of natural color motion pictures there.

Extensive improvements and additions have also been made to the laboratories at the ranch. These laboratories, declared by experts to be the best in the country, are very busy places these days, and a great deal of scientific work is being carried on there by Mr. Lubin and his corps of assistants.

DOROTHY GISH TO APPEAR IN SERIES OF ROLES.

It is the intention of the Reliance and Majestic studio to feature Dorothy Gish in a number of three and four-reel feature photoplays, and in each picture her part will be somewhat different from her previous one.

"The Lost Lord Lovell," a sparkling Majestic comedy, was the first of the series. In this photoplay she enacted the part of a theatrical boarding house slavey. In the second of the series, Miss Gish played the part of a little miss who is adopted by Quakers and later becomes an actress. "Bred in the Bone" is the title of this Majestic-Mutual release.

The third of the Dorothy Gish series of parts is a very emotional one. It is the part of a nun in one of the strongest three-reel photodramas ever conceived by Russell E. Smith, entitled "The Nun."

These pictures will be released as part of the Mutual Program.

"The Governor's Lady"

A Masterly Lasky Production Which Held Strand Audiences in Its Grip.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE chief merit of this production is the unfailing correctness of characterization. Not only do we see a series of the finest types of American men and women, but we see them just exactly as they are in real life and the illusion becomes perfect. By the very reason of its perfection in this respect, the film is difficult to describe or analyze. There are, in practically every scene, delicate intimate touches which cannot be enumerated and classified like chapters in the index of a book, but the effect of which are strongly felt and appreciated by every man and woman in the audience. All through the picture runs a suggestion of great powers of reserve, and that we all know is one of the unfailing marks of true merit.

The story begins with what may be called a domestic idyl, the perfect union of two souls. Two young people in the humblest station of life, but devoted to each other with a touching degree of tenderness. A great blow strikes this happy home, for the fond expectations of a child to which both husband and wife looked forward were doomed by the hand of fate. Here the picture of sweet and simple American home life ends for the moment. Here the foundation is laid for the plot of the story by bringing in the world of politics and society. The devoted wife and husband recovered from their disappointment, are suddenly made rich through a lucky strike. The poor miner is strong enough at first to enjoy his wealth without injury to his character, but presently political ambitions stir in his heart and he perceives the necessity of having his wife shine in social circles. The wife, more passionately devoted to the welfare and comfort of her husband than ever before, shrinks from all the social functions and her husband now discovers that she stands in the way of his ambition. He is nominated for Governor and seeing a chance to wed a younger woman he plans to divorce the devoted wife. Simple wifely honesty spoils his schemes. The wife appeals to the woman whom her husband seeks to marry and in a most touching and effective scene makes her see the wrongness of the step she is about to take. It all ends very happily and to the entire satisfaction of both the characters in the play and the audience.

The settings and photography in this Lasky production are fully up to the standard set by the "Goose Girl," which surely is saying a good deal. Not enough praise can be given to the members of the star cast. James Neil was an ideal Daniel Slade and Edith Wayne Mathison acted the part of the faithful wife with a quiet dignity and dramatic power which has rarely been surpassed.

It is needless to say anything in praise of Theodore Roberts, whose ability to portray character on the screen is little short of marvelous.

It does appear here and there that the scenes might have been more skillfully dovetailed and rough edges more smoothly finished. The dramatic construction is not without its faults. At times, too, the emphasis in certain scenes seems to be either too weak or too strong.

"The Bombay Buddha"

Three-Reel Imp Which Presents Some Startling Melodramatic Features and Excites Considerable Interest Otherwise.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A MELODRAMA by intention and pictorial development, the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. has considerable reason to pat its chest when referring to this production, because it is meritorious constructively, technically, and artistically. There may be a subtitle too many here and there, and once it was noticed that a négligé wrap had marred the symmetry of sister scenes, but apart from this it would be difficult to locate any serious flaw in the production.

Stuart Paton directed the making of the picture, the scenario of which was written by John B. Clymer. The leading characters of the play are impersonated by Hobart Hanley, Frances M. Nelson, Allen Holubar and Howard Crampton, who have carried themselves with honor to the picture's climax, through the mazes of mystic atmosphere.

Special attention should be drawn to the excellence of the settings, and the startling and artistic effects that have been secured. The story, the true significance of which, according to present-day methods, has been held in secrecy to the bitter end, centers about the theft of a golden Buddha, which as the finish of the picture discloses, has, in fact, been twice stolen.

A not unusual sensation is supplied in the fight put up by both thieves against the detectives, when thief No. 2 (Hobart Henley), and thief No. 1 (Allen Holubar), meet on a common ground. The woman in the case (Frances M. Nelson) the accomplice of thief No. 2, is politely escorted in handcuffs to the confessional where both thieves tell their interesting stories.

As before indicated, the production, which is a future release, is bound to win favor wherever it is shown, owing chiefly to the fact that it is an illustration of a good story well handled.

BILL SEGREGATING SEXES.

To the list of peculiar bills that have been introduced into the legislature at Albany, N. Y., the one that recently originated in the assembly may be added. This measure makes it mandatory not only for the moving picture exhibitor, but also for the managers and owners of the so-called legitimate theaters in the city of Rochester, N. Y., to provide a section of their houses for the sole use of women who do not like to mingle with the stronger sex. The bill states that it is left to the option of the women to choose the part of the house in which they wish to sit. A copy of the instrument has been filed in the office of the corporation counsel of Rochester. It is believed that the bill will get no further than the committee.

JOHN EMERSON AT RELIANCE-MUTUAL HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS.

John Emerson, late star of the New York success, "The Conspiracy," of which he was the author, as well as producer, has arrived at the Reliance-Majestic Hollywood studio to appear in an original four-reel feature photoplay. The title for the same has not as yet been selected and was prepared especially for Emerson.

Walthal Still With Balboa

THE appearance of Henry Walthal in the famous Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," seems to have led some to the belief that this well known player had closed with the Balboa Company with which he recently signed. The rumors to that effect were so persistent that E. D. Horkheimer, New York representative of the Balboa Company, inquired of the home office of that company as to the exact state of affairs and receives a telegram from Mr. Walthal himself to the effect that the rumor was unfounded.

Henry Walthal.

Those who have been fortunate enough to witness Mr. Walthal's work in the Griffith picture have realized that he has lost none of his old time charm. Easily the leading figure among them several wonderful screen characterizations in "The Birth of a Nation," his work is always easy, graceful and convincing. Walthal never lent himself to the melodramatic flourish or exaggerated heroics in his portrayal of military character, and it is the tense earnestness of his acting that contributes so much to the reality of the Griffith picture.

That the Balboa Company should be able to secure and retain so able a photoplayer as Mr. Walthal speaks for the solidity of that organization; that it is able to announce him as one of their leading players should go far to create a market for its pictures. Few leading men are better and more favorably known throughout the world of picture patrons than he and none is more deserving of acclaim.

Grace Darmond

GRACE DARMOND, leading lady of the Selig Chicago Stock Company, has made good in a variety of parts and is still in her teens, although she has had ten years of actual stage experience. She made her debut in the title role of "Editha's Burglar." Later she joined a stock company and played for two seasons in every variety of part. She says: "I consider my training in stock work as invaluable. It was a constant change and a spur to originality and good hard work. It would be hard to name any school more exacting than that of the stock company where you change a bill every week. I have heard many actresses complain of the strain involved in the memorizing of roles under stock conditions, but confess that this was always stimulating to me." Miss Darmond played a season in a sketch by George M. Cohan and was for two years associated with J. M. Bannister's "Auld Lang Syne" company. She delights in motion picture work and says she finds ideal artistic conditions with the Selig forces.

Miss Darmond will soon appear in important roles in the support of Tyrone Power in "A Texas Steer," "The Servant in the House," and assumes leading feminine roles in "The Quarry," "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," and other Selig spectacular specials soon to be released. Miss Darmond is an automobile enthusiast.

"What Happened to Jones"

World Film Corporation Offers Adaptation of George Broadhurst's Farce, with Fred Mace in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FRED MACE made a free adaptation of George Broadhurst's "What Happened to Jones," in this five-part offering of the World Film Corporation. As on the stage, the story is essentially farcical, depending upon a succession of extravagant predicaments experienced by a number of people whose paths are made to cross. The characters will be readily recognized as favorite types—Jones, a worldly traveling salesman, who impersonates a bishop; Professor Goodly, the principal of a girls' school; Alvina, a very slender maiden lady who looks forward to becoming the wife of the Bishop of Timbuctoo; the plump bishop, who comes to America believing his prospective bride is an attractive young girl; an unbalanced youth who escapes from a sanitarium, and so on down the list, one meets the old standbys of American farce.

The story in photoplay form might have been benefited by dropping a few of the characters altogether; or, if not that, by following their adventures with less detail. As developed at present too many plot threads are carried along simultaneously with a diffusion of interest as the almost inevitable consequence. This is particularly true during the opening reels that include scenes of small importance to the story proper.

At its best, the picture may be expected to entertain after the manner of light, thoughtless farce, for fast action and absurd situations are not lacking. A boxing bout, attended by Jones and Professor Goodly, and a pillow fight among the pajama-clad girls of the school, no doubt will find appreciative spectators. Individually, the parts are well enough presented with Mr. Mace using his usual comedy method in the role of Jones. He is ably assisted by William Mandeville, Leonia Morgan, Joe Daly, Mary Charleson and others.

JACK BYRNE DIRECTING FOR KRITERION PROGRAM.

Director Jack Byrne and his company have just completed for the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, releasing on the Kriterion Program, a number of new comedies and dramas. Harry Fisher, Jr., is featured in a comedy, entitled "Sherlock Sammy," while Joe Franz, Harry Fisher and Dorothy Browne are presented in a two-part drama, "What Can a Woman Do?" A rural drama full of human heart interest, entitled "The Power of Prayer"—in two striking episodes, featuring the same trio of favorites—is sure to find favor as well as a two-part drama, entitled "The Stepbrothers."

CLAY M. GREENE HAS ANOTHER BIRTHDAY.

Clay M. Greene, one of the best-known of the Lubin photoplaywrights, who has achieved a wide reputation as a writer of fiction and plays for the legitimate stage, had a regular birthday party this week. It was not of his own planning, but was suddenly wished on him by a large delegation of friends. Greene is one of the old guard of the Lambs' Club in New York and, incidentally, a member of a great many other clubs in New York and Philadelphia.

Carlton King

THAT the "silent" drama should call an actor who had made his mark as a singing comedian on the stage is one of the paradoxical cases presented in Carlton King, whose success in serious roles in the Edison Stock Company bears further evidence of adaptability and versatility.

Mr. King began his stage like at twelve years of age when he left a Chicago church choir to join the Hollywood Juvenile Opera Company and took the part of the old maid in "The Mikado." His beautiful contralto voice was eminently suited to that role. The company was unique in that all the parts were played by children. Mr. King—rather "Master," then—later played in "Pinafore" and "The Mascot." At the boyish age of fourteen years he joined the Calhoun Opera Company and worked up soon to the second comedy part. His success soon secured an engagement with Francis Wilson with whom he played in "The Little Corporal," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Erminie," and "The Monks of Malabar," spending five years all told with Wilson. Then in succession came a season with the well-known Rogers Brothers, the Dearborn Theater Producing Company, one season with Richard Carle in "The Burgomaster," when he was starred in the musical comedy, "The Golden Girl."

Carlton King.

The motion pictures called five years ago when Mr. King went to Selig. He, for a time, went back to the stage, but the lure of the camera was too much and he surrendered again, this time to Essanay. Then followed engagements with the Vitagraph, joining the Edison forces about a year ago.

Mr. King's work is always marked with a perceptive sincerity that begets conviction. Although he has played some comedy roles for Edison, most of his work is in serious character roles in which he has had marked success, the very range of the character giving one a good idea of his capabilities.

Some of the films Mr. King has appeared in are "Lo, the Poor Indian," which he himself wrote; "A Question of Identity," "Tracked by the Hounds," "The Birth of Our Saviour," "The Mission of Mr. Foo," and "The Boston Tea Party."

NEWARK'S ALDERMAN ISSUES NEW RULING.

Those desiring to open a moving picture theater within 200 feet of a church in the City of Newark, N. J., will first have to get the consent of the residents in that vicinity. This order was prompted by the receipt of a letter by the aldermanic license committee from the Emanuel German M. E. Church at Clifton avenue and Hedden terrace. The communication stated that a moving picture theater was about to be erected at 530-532 Clinton avenue, a piece of property on which a local picture house had received an option, and that the people of the church objected to the erection of the theater. The protestants claim that the proposed theater would be 75 feet from the church and quite near the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. There are three picture houses in the neighborhood. Alderman Theodore D. Gottlied made the motion that the congregation of a church give their consent on the building of picture theaters within 200 feet of a church, and if objection is voiced that the persons responsible for the amusement house should not be given a license. The aldermen agreed and the motion was unanimously adopted.

LEE BARTHOLOMEW PROMOTED.

Lee Bartholomew, for the past two years camera man for one of the Universal producing companies on the Pacific Coast, has been promoted to chief camera man in Universal City. This means that he will have entire charge of the camera department, the supervision of repairs, purchases and the distribution of the camera men to the various directors.

Charles Pathe the Guiding Spirit.

Makes Official Announcement of Changes in the Directorate of the American Branch.

THE Moving Picture World representative called at the New York offices of Pathé Frères and the Pathé Exchange, Inc., following a report of change in the directorate of those companies. In answer to his inquiries the following statement was given out:

"The guiding spirit of the House of Pathé always has been, at present is, and always will be Charles Pathé himself.

"The present directorate of the firm regrets being unable to give you a personal interview at the present time, but can only state that Felix Malitz no longer has any connection whatsoever with either Pathé Frères or Pathé Exchange, Inc. The offices formerly occupied by him are now held by Charles Dupuis and L. Gasnier. The latter, who has spent many years in the United States, occupying positions of trust with the house of Pathé, has just returned from Italy. He is thus recompensed for his long and faithful service, and his valuable experience in the film business recognized.

"Paul Fuller, Jr., of the firm of Coudert Brothers, counsel for our firm, has been appointed a director.

"Charles Pathé will continue to live in New York, and will devote his energies to the American branch of his great business."

GLOBE SUCCEEDS BLINKHORN.

After a period of prolonged negotiations, the Globe Co-operative Film Company, Limited, of 20 Broad Street, has arranged to take over the entire business of the Blinkhorn Photoplays Corporation of New York. By this agreement, the new corporation, composed of several well known capitalists, enters the field on a large scale, with plans for the future, comprehending an output of film sufficient to constitute an entire programme.

By the deal with the Blinkhorn Company alone, the Globe Company will come into absolute control of about half a million feet of film and forty additional productions provided for through existing contracts. In addition, all of the Blinkhorn exchanges from New York to California, and from Atlanta to Dallas, Texas, reverts to the new corporation, which has also contracted with Mr. Blinkhorn to continue as production and distribution manager.

PIONEER GETS GREAT NORTHERN PICTURES.

Arrangements have been completed between the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, and the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West 46th street, whereby the latter concern has purchased the exhibition rights for Greater New York and northern New Jersey to the following productions: "The Fight for Fortune," "A Deal with the Devil" and "Through the Enemy's Lines." The last-mentioned is a four part production of unusual merit, quite distinct from the conventional run of war dramas, superb in photography and acting, exciting and fascinating in its plot.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation has also secured the rights for New York City, New York State and northern New Jersey to the Great Northern Film Company's next release, "The Evangelist," an extraordinary four-part production featuring Europe's most popular screen actor, Valdemar Psilander.

DETROIT EXHIBITORS DISCUSS LENGTH OF SHOW.

The Detroit Exhibitors' League has worked out a new idea for getting uniformity on the matter of reels. The League advocates three reels for five cents and five reels for ten cents, believing that too long a show tires the public; then again, the league believes that it is better for the motion picture industry to give five reels of good pictures than ten reels of the other kind. The League does not wish to be constantly "fighting" with exhibitors who cannot see it that way, so instead of getting them on the carpet, so to speak, or even attempting to force them to fall in line, the League will simply let such exhibitor find out for himself that too many reels is going to ruin his own business and that he cannot make a success of his theater by pursuing such a policy. The League has decided to start a campaign of education, both for the exhibitor and the public, and it will do everything in its power in an educational way to bring about three and five-reel uniformity. The League contends that exhibitors should aim to give a shorter show, but a better show; quality instead of quantity, and thus help to put the motion picture industry on a higher level. In fact, the League does not believe that the public cares for a long show.

"Judith of Bethulia" in Second Edition

Biograph Company Sends Out Second Edition of New Copies on Its Four-Part Masterpiece.

The enormous success that Biograph's "Judith of Bethulia" has had and is still having may be imagined when one considers that almost every exhibitor in this country and the majority of those abroad have already booked it some three and four times, as well as from the fact that a second edition of new copies of this production has been shipped the past week to the various exchanges of the General Film Company.

From time to time Biograph has repaired all the old copies, but during the Lenten period and with the approach of the Easter holidays the demand for bookings from the exhibitors has placed such a strain on the copies in service, many of which have been working seven days a week, that the Biograph Company has shipped its second edition of new copies.

This speaks volumes for the merits of "Judith of Bethulia" and gives rise to a very important question, viz., is it possible for a motion picture to establish such records as were made by such stage productions as "Ben Hur," "The Old Homestead," "Way Down East" and other plays which have been playing steadily for years.

Baggot at Sing Sing

BY SPECIAL request of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League, Sing Sing Prison, which but a short time previous was known as the Golden Rule Brotherhood, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company presented on Sunday, March 14, its second performance of moving pictures to the inmates within the past month. This time, however, the inmates had the pleasure of listening to King Baggot, leading star of the Imp brand of the Universal Program. Before Mr. Baggot addressed the audience, a picture in which he played the leading part was projected upon the screen. It was a one-reel comedy, entitled "The Streets of Make Believe."

King Baggot.

Among those included in the party were Jack Cohn, editor of the Animated Weekly; Maurice Pivar, of the Program department, and Alex. Goldman, representative of the Universal Weekly.

After the completion of the picture, Mr. Baggot was escorted down the aisle of the auditorium by one of the delegates of the entertainment committee. He was introduced as "King of the Movies," and founder of the Screen Club.

The star then suggested that the boys ask him any questions about the moving picture business. One young man wanted to know how they make things disappear. Mr. Baggot answered something like this:

"Why, the camera man stops turning his crank when he hears the director yell to the players to hold their positions. The object which they want to disappear from the scene is removed and then they continue with the action with the camera. Now, isn't that as simple as eating pie?"

Another young man wanted to know how they make the people jump or fly up a hill.

"Why, there's nothing to that, either," replied King. "The person jumps down the hill and the camera man, instead of turning the crank the ordinary way, simply turns the crank backwards, and when the film is projected on the screen the person is jumping up the hill instead of down."

This almost created a riot among the audience.

Mr. Baggot closed his address by promising the inmates that the next time he visits them, which he hoped would be very soon, he would bring his entire company along with him and show the inmates how the pictures are really made. After the address, a two-reel comedy, "An All Around Mistake," featuring King Baggot, was shown.

Lubin's Serial Releases

General Manager Ira M. Lowry Declares That His Company Will Continue Making Them.

"WE most certainly shall!" was the emphatic response of Mr. Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, to an inquiry as to whether his company would continue the release of serial stories. "The series and the serial," Mr. Lowry continued, "have become as important in the picture business as they are in the magazine world, and should occupy the same relation to other forms of releases as is borne by installment stories to the other features of good magazines. A proper balance should be maintained, a certain number of big features, so many short subjects for variety and utility, and a good continued story to carry over interest and guaranteee a continued patronage—that is the ideal program for a magazine, as has been demonstrated beyond all question, and, for identical reasons, it is the ideal program for a motion picture theater. As the Lubin Company is striving to serve the best interests of the exhibitor, we are following just such a schedule with our releases.

Ira M. Lowry.

"It was to meet a very obvious need and in compliance with a strong demand that the Lubin Company released its first serial, 'The Beloved Adventurer,' in fifteen single-reel installments, one each week. Of course we had an exceptionally good story produced by a star cast, and were filling an obvious need, as I have said, but the tremendous success of the serial exceeded even our great expectations, and most emphatically confirmed our theory that a serial should be released in single-reel installments, and should not be drawn out to undue length. The "Patsy Bolivar" series of fourteen reels, now running, has been no less favorably received, in fact, many exhibitors who failed to appreciate the unique value of a moderate length single-reel serial or series, were quick to get in line after seeing the value of such a production demonstrated by a competitor, and these late comers as well as the original enthusiasts have been anxiously inquiring as to whether or not 'Patsy Bolivar' will be followed by another installment story.

"I may say here that a great many persons fail to realize how vitally important it is that a serial be a really good story. Of course, it is most desirable that every subject, whether it be a half reel or five reels, be a good story, but should it unfortunately happen that a house show one film without particular strength, no permanent harm is done, it is soon over with, and good stories which have preceded and will immediately follow, will cause it to be forgotten—it is a passing incident. On the other hand, if a serial story is poor, people will actually keep away from the house showing it, for no one will deliberately take in a show, a part of which he knews he will not like, on the chance of seeing something which he may enjoy, and may form a habit of going elsewhere before the serial has run its course. And if the thing drags along for an interminable period, persons will weary of it, even though it be a meritorious offering. Inversely, a good and reasonably short serial is a drawing card the value of which can scarcely be overestimated. As we appreciate how consequential to the business of the exhibitor is the quality and nature of a serial or series, the Lubin Company, you may be sure, will release nothing which it does not regard as of the highest possible quality and of such form as will best serve the interests of the exhibitor, whether the subject be drama or comedy.

"We have, of course, learned much through the experience with our two installment stories already released, and this information will be applied to the advantage of the third serial, which will immediately follow 'Patsy Bolivar.' But just at this time I do not wish to go into details concerning the new subject, beyond saying that it will consist of fifteen single-reel installments, released at the rate of one each week, that it will be produced by an exceptionally strong cast of popular players, and that it was written by Emmett Campbell Hall. I may add, however, that it differs in a fundamental manner from any serial heretofore seen, and that it has several features which will be entirely new in photoplays, one of which, particularly, will create a decided sensation and may lead to almost revolutionary changes in photoplay technique. As to the gripping interest of the story I can only let you infer its force from the fact that I sat up reading the manuscript until 3 o'clock in the morning rather than stop before I had reached the end.

"The title of the new serial is 'Road o' Strife.'"

ELMER BOOTH IN "MIXED VALUES."

In the one reel Mutual-Komic, "Mixed Values," Elmer Booth is initiated as a member of the Komic Company. The misunderstanding, in regard to the ownership of an imitation and a real diamond ring, is responsible for the 1,000 feet of speedy comedy action. Fay Tincher is featured and Chester Withey appears in her support. The scenario is by Anita Loos. Edward "Komic" Dillon has been selected to engineer "Mixed Values."

HENRY WOODRUFF IN "A MAN AND HIS MATE.

Henry Woodruff, late of the New York successes, "When We Were Twenty-one," and "Brown of Harvard," is enthusiastic over his part in the picturization of the play and novel of H. R. Durant's Western drama, "A Man and His Mate," now being produced at the Reliance studio, in four parts, by John G. Adolfi.

Mr. Woodruff's part is that of a horse-thief and morphine fiend who is cured of his evils by the girl he learns to love.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS AID MEXICAN REFUGEES.

The horrors of war are not confined to Europe's battlefields, as was discovered by the Vitagraph players who are now working at Fort Clark, Texas. All about Fort Clark, which is near the border, there are hundreds of Mexican refugees, victims of the civil war that has wrecked that land. Many of these refugees are in comfortable circumstances, but most are suffering from abject poverty. Eleanor Woodruff, the Vitagraph star, was not long in the Southland before she began devoting all of her leisure time to the victims of war, searching out needy cases, and aiding them in every way possible, ably supported by the other Vitagraphers. The family shown in the accompanying illustration is that of General Pascuale Ramirez, who is fighting with Carranza's forces and unable to aid those dependent on him because Villa controls all of Northern Mexico. Too proud to seek aid of the Americans (for is not the man of the house a general?) the family was subsisting on the meager charity of their fellow Mexicans, things were in a bad way when Miss Woodruff discovered the family and took charge of the household. First the family was moved from the ramshackle shanty in which they were living to a comfortable stone house. Food was supplied, and finally the clothes chests of the Vitagraph players were ransacked for wearing apparel. The hat worn by the maid who thinks so much of Ned Finley, was formerly one of Darwin Karr's treasured possessions for use in tramp parts. General Ramirez' wife, who is shown with an arm about Miss Woodruff, says that if the Carranza forces are victorious, she will have her husband appoint Miss Woodruff the permanent star of Mexico's beautiful National Theater in Mexico City.

Director James Colin Campbell

An Interesting Interview in Which He Relates His Experience in Directing the "Ne'er Do Well," in the Panama Region.

By James S. McQuade.

JAMES COLIN CAMPBELL, among the foremost directors in the making of photoplays in America, and the dean, in that capacity, of the Selig forces, is dominated by a spirit of reticence that has kept him in the background thus far, so far as publicity is concerned. He has evidently been satisfied to let his work speak for him, and is still so disposed, as was discovered by me last week when he stopped over for a short stay in Chicago, on his way back to the Edendale plant, by way of this city, from the Panama region, where he has been directing the big exterior scenes in the "Ne'er Do Well," with Selig's leading western company.

James Colin Campbell.

In a very interesting way Mr. Campbell entertained me, during a call, with an account of his work and experience in the Panama zone and adjacent territory; but, when I broached matters biographical, there was "nothing doing," to use the ordinary vernacular.

Mr. Campbell has a most pleasing personality, particularly so to his friends, and the accompanying engraving of his features will strengthen the statement. He is a reader, thinker and student, and possesses a fine imagination and love of art. He is thoroughly wedded to his calling as a director of the production of moving pictures, and his numerous successes bearing the Selig brand afford testimony to his fine ability and popularity.

Mr. Campbell is just as averse to having his engraved likeness appear in print as he is to a published biography. This is positively the first time a cut of him has appeared in a publication, moving picture or otherwise, and, in this instance, it makes this article more worth while. I do not thank Mr. Campbell for the photograph either, and how I secured it will remain a secret. Now will you be good, Jim?

Over five weeks were spent on the canal zone and in the state of Panama making exteriors. Some of these imposing backgrounds were taken in Panama City among the magnificent ruins of old Panama, the wreckage left by John Morgan, the famous buccaneer in the days of the old Spanish main. Mr. Campbell believes that this is the very first time that these ruins were used in moving pictures.

Other exteriors were taken on Toboga Island, about twelve miles off from Panama in the Pacific Ocean. Here street scenes, quaint in their oddity, were taken in the small town named after the island. "These scenes are very primitive, as Toboga is the only town in the world of its size, perhaps, that has not got a Ford car," said Mr. Campbell humorously.

Still other exteriors were taken in Colon, on the Atlantic side of the Panama Canal, chiefly street scenes showing riot calls, the Panamaian police and fire scenes.

Of course, it is understood that acting was in progress all the time in front of these backgrounds, and Mr. Campbell said that about four reels in all were taken, about one-half of the entire story.

It was the very first time that the natives of Panama ever saw a moving picture company or the operation of a camera. As a result the crowds were so great that police protection was always required to keep them within bounds. Very well behaved crowds they were, Mr. Campbell said, although they were greatly excited by the novelty of the occasion.

Nearly a riot was created in the little town of Toboga, owing to the old Spanish costumes worn by several of the actors, including Frank Clark, Syd Smith and Jack McDonald, the latter of Slap Jack fame, and others. The small boys who saw these strangely garbed men coming out of the woods, shrieked wildly and rushed into the town and gave the alarm that wild men were coming out of the woods. It took nearly two days to convince the populace that these men were modern human beings and thoroughly harmless.

It was laughable, Mr. Campbell said, to watch the small boys in Toboga imitating his company in the taking of moving pictures, including the camera and camera man. Every small boy was engaged in this manner and each company was provided with its own improvised paraphernalia.

The first night of the annual carnival in Panama City, which is similar to the Mardi Gras of New Orleans and lasting throughout the four days before Lent, there was a serious riot in Cogo Grove, a disreputable quarter of the city. There American soldiers got intoxicated and started a riot. The Panamaian police, or "spiggody cops," as they are called by Americans, were brought out to quell the disturbance, and volleys of shots were fired by them. This resulted in a well populated hospital the next morning. Several natives were shot dead by their own police and about thirty American soldiers were badly beaten up and wounded. Mr. Campbell stated that if it had not been for the fearless bearing of Brigadier General Edwards, commander of the American forces on the zone, the outcome would have been quite serious. The general appeared on the scene all alone, without firearms or a guard, and quelled the whole disturbance in a short time by sheer force of his personality.

Mr. Campbell said that the members of the company were splendidly received by the highest military officers and the best native people in Panama. They were entertained most hospitably, whenever opportunity offered, by the best families. Governor Goethals, of the canal zone, just arrived from the United States the day before the company left. The governor, however, though absent, had arranged that the company could have the use of his private car and given carte blanche to all points on the canal zone.

The company partook of only one Panamaian meal, as prepared by the natives, during their stay. All considered that this was quite enough. The meal consisted of a kind of hash that looked like Mulligan stew, only it tasted a great deal worse. There was very good food at the Tivoli Hotel in Ancon, which adjoins the city of Panama. This hotel is run by the United States government.

At Culebra cut large forces of men with dredgers are now employed in cutting down the mountains of shifting earth on each side of the canal. This is a gigantic work, but it must be accomplished before the slides can be thoroughly controlled. The maintenance force on the canal at present is about 1,500, whereas formerly, when work on the canal was in progress, 85,000 men were employed.

The military authorities are now engaged in depopulating the zone. They are buying up all the groves and small plantations with a view of making the zone a strictly military reservation.

The weather was beautiful most of the time, Mr. Campbell said. The nights were cool and the middle of the day was very hot. At that hour everybody took a siesta. It began to rain the week before leaving and the rain simply fell in sheets, leaving the atmosphere reeking with moisture. The rainfall in one day was sixteen inches.

A visit was made by the company, under Mr. Selig's guidance, to San Jose, Costa Rica. Here the many sights were hugely enjoyed by the party and moving pictures of various scenes were taken, although not for use in the "Ne'er Do Well."

In Los Angeles the making of the interiors will be immediately undertaken, Mr. Campbell said. He expects that the entire subject will be completed in about three weeks. The length of the "Ne'er Do Well" films, when trimmed, will be about nine reels, the same length as "The Spoilers."

"SNOBS" NEARING COMPLETION.

The photodramatic production of George Bronson-Howard's famous American satire, "Snobs," which is soon to be released by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., Inc., is nearing completion. It is in this picture that the famous Broadway comedian, Victor Moore, is to make his initial appearance on the screen. The story is founded on the experiences of a milkman who suddenly inherits an English title, combined with affluent wealth, and who finds himself out of place in a world of snobbery.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

An Inexpensive Pipe Organ.

LAST WEEK I visited the "Harmo-Electric" pipe organ factory in Chicago and saw something which will surely interest those exhibitors who favor pipe-organ music for pictures but cannot afford the price. The "Harmo" people make pipe organs—good ones, too—but the particular instrument I went to see is a little different from others of this class. It is simply a pipe organ without a manual (keyboard), the organ being attached to a piano keyboard by electric contact and played from the piano keyboard. Don't misunderstand this. I know there are several instruments on the market which this description might fit, but this is not quite the same. In the first place, there is practically no limit to the number of stops (sets of pipes) which may be attached to the keyboard. The one I looked at had six different sets, including wood and metal pipes. I was informed that particular one could be attached to a piano keyboard in four hours. It is nothing more nor less, when installed, than a one-manual pipe organ, though, as before stated, any number of stops may be attached. The electric power for the contact is furnished by dry batteries. The bellows are served by a motor connected to the house wires. They expect to have one on exhibition in Chicago soon, and I intend to report further upon it at another time.

Loose Leaf Music.

Mr. Winkler says: "The motion picture musician must first of all take his work seriously. He should be able to at once recognize the dramatic possibilities of a picture and to augment and support them through the medium of his art; but how many do it? Not because they are incapable of fitting the music to the various scenes of the picture, but because they do not have the music. No leader can afford to spend $5 or $10 per week for music; yet the reproduction of a moving picture is heightened to an extraordinary degree through the rendition of good program music selected with special reference to the varied harmonic setting of the picture. It is true, certain incidents are hard to represent in the so-called musical language. Why? Most leaders own dramatic sets, printed years ago, for curtain raisers, short incidents, etc, and not long enough to cover burglar-murder-fire scenes, lasting two or three minutes. Some of the better orchestras use extracts from large numbers, such as allegros from overtures, excerpts from selections, etc.; but in most cases it is difficult to find the marked page quickly enough—sometimes they will start the allegro after the scene for which it was intended is over. The majority of orchestras play old galops, rags, trots, hesitations, etc., with drum parts arranged for dance halls; often the drummer will hit a big gong or blow a train whistle when a burglar is sneaking through a chimney—or some such incongruous scene." (They do this because they believe they must always play the music exactly as it is printed, regardless of the picture's requirements.—Ed.) "I am using to the great advantage of myself and all concerned a folio containing hurry mysteriosos, furiosos, fire scenes, agitatos, etc., of 64 bars, long enough to cover any scene. These incidental movements are published in loose leaf form, called the 'Loose Leaf Motion Picture Collection,' and are obtainable in any music store. To my knowledge this folio is the only one which enables the orchestra leader to place its pages on the stand in any rotation, just to follow the changes on the screen. I am sure other musicians know about other suitable music for picture work. Why not come out with it? Let us work together to help increase the value of the picture shows and prove to the different managers that music is important and indispensable. M. Winkler, Musical Director, Brooklyn, N. Y."

I have not seen the loose leaf collection Mr. Winkler refers to. However, I believe there are several on the market. I think I was the first to enter the field with a collection of dramatic music printed on loose leaves "for convenience in laying out a program." I am sorry that lack of space compelled me to leave out a portion of Mr. Winkler's letter. His appeal to musicians is timely. Too many orchestra musicians (from leader to drummer) seem unable to regard the moving picture as they would any other show. It seems nonsensical to try to fit the picture musically—at least they think so. And so they fill up the time with waltzes, rags, medleys and popular stuff generally, selected at random and totally without regard to fitting the action of the play. The trouble is, they do not regard the picture as a play; it's nothing but a picture whose characters can't "get back" at them (as real actors would) for spoiling a tender scene with boisterous music, or vice versa.

"Du Barry."

Miss Meinhold writes: "I am enclosing musical program for 'Du Barry,' which was shown at our theater recently. Had I been playing the picture alone I might have varied a bit more to fit the picture, but as I had a violinist I tried to select a program in keeping with the general atmosphere and period. As it was favorably received here, I thought it might interest your readers." (You might have said "our readers"; they are yours as much as mine, you know.—C. E. S.) Here is the program:

DU BARRY.

REEL I.

1.—Scarf Dance (by Chaminade), until Jean sees Jeanette; then:
2.—"Parisienne" until leader; "Dreams"; then:
3.—"Dreaming" waltz until scene in milliner shop; then:
4.—"The Flatterer" (by Chaminade) until leader; "King Passes."
5.—"Coronation Marche" (from Le Prophete) until "That Evening."
6.—Entre acte from "Mignon" until end of reel.

REEL II.

7.—"Aragonaise" from "Le Cid."
8.—Suzanne (Air Ballet).
9.—Beethoven's Minuet.
10.—La Boheme (each number twice).

REEL III.

11.—Selection from Faust until Cosse goes to the Palace; then:
12.—"Amaryllis" (agitato) until end of duel; then:
13.—Tannhauser March until wedding scene; change to:
14.—Wedding March (Lohengrin) until Jeanette goes to king; then:
15.—March from Aide until end of reel.

REEL IV.

16.—Il Trovatore waltz until the Papal Nuncio visits Jeanette.
17.—Simple Confession (by Thome) until Cosse escapes to Inn.
18.—Marseilles Hymn until leader: "Du Barry Makes Discovery."
19.—Promotion Overture.

REEL V.

20.—Selection from "Lucia" until fete in garden.
21.—Pizzicato from Sylvia until leader: "I Have Failed."
22.—Quartette from "Rigoletto."
23.—Cavitina from Raff until end of reel.

REEL VI.

24.—Hurry (No. 25 Orpheum Collection) until mob rescues Cosse.
25.—Marseilles Hymn until Cosse goes to warn Jeanette.
26.—Salute de Amour (Elgar) until mob appears.
27.—Repeat hurry until leader: "I will go with you."
28.—Salute de Amour until leader: "Visions of the Past."
29.—"The Virgins Last Slumber" (Massenet) until end of reel.

Kitty H. Meinhold, Pianist, American Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y."

I am sure such of our readers who get the "Du Barry" picture to accompany will appreciate Miss Meinhold's hints in the above program.

A number of constituents have complained about the scarcity of musical programs in our page of late. We can't fill it up with musical programs, although we are perfectly willing to insert one or two occasionally—when they are sent in. Perhaps this will interest you:

"THE ITALIAN" (PARAMOUNT).

1.—Overture, "La Rose Intermezzo".....Ascher.

REEL I.

2.—Zelima (Oriental characteristic).....Ilgenfritz
3.—Mexican Dance .....Kroeger
4.—"In a Pagoda" .....Bratton

REEL II.

5.—La Sevillana (Chanson Havanaise).....Yradier
6.—Goodbye Song .....Tosti
7.—Mercedes, Valse Espagnole .....Galimberti

REEL V.

8.—Valse lente "Cupid's Caress".....Roberts
9.—Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
10.—"Roses" (from Floral Suite).....Bendix

REEL VI.

11.—Humoresque.....Dvorak
12.—"Amo" (Melody in E minor).....Robyn
13.—Berceuse from "Joycelyn".....Godard

INTERMISSION.

14.—One Step, "Beaux Esprits".....Tomkins

The above program is from George L. Hamrick, of the Bonita Theater, Columbus, Ga. The letterhead says: "Orchestra, Pipe Organ and Singing," and so I presume the four reels given are for orchestral accompaniment, while the unmentioned third and fourth reels were accompanied by the organ. Mr. Hamrick says: "I am not sending cues, as from the action of this picture it is only necessary to segue from one number to another."

Maybe so. I have had no opportunity to compare the program with the picture. The music of the fifth and sixth reels doesn't depart very far from one general character—a tender or sympathetic one; but the first reel opens with an Oriental followed by a Mexican dance which is followed by a very marked Oriental number. The second reel opens with a characteristic "Havanaise," a segue to Tosti's "Good-bye" (a sentimental song) once through and segue to a Spanish waltz. Was there nothing in the action to indicate a dividing line between these contrasting musical numbers? However, it is all good music, and I am not going to say Mr. Hamrick was wrong in not giving "cues" for changing to contrasting numbers in the two reels, because I don't know. We hope he will come again.

Real Stories from Reel Studios

By Thornton Fisher.

Foreword: To each of you concerned in the art of motion picture production and exhibition this new feature is dedicated. Under the big glass tops much comedy is enacted which of itself possesses a certain picture value but never reaches the screen, and I shall endeavor in the weeks to come to write and draw pictures of the humorous side of the studio, together with paragraphs of men and women who are a part of this great industry.

Our hammer is under the ground and "ridicule" has been torn from our dictionary, every pencil line will be friendly and our motto will be "Tell the truth—even if its funny!"

Billy Reeves, the English Comedian playing with the "Midnight Frolics," worked recently in his first picture at the Lubin studio and, acting under the direction of Art Hotaling, smashed ten dollars worth of glassware and bric-a-brac and nearly wrecked the furniture while doing the comedy scenes. But then, Hotaling is one of the best little experts at demolishing household effects in the business. Billy almost fainted when he discovered that the studio didn't furnish a band and an audience.

George La Guere, who plays "Larry" in George Kleine's film version of "The Commuters," decided to take up a theatrical life at a tender age. He went home to the plantation in Louisville and confided his ambitions to the family. Even the servants heard of it, and one day his black "mammy" stopped washing and surveying him from head to foot sarcastically remarked: "So youse gwine on de stage, eh?" "Yes, Mammy." "Laws, child, what kin you do on de stage—you kaint do no tumblin'!"

Not very long ago one of the Universal studios employed a French camera man (who, by the way, was not neutral) and put him to work on a big scene. He started the camera and the picture was going great when some one roamed in with a "war extra." It was enough. The Frenchman saw it, stopped in the middle of the scene, clutched at his chest, rolled his brown orbs heavenward and pushing his other hand through his hair, dashed out of the door crying "Vive la France" and made a bee-line for a newspaper bulletin board to get the latest returns from the front. Thereafter they read the papers down in the cellar.

When the massive glass studio at the Bosworth plant in Los Angeles was recently finished, word was sent to a cleaning company to send men at once. A few hours later Manager Eyton saw a lonely-looking little Italian with a small tin pail in one hand and a little rag in the other, wandering about the grounds. "What do you want?" he asked. The little man looked at him pathetically—"Me washa da wind," he said. With a comprehensive gesture which took in all the thousands of panes of glass in sight, Mr. Eyton said: "Here is da wind." There was silence for one moment.

"Me see da boss!" Pietro gasped, and beat a hasty retreat through the gate.

GRANDON WITH RELIANCE AND MAJESTIC.

Francis J. Grandon, the erstwhile Selig producer who directed the "Adventures of Kathlyn" series, has been added to the already large producing forces at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood Studio. Mr. Grandon is one of the original "Biographers," having appeared in Mr. Griffith's Biograph photoplays. He drifted from the Biograph to the Lubin Company as a director, and produced a number of successful one reel westerns for the Lubin firm.

Selig Company was his next engagement, followed by Keystone and then to his present quarters.

KLEINE'S "COMMUTER'S" IS FINISHED.

George Kleine's "The Commuters," founded on the stage play by James Forbes, has been completed at the Kleine Studio, 11 East 14th Street, New York. The film, which features Irene Fenwick and Charles Judels, has been a long time in the making as it is Director Fitzmaurice's intention to make the best five-reel comedy in his experience, surpassing even that master of comedies, "Stop Thief." Certainly few directors every worked with a more able cast which includes such well known celebrities as Irene Fenwick, Dan Moyles, Charles Judels, George La Guere and Della Connor.

CALIFORNIA PICTURES AT SING SING.

At the request of the Golden Rule Brotherhood and with the permission of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne, the California Motion Picture Corporation's feature-production "Salomy Jane," was shown on March 5 to 1,800 inmates of that State Penitentiary at Sing Sing. The scenes which were most applauded are the daring horseback riding of the vigilantes, the driving of the stage coach, the marvelous swimming and riding of Miss Michelena and the jump of the robbers down a steep embankment.

Among the Picture Theaters

TWO HARTFORD PICTURE THEATERS.

An Expensive Choralcelo in Each House—A. C. Morrison Managing Director of Both Structures.

Majestic Theater.

ANOTHER high-class motion picture house was added to the list of amusement places in Hartford, Conn., when, on February 1, A. C. Morrison, managing director of the Princess theater, also in Hartford, opened the big Majestic. Mr. Morrison is also the managing director of this house, and George W. Sailer, who for two years was an efficient member of the Princess organization, has been promoted to the position of assistant manager of the new theater.

The entrance passageway is beautifully decorated in Vermont marble wainscoting to the height of four feet, above which the walls are tinted in light green. The artistic effect of this part of the house has not only been embellished by a large number of panels in which have been painted attractive scenes, but by big mirrors placed at convenient intervals. The floor of the lobby which is laid in old English red and brown tiling adds to the effectiveness of the approach. So that those desiring to see the manager will not be compelled to enter the theater, the manager's office has been placed on the right side of the lobby, while to the left is a stairs leading to the men's smoking room. The foyer is spacious, being 80 feet long by 12 feet in depth, and affords plenty of room for incoming and outgoing patrons without crowding. The entire orchestra floor has been laid with cork carpet, one-quarter of an inch thick. Over this in the aisles and the foyer, as well as the balcony and the stairs leading to the balcony, has been placed heavy mouse gray velvet carpet which harmonizes with the interior decorations. The draperies are also of mouse gray color. There are broad stairways at both ends of the foyer leading to the balcony, at the west end of which is the women's retiring room.

Allan C. Morrison.

The stage, which has a proscenium opening of 25 by 40 feet, is complete in every detail and can be used for vaudeville or any other form of entertainment should a change from moving pictures in the future be deemed desirable. At each side of the stage there are five dressing rooms and a toilet room. There are twelve boxes arranged in upper and lower tiers of three each. These boxes are commodious and sumptuously fitted with upholstered chairs. The walls of the boxes are tinted in orange and gray, enlivened with touches of gold. Over the center of the main floor is a magnificent ellipse painted on the ceiling surrounded by a border of electric lights. Mr. Morrison has a private office over the boxes at the east end of the house.

An important step in the erection of a theater is its ventilation system and this branch has received thorough consideration in the building of the Majestic. Over the rear of the balcony are twelve big exhaust fans that draw 60,000 cubic feet of air per minute, and directly over the stage are two more big exhaust fans. Precaution has been taken against fire. The window sashes are covered with metal, and reinforced window panes are used. The structure is built of steel, iron, concrete, brick and terra cotta. An automatic sprinkler system has been installed. The proscenium curtain is asbestos, and six sets of fire hose have been placed in convenient places throughout the house.

The operating room can be found in the rear of the balcony. Two motor-driven machines are used. There are one thousand seats in the orchestra and six hundred in the balcony. They are upholstered in leather with oak backs and arms. The ticket office, entrance doors, etc., are finished in gumwood and harmonize with the soft color of the interior.

What is probably the largest and most conspicuous sign in Hartford covers the front of the Majestic building for a height of 22 feet and for its entire width. It is shaped like a wide spreading V so that the wording can be read from both sides of the entrance. Above this sign is another, which measures 40 feet high and 5 feet wide and is placed at right angles to the building. This spells out the name Majestic with a flaming torch surmounting it.

Majestic Theater, Hartford, Conn.

The program at the Majestic is changed on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Licensed pictures and Paramount features compose the entertainments. Music at this house is supplied by a $15,000 Choralcelo. This instrument is presided over by Ivan White. The Majestic theater building is owned by W. W. Walker, but Mr. Morrison has taken on a long lease of the theater.

The Princess Theater.

ANOTHER excellent moving picture theater is the Princess, of which we said in the beginning of this article that Mr. Morrison is managing director. Elmer E. Bassett, who has served as assistant manager of this house for the past year, has been made manager and L. R. Turner has been advanced to the position vacated by Mr. Bassett.

This structure is in the heart of the business section of Hartford, and is directly opposite the post office building.

One thousand comfortable seats is the capacity of the Princess, and since the building was opened two years ago it has been one of the leading motion picture show houses in the city. This house is conducted in a most praiseworthy manner, and its programs reflect that the men in charge are experienced picture men and know the game well. The Princess is an asset to the motion picture industry. First run Universal pictures and Paramount features are shown. The entertainments usually run two hours, and an admission price of 10 cents is charged for any seat. Since the first of this year the music at the Princess has been rendered by a $10,000 Choralcelo, which is in charge of Edgar E. Seymour.

Princess Theater, Hartford, Conn.

This house is conducted by the Princess Theater Company, Inc., of which S. M. Morrison is president; A. J. Moody, vice-president, and A. C. Morrison, secretary and treasurer.

IVONHOE THEATER, SANDUSKY, OHIO.

Getting Full Houses Daily—Seats 700—Charles L. Blatz Owner and Manager.

SANDUSKIANS are jubilant over the addition to their places of amusement of the Ivonhoe theater in Jackson street, between Washington Row and Market street, Sandusky, Ohio. And they have every reason to be, for the Ivonhoe is indeed a house of which to be proud. It is owned by Charles L. Blatz and was opened on November 21, 1914. From front to rear and from basement to dome it is equipped with the latest and most approved furniture and fixtures. There are 700 seats in the auditorium and the chairs are comfortable. Always having in mind the comfort of the public in planning his theater, Mr. Blatz had the rows of seats placed at more than the usual distance apart, thereby obviating the necessity of squirming and squeezing on the part of those seated in order that a person may get in or out of a crowded row. This arrangement would also indicate that Mr. Blatz was not looking forward to getting the largest number of seats in a given space.

Like all other well built and up-to-date picture houses, the ventilation system in the Ivonhoe is perfect. The air is changed completely every ten minutes, so that one might remain in the structure for hours without experiencing that feeling of depression which foul air always creates. During the winter months the air is drawn into the auditorium through large ducts in the rear, the weather conditions determining the degree of heat to be applied. In the summer time the air is washed and cooled.

The Ivonhoe has been constructed almost in its entirety of steel, stone, brick and concrete which makes it as near fireproof as it is possible to build such a structure. Wood has been made use of only in the finishings. The stairways leading to the balcony and other parts of the house are of steel with concrete treads. The approach to the fire escapes are large. Considerable attention has been given to the matter of exits as well as to all entrances and aisles to have them meet with the requirements of the law. Each entrance leading to a fire escape has been equipped with a metal door which automatically opens outward, and these are indicated by illuminated signs. The provisions of the statute relating to this branch of theater construction have been carefully carried out to the letter. Even the stage and the dressing rooms beneath are as safe as any other part of the house, and there is a passage leading from the dressing rooms to a paved alleyway between the theater building and the adjoining structure. Large, comfortable retiring rooms for men and women have been provided for. These parlors are furnished with easy chairs, running water and drinking fountains. As further proof that the Ivannoe contains all the conveniences that the most fastidious may require, the management has had installed public telephone booths which does away with the necessity of waiting until the show is over or asking the manager to use his wire in order to relieve one's self of a message that he had forgotten to attend to before entering the house.

Two projection machines are used, and an unobstructed view of the screen can be had from any part of the house. The admission price is 10 cents. Mr. Blatz, however, is considering reserving a section of the theater for which a higher price will be charged. The Ivonhoe is opened at 1 P. M. and gives continuous shows until 11 P. M. High-class motion pictures form the entertainment. The ticket office is equipped with an automatic ticket seller that prints and delivers from a blank role tickets as rapidly as they are needed, merely by the insertion through a slot of a coin representing the price of admission. The money is registered and when closing times comes the total amount taken in during the day is indicated in plain figures in response to the touching of a button.

The Ivonhoe was named after Miss Ivon Gamble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Gamble, and a niece of Mr. Blatz. Artistic poses in which Miss Gamble attired as an Indian girl are used in advertisements of the house, as well as decorative schemes devised by Mr. Blatz. A three-quarter length picture of Miss Gamble in costume adorns the drop curtain which has been painted to look like a huge Indian blanket. The portrait is in the center, and is quite attractive,

CRYSTAL THEATER, BIRD ISLAND, MINN.

Another Concrete Example That a Small Theater Properly Managed in a Small Town Will Make Money

JUDGING from the accompanying photograph which gives a good view of the exterior of the Crystal theater, Bird Island, Minn., there is all the evidence that that house is being conducted on a sound business and common sense basis.

The front is kept neat and clean and the walls are devoid of ugly posters. The use of every available inch of space in the entrance for posters and advertising announcements without regard for the appearance of this neat little house is conspicuous by its absence. Some managers and owners of picture houses believe that it is absolutely essential to stimulate business by plastering the front of their houses with blood-curdling announcements. But the owner of the Crystal thinks otherwise, as is apparent by looking at the illustration herewith, and still she is making a lot of money. The only announcements of the show are framed posters placed in convenient places in the entrance. The Crystal is owned and managed by Mrs. F. H. Daley, who is an experienced woman in the picture business and knows exactly what kind of an entertainment to give the patrons of the Crystal.

Even though it is a small theater in a small town, the Crystal is furnished with the best of equipment and its appointments are all that could be expected. In the operating room, which is made of asbestos and steel, there is a Power's 6a projection machine. The operator's booth was bought of the H. W. Johns-Manville Company. The floor of the auditorium is made of hard maple wood, and is inclined to the proper degree, thereby giving a clear view of the screen from any seat in the structure. The dimensions of the building are 24 feet wide by 85 feet deep. There are 250 opera chairs which were bought of the A. H. Andrews Company, whose main offices are in Chicago.

Music is furnished by a piano. There is an illuminated electric sign bearing the name of the theater which projects from the top of the entrance.

HARMONY THEATER, BANFF, ALTA., CANADA.

Photoplay House in Canadian Rockies Nets Good Profit Twelve Months in Year.

TYPICAL of a Canadian Northwest motion picture house is the Harmony theater, Banff, Alta., Canada, with its gable roof and rustic appearance, quite different from photoplay structures of a big city and even small towns. Yet it has all the comforts and conveniences of some of the large picture theaters situated in parts of the globe where the population is thousands and even millions of times greater than that of the town of Banff. It is owned and managed by Byron Harmon, who, besides having a broad knowledge of the motion picture industry, is a professional outdoor and indoor photographer as well.

Banff is right in the heart of the Canadian Rockies, and is something like 3,000 miles from New York City. It is a popular summer resort and the influx of tourists during the warm months swells the winter population of about 1,200 to something between 3,000 and 4,000. While the two motion picture theaters there, one of which is the Harmony, do a good business all the year round, their daily receipts in the summer time are greater, notwithstanding the fact that it is the summer season. During the winter months Mr. Harmon opens his theater at 7:30 P. M. and runs continually until 11 P. M., while in the warm period the house is opened at 2 P. M. Four reels are exhibited at each show, and the admission prices are 10 and 15 cents. The programs are composed of Mutual pictures and features, and the entertainment is changed daily. Mr. Harmon gets his films from Calgary.

The dimensions of the Harmony theater are 30 feet wide by 120 feet long. It has a seating capacity of 450. The latest model of the Simplex make of projection machine is used, and the throw is 90 feet. The theater is fitted with a homemade screen, applied with a preparation which gives it a good lustre. The house has been in operation two years, and it cost Mr. Harmon $6,000 to erect. The interior is finished in mission, and big panel photographs of scenes of the Rockies taken by Mr. Harmon, 3 by 9 feet in size, adorn the walls. These views not only add to the beauty of the interior but attract the eyes of the traveler who wonders at the marvelous scenes. The house is provided with six big exit doors.

A rather unconventional but perfectly effective system of ventilation is installed in the Harmony. Across the ceiling for the full width of the house are five big hollow beams through which the foul air passes and into a sort of garret where it is sucked out. The pure air is drawn in at the back of the theater. Mr. Harmon says that although this is a rather unusual system for keeping fresh air in the house he has found it to be practicable. These hollow beams are sixteen inches in width and not only act as ventilators but are used as a means of concealing the electric lights, thereby creating an indirect lighting effect. There is one foot slope to every eleven feet of floor, giving a perfect perspective of the screen.

British Notes

ACCORDING to information supplied to the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association there are now close upon ninety manufacturers of moving-picture films in different countries, who are submitting all subjects released to the scrutiny of the British Board of Film Censors. Up to date a total of 150 pictures have been objected to and sent back for alteration, while 13 have been rejected absolutely. In South Africa, Australia and New Zealand the board's certificate is officially accepted, but not yet in Canada. Recently representatives of the National Board of Film Censors of America paid a visit to the British establishment and (says Dr. Fowler Pettie, the chairman of the association), were so impressed that they decided to use some of the methods employed by Mr. G. A. Redford and his colleagues.

Mr. W. C. Toomey, Director of the Mutual and of the N. Y. Motion Picture Corporation, is spending a few days in London studying trade conditions over here first hand, he says. He speaks confidently of the future of both organizations and their competition for the European market.

The numerous American friends of Miss Florence Turner will welcome the news of her recovery from a serious attack of pneumonia. Her illness considerably impeded her work in connection with a number of feature dramas. The first of these, "Shop Girls," is already on the market.

At least one municipality in England has had the foresight to provide facilities for technical instruction in the projection of moving pictures, the Education Committee of Salford holding a two hours' class on Saturday mornings for the training of operators. A small fee is charged upon entry, but if the candidate is diligent in his attendances it is returned to him. Considering the prolificy in this country of so-called bioscope schools, in many cases run by "fee-snatchers," the institution of "projection classes" should be productive of immense good. There are many operators who have been dependent for their entry into the box solely through "watching the other fellow," and without the faintest knowledge of optical or electrical standards.

The Scottish population of the new world, as well as that of the old, will be particularly interested in the translation to the language of the screen of Sir J. M. Barrie's "Little Minister." The whole setting is typically Scottish, and many critical North-countrymen witnessed the film when it first saw light at the Shaftesbury Pavilion last week. A truly vivid and realistic representation of the interior of the "Auld Licht Kirk of Thrums," where the little minister preaches to his congregation, is the master scene to a fine production. "The Little Minister" is the embodiment of six months hard work by the Neptune Film Company.

An American company has committed a few clumsy errors in a film, entitled "The Second in Command." I forget for the moment the name of the producers. A regiment is shown to be in charge of both a Colonel and a Lieutenant Colonel, which is unheard of in military administration. The uniforms, supposedly British, approximates more to naval than military garb, and furthermore some of the leaders are facially adorned with whiskers despite the fact that British military men are forbidden the delights of face fungus. The scenes laid in Egypt go on to show the regimental colors being carried into action, also a practice discontinued since 1821. In the choice of the flag the producers zeal overreached itself, for the emblem bears the too appropriate design of the sphinx.

The Postal Censor has been too keen for once in his scansion of telegrams. The telegraphic and cable address of "Warner's Feature Films" in London is "Warfeature." This was sufficient incriminating evidence for the Censor. Cables from the United States and other countries respecting films were held up and confiscated. When something like twenty or thirty had been destroyed and messages pouring in every minute of the day complaining of the absence of films, an inquiry was made. Then it occurred to the "blue-pencil bureau" that "Warfeature" was an abbreviation of Warner's Features.

Last Monday (Feb. 15th) I met in Leeds a film traveler who since the outbreak of war had been in Russia and who had just returned via Archangel and Hull. He spoke optimistically of the future for the industry in the east of Europe, although moving pictures appear to be very much in their infancy yet. His experience proves that Moscow is a better distributing center than Petrograd owing to the enormous railway distance between the capital and the eastern towns. Many picture theaters have been compelled to close their doors on account of the drain on the civil population by the military authorities, but they are not alone in this respect, the theaters being similarly situated.

For photographing actual fighting at the front the handful of Russian camera men have had much better facilities than those accorded to English or French operators, he said. Films have already appeared in Russia illustrating the horrors of warfare in all their ghastly reality. "I saw one of these in Odessa and there was no mistaking it for a fake. All was too real. Hand to hand fighting on the Eastern frontier with close views of bayonet charges made the subject really too terrible to behold" added my informant. "The operators must have held their lives in their teeth when they took these pictures. I do not think they would be allowed to be exhibited if they were imported either to Britain or America although I heard in Petrograd that an American agency had been in negotiation for them.

Messrs. Pathe Freres have been appointed official kinematographers to the Czar of Russia. The importance of this appointment will be realized when it is known that what has been applied for in vain by other moving picture films has been conferred voluntarily upon them.

A few months ago Parliament introduced emergency legislation for the control of all stocks of celluloid and a question was asked in the House of Commons the other day if there was any probability of the continuation of these regulations after the termination of war. In reply the Home Secretary stated that he would be glad to see a public bill dealing with this matter passed at the termination of the war, but it was now impossible for him to give any pledge on the subject.

Many American film men visit Great Britain in the course of a year, but it falls to few to hustle about the countryside after the manner of Mr. W. C. Toomey, the Mutual director. He shot up North last Thursday afternoon to Manchester from London to spend a couple of hours at a trade show of the Keystone six-reeler, "Tillie's Punctured Romance." When it was first whispered that a six-reel Keystone had been thrown over from the other side, many exclusive buyers I know simply wouldn't look at it. "Too much of a good thing," they said. Up to the moment, however, I have good ground for stating that a bigger price has been offered for the comedy than has been paid for historical subjects costing six or seven times as much to produce. In conversation Mr. Toomey pointed out that one of the difficulties of the producer competing for the world's film market is the different standard of taste to be found on both shores of the Atlantic. There is always the possibility that a great screen attraction in America may only prove a partial success here, and vice versa. He is making a point of investigating so far as he can what type of production is best suited to the British public and whether it is possible to eliminate unessential differences so as to perfect a style of production suitable for both sides of the Atlantic. Mr. Toomey also says that he is here to discover whether suitable artists of the regular stage would be willing to cooperate with film artists in America, in other words to form the basis of a filmic "entente cordiale" to the "mutual" benefit of both countries.

A neat little improvement for film boxes of projectors has just been lodged at the Patent Office by a London gentleman. Every operator knows the disadvantage of opening the door of the film box while the machine is running. It either obstructs his view of the screen or interferes with the handle, that is if the projector is hand propelled. This invention provides for the film box a flexible door made of metal strips mounted upon stiff fabric. Its extreme flexibility permits of it being opened without swinging out from the body of the box. Another idea from the same source is a safety shutter for the projector consisting of a lever, one arm of which carries a roller adapted to engage the loop of the film between the sprockets. When the loop tightens up, one arm is positively rotated on its fulcrum thereby causing the other arm to electrically operate a safety shutter to cut off the light.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

"All Caps" Again.

COMMENTING on a recent paragraph in this department, a railway mail clerk draws on his own valuable experience to corroborate our observations, and writes:

> By the way, I note that you knock the all-cap stuff both in advertising and manuscript work. Let me add a little expert testimony on this stuff. If you ever want to know anything about legibility of any style of writing or printing, just ask a postal clerk. The difference of five or ten pieces per minute will often stick him and he has a great appreciation of the relative values of the different styles of addresses. If you want to see the air in the car turn blue with pea-green trimming around the edges and a big blob of red in the middle, just turn a big lot of all-cap addresses loose on a postal clerk. It is worse than poor script. The first 500 are not so bad but after that they will kill speed so badly that Mr. Clerk will be draggy for the rest of the run. Roughly divided, addresses can be classified on basis of legibility about as follows: Those in mixed type by printing press, those in typewriter "printype" (printype addresses run about five to the minute faster than any other typewriter type), other typewriter type, genuine vertical script, spencerian script, poor script (this includes ornamental script), all cap typewriter, foreigner's script, window envelopes and "back-hand.' I think that any postal clerk you may ask will verify this classification of addreses.

Railway mail clerks do not simply ride on the cars to watch the bags of mail. They must sort the stuff enroute and frequently they are held up by some sudden rush of matter or perhaps a lot of circulars badly addressed and then they roll into the terminal "stuck." As promotions are based on their knowledge of routes and the speed with which they can distribute mail accurately, naturally the subject of legible addresses interests them vitally. All capital letters kill speed in distributing, just as all capital letters on a piece of advertising reduce to a minimum the chance that the matter will be read.

And on this subject it might be mentioned that gothic matter is all capitals even though the initial letters are larger than the body of the matter. They are merely two or more sizes of capitals.

And it is well to remember that not all printing types are equally legible. If you get any choice at all, study the matter carefully. Get the most readable letter. Get a nice looking letter if you can, but get above all a legible letter.

An Insert.

The Academy of Music, Selma, Ala., inserts its own four pages into the Paramount Magazine and gets a house issue. Perhaps in time they will use eight pages and get back to the old Academian style. Here's hoping. At least it is a start.

Another General Issue.

The latest "all theaters" issue is the Spotlight, issued by the Lane Company, of Galesburg, Ill. The editor writes:

> We are sending to you a copy of "The Spotlight" motion picture magazine—the initial issue—on which we solicit a frank criticism from you personally.
> Please tell us what you think of it and do not be unduly lenient. To the end that we may mould this publication into a profitable one, we desire such opinions as we hope you will give us.
> This magazine is designed to cater only to those movie patrons who attend Galesburg theaters.

The front page is promising, in spite of the fact that there is nothing to show where it comes from. The heading should carry the town and state, preferably on the line where the date now is.

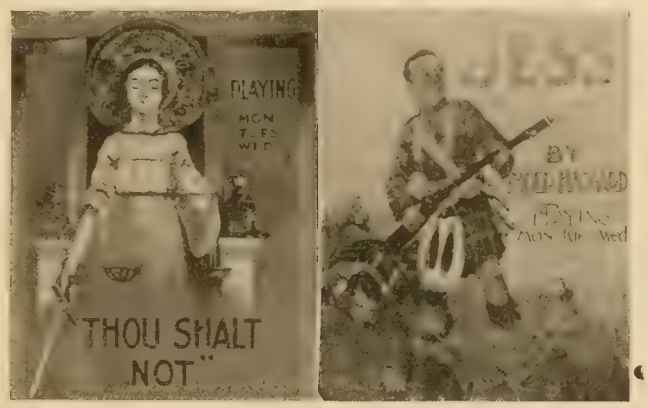
Inside the editor, Leigh Metcalfe, tries to give them something to read. There are a couple of pages of local notes, some picture clips and the running stories of the features, but most of the pages are put together in job office rather than magazine style. Their top heads; a straight line across with a drop bank in the middle column, is a good idea, but cross lines below make some of the pages look like a shirt striped the wrong way.

But about the only serious comment we have to offer that the coming program is not well displayed. The current bill is not given at all in program form. The underline is given without display. The days are undated, and one column of the page is taken for straight advertising. This page could be made a most valuable feature were it handled right. Both "this week" and "next week" should be given, one above the other, the programs for the current week at the top of the page and that for the week following at the bottom. For the next issue the bottom is moved to the top of the form and new matter placed below. But an orderly arrangement should be used, and to mark it from the rest only two columns to the page should be used. Start the layout with the name of the house in the present type. Then set the day solid, the day and date in full face, and the remainder of the announcement in Roman, paragraphing each title, and using leads only between days and not between titles. It might look better were the day and date in Roman with the titles in full face, upper and lower case and the names of all players in italics. This one page is the real reason for the entire sheet and too much care cannot be given in order to get it just right.

If Mr. Metcalfe wants to send in later issues with the change made, we'll be glad to stay with him until he gets it just right. The issue in most aspects is decidedly good as it stands.

Paints His Own.

Not many houses can get out their own pictorial advertising matter, but the Strand theater, Toronto, has an art department with a figure man and letterer, and they get out some really artistic work that makes the term "art department" no misnomer. Leon Schlessinger, the manager, sends in a dozen photographs from which we select two, and sends also a copy of a local paper with a cut of the room which displays some handsome lettered boards. George Charles is the figure man and Ken Frost does the lettering. This is worth doing only when it can be really well done, and the cuts are shown, not so much in the expectation that others will follow, as to record an innovation. We recall a time when Edgar Miller painted the signs for Keith's Union Square theater and the regular patrons looked upon them as much a part of the weekly visit as the performance within. Where it can be afforded, it is a most valuable means of advertising, relieving the house front of the garish effect of highly colored lithographs; always desirable when it is that sort of a house. Perhaps Mr. Schlessinger will be good enough some time to send a photograph of the house front complete. The art department also does the black and white work for the full double column advertisements Mr. Schlessinger runs, cuts in white on black that are refined and yet as noisy as a darkey band at a funeral.



Help!

The Third Street theater, Easton, advertises in the program that a five dollar bill was found on the floor the other night. Can such things be? But, on the other hand, they give a page of valuable space to William A. Brady's remarks in the Satevepost. We can't imagine anyone taking Bill Brady so seriously. He's too good a showman not to say something that will get them talking. He did it.

R. R. to the Ladies.

Ralph Ruffner, of the American theater, Butte, Montana, sends a note and a card. This is the letter:

> Press dope on Mrs. Leslie Carter in Kleine's "Du Barry" carried some mention of the beautiful gown worn by the star. We thought it might be the means of gaining us a heavy feminine patronage if properly worked up, especially as it was our intention to play this production at twenty-five cents admission, so the enclosed sample was conceived and distributed at our Thursday matinee a week in advance of the picture.
> Each Thursday afternoon we are blessed with a strong attendance of women and the entire lot of 1,500 invitations (?) were given out. That they were valued by our patrons in a small way is attested by the fact that not a dozen found their way to the sidewalk, a good record considering they were handed to the ladies as they passed out the door.
> Our experience has taught us that the women patrons like a little added attention right along, and in this instance the experiment worked very satisfactory. THEY DID LIKE IT, AND CAME TO SEE THE THINGS WE HAD TAKEN THE TROUBLE TO POINT OUT. We use a special form of ticket for the ladies at all matinees and our observation is based upon the increased sale those two days of the "Du Barry" engagement.

The sample is a square envelope just a shade off white printed in purple; "To the Ladies" and carrying in the corner "R. S. V. P." It contained a card, also printed in purple, that elaborately and attractively described the costume worn by Mrs. Carter with a final paragraph of facts as to date, times of showing, admission and other reels. It was not printed in a mussy, smeary type but a clean cut face that can carry a lot of matter in small space and still be read with ease. At that he did not try to say too much. He never does. One of the best points is that he tells it and stops. Mr. Ruffner also knows that the men go where the women want to go, so he schemes to get them in.

For the House.

Engle and Mason of the Empire theater, Fort Dodge, Ia., send in something unusual. They get out a small four-page issue, seemingly a stock color print, that advertises the house more than the films. They do not give the program, but they have a snappy paragraph about the house each issue and boom the underlines serial in a few words. They have coined a word, "Automofailure," to serve as a text for their sermon that they cater to the pe-pul rather than the carriage trade, and they state facts clearly and convincingly without spread eagle stuff. Here is a sample:

"AUTOMOFAILURE"

Some exhibitors cater more to those who come to their place of amusement in automobiles than the thousands who walk or come on the street cars (when they run). But with us the money paid through our box office window by the man who walks is just as good as the money of the man who comes in a car. And don't stop to dress up, just come along in the very same clothes you are wearing. Bring the wife and the children, we'll make room for you all, and don't worry about the price; it is ALWAYS 5 and 10 cts.

EMPIRE

We don't like the "always five and ten cents," because that means a lot of good stuff that cannot be handled.

And Mr. Bleich.

George A. Bleich sends in a picture of his Empress theater, Owensboro, Ky. It is just the sort of house we might have expected from the Bleich advertising. It is clean cut and "regular" looking, not over dressed with posters, but with a sufficient display. In one recent advertisement he comes out frankly to say a certain serial was poor, but that it would be run along until new and better instalments came. It was a frank meeting of the situation that was better than cancellation or argument that the feature was good. Another advertisement starts off with this announcement: "With the exception of that putrid, vile thing —— that sneaked in on me for one show recently, all —— feature comedies so far offered have been real mirth provokers." You can have three guesses as to the missing words.

In another vein here is a "letter" that will please the women:

Say John!

Look here, don't you think you ought to treat your wife to the show a little oftener than you do?

You get out quite often and browse around with the boys and the evenings slip by quickly. But what about the "Missus"?

Give her a little pleasure—bring her to the Empress more often. Lighten her cares. It will make your lives happier and brighter.

"SLICK UP" A LITTLE AND COME TONIGHT.

Please, "Ma'am," won't you remind John? He's an awful forgetful "cuss"? BLEICH.

Mr. Bleich stamps his personality on his advertising as well as his house, and these boxed in letters to his public, though they take less than a quarter of the space, do nine-tenths of the pulling. It is stuff that makes people look for the advertisement. They want to see what Bleich has to say, and seeing, they read the rest, which is what he wants.

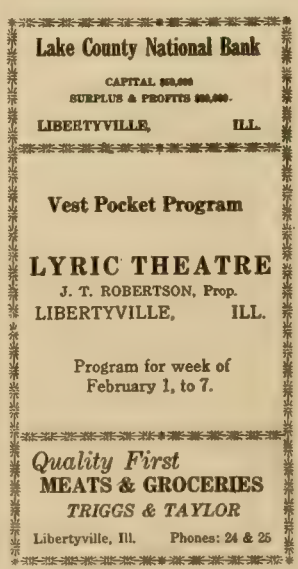
Edits the Ads.

Comes again J. N. Cason, of the Sylacauga (Ala) Opera House, offering more new ideas. The most original thing about the new stuff is that he is apparently editing the advertising. The little four page program that we liked so well did not give room for advertising for the outside firms, and evidently the tradesmen wanted to come in on the program. The program for the week of February 15th was a six page railroad folder. That for the following week is twelve pages. Inside there is a day for each bill, the program giving room for a small house argument at the bottom. On the other side there is the program cover, a back full page ad and four trade ads. These are uniform in style, a catchline, three or four lines of argument, and the name of the firm. Of course it is not always possible to induce advertisers to adopt a uniform style of advertisement, but where it can be done, the improvement in the program is so marked that it pays at least to make the effort. And if you cannot insist on uniformity you can at least bar out blotchy black type faces and avoid smudges. If you can follow Mr. Cason you'll get a sheet you can be proud of. He gives a little less than half the page to the advertiser and takes the top and bottom for his own house stuff. In a word he is getting out the program in the interest of the house and not solely for the benefit of the grocer and the butcher. If space is worth a dollar to them it is worth two dollars to you—unless you have enough to give all your message in and then some spare room. Don't make the program a purely commercial enterprise. Make it first of all a business getter for you. After that make it self-supporting, if you can. The twelve page folder is a bit awkward, being folded over on itself, fold on fold, as though it had been rolled and then flattened. The effect is virtually that one must again unroll it. It would be better to fold the two ends of the strip together than fold in threes, so that the two ends can be taken at once and pulled out. As usual we must hand a bunch of roses to the printer. He is "all there" when it comes to setting type and using it on a press.

Mr. Cason writes:

We believe we are improving by following the examples or rules you lay down in your criticisms and comments in your department, but we want to be sure of the maximum in programs, so we send these along for criticism and suggestion.

Small and Good.



J. T. Robertson, of the Lyric theater, Libertyville, Ill., sends some vest pocket programs that he says bring him better results than any other style he has tried. They are not at all pretentious, but they are neatly done and evidently the printer has worked with Mr. Robertson to get a good job. In so small a space not much descriptive matter can be run to advantage, and here it is not attempted, the inside pages carrying only the list of titles, the stars and the brand. The days are not dated as they should be, but we hope that Mr. Robertson will see to this. The date as well as the day cannot be too often emphasized. The back page carries at least two underlines for features. Two advertisements, top and bottom of the front page, pay half the cost of publication. They are only one inch deep, each, on a card five inches deep, and they are so intelligently handled that they do not obtrude themselves, the center portion catching the eye first. The small reproduction will give an idea of how the space is handled. It is shown here because it is done so well.

Hats Off!

Joseph Desberger, of the Arcade theater, Paducah, Ky., writes:

I always get so much information from your department that I owe the following original slide matter. We have had much trouble with the hat question and were never successful in getting the ladies to remove their hats until the following slide suggested itself to me:

LADIES
Do you believe in WOMAN'S RIGHTS?
If you do,
Take off your hat
LIKE A MAN.

The slide creates much laughter and has the desired effect.

That is precisely the answer. Mr. Desberger gets them laughing and they good humoredly comply with the request where the usual demand is ignored and perhaps resented. That is the great trick in handling an audience. Just keep them in good humor and you can do anything you want, but try to boss and they'll "dare you" to make them comply with a demand. This is the best slide we've seen yet. Try it—even if you are having no trouble about hats.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is enclosed.

Building Up.

MOST authors get a plot and get in down on paper as quickly as possible and into the studio as quickly as possible—and back again with all possible speed. Now speed in production is every bit as undesirable as a speedy return, and it is hurried, slovenly work that often brings the script back so quickly.

Don't be content merely to get a plot. Keep at it until you have made the plot all that it can be made. Build it up. Polish it. Make something decent of it. If you build a house you are not content with a rectangular structure of merely four walls and a roof. You want some dewdads on it, carved or stamped cornice, perhaps a porch or balconies, railed steps, and the like. If you make a dress you are not content to take fabric and make a garment that will merely cover you decently. You want some style about it, flounces and peplums and other things we might mention if the Mrs. was within reaching distance, just as a man wants a ribbon band on his hat, cloth tops to his shoes and leather buttons on his overcoat. In a restaurant an Irish stew may cost forty cents where a ragout, dressed up with spices costs you sixty. It's stew, but stew all dolled up. You know all this, and yet any bare, bleak, half starved idea is a "story" to be rushed off to the studio only to be rushed back again. Make goulash of your story stews. Season them up. Make them as attractive as you know how and if you don't know how, study.

Building up consists of two processes. The first is adding more plot factors and the second is giving to the script the little humanizing, convincing touches that David W. Griffith knows so well how to contribute. Take the familiar story of Bess who wants to marry Jack but who must marry Bill to save her father from ruin. That is a poor subject, because it is not true to real life, but there is no use wasting a good idea.

Now the simplest development of this idea is the facts as stated. Bess loves Jack, but she marries Bill and lives unhappily ever after. It is the bare record of a sordid and unreal happening. We establish Bess' love for Jack, bring in Bill, show his love, show that he has the father in his power, pressure is applied, they are married, and Jack goes somewhere else. Stories with this plot would be worth a dollar a dozen if anyone was foolish enough to be willing to waste a dollar.

The most obvious way to build up the interest is to have Jack fight Bill. He will not give up without a struggle. He plays the stock market, wins a million dollars in fifty feet, comes back, marries the girl and kicks Bill off the place. This is more interesting than the first development, but it depends too much on sheer and unreal luck.

But suppose that instead of dropping into his brokers and buying stock, Jack goes at it like a man. Bill has "something on" Bess' father. The thing to do is to get something on Bill that will offset this. Jack does a little detective work and finds that Bill bribed a Board of Aldermen to give him the franchise on which his fortune was built. To keep out of jail Bill keeps out of matrimony as well. If Bess helps Jack with his sleuthing, the story becomes more interesting in the precise ratio in which Bess aids.

But suppose that Jack, in trying to find out about Bill, commits some act, not morally but legally criminal. Perhaps he breaks into Bill's house to search the safe. Bill finds him and tells him he can either go to jail or South America. Jack says he'll go to jail, but he won't give Bess up. (If he went to South America he would lose sympathy.) Now Bess, single handed, gets the information and frees herself, Jack and her father. There is now a strong crisis as well as a climax.

All of this development has been along the lines of strenuous endeavor. It may be that the story will be better with a heart interest touch. Suppose that Bill has no hold on Bess's father, but has been led to believe that he is her choice by the father, who sees in the marriage a chance to form a commercial combination that will turn impending bankruptcy into a triumph. The father alone works on Bess and she, like a dutiful daughter, consents to play her part. But when things look blackest Bill finds out the facts, assures the father that the combination is possible without his marriage to Bess and insists that she be allowed to marry Jack. The story will be less thrilling, but what is lost in violence of action will be replaced by the appeal to the generous emotions. We will be so sorry for Bill, while we rejoice in Jack's good fortune, that we will be caught between smiles and tears.

But still more may be done along this line and it will be possible to work to a full happy ending if a slight change is made. It looks as though Bill was going to win hands down when Jack appeals to a slightly mature but still attractive maiden aunt. She comes to town to see how she can help and solves the problem by marrying Bill herself and leaving the young folks free to wed. This interest may be heightened if she first opposes Bill on the propositon that he is an unworthy person and comes to love him when she finds out his sterling qualities.

These illustrations are crude, but they serve to show how the story can be built up, factor by factor, until the bare plot becomes all dolled up like a horse in a mosquito net blanket and a straw hat with ribbons on it.

The little touches cannot be gone into deeply since they must arise from the action as it is written, but this scene may give a hint:

Parlor—Bess on—Father ushers Bill in—says he'll have to go—gives Bill a sly poke in the liver to drive home the jest—Bill angry—Bess laughs behind him back but stops suddenly when Father scowls at her. Father gives Bess a menacing look—exits—Bill pompously takes book from pocket—polishes diamond with coat sleeve—takes out ring—puts on Bess' finger—tries to kiss her—she pretends to be interested in ring—speaks—

Cut-in—"I must show this to Dad."

Back to—Scene—Runs out—Bill crestfallen follows slowly.

That takes more space than the mere statement that "Bill gives ring," but it lends conviction.

Develop your script to the *n*th power and you are more apt to get checks on paper instead of another sort of check in a return envelope.

Well, Well, Well!

Elbert Moore, otherwise Kenneth Langley, starts his newest letter:

> I have eight vacancies in my course which I must fill within the next ten days, without fail. Would you be willing to take one if I allow you to enroll for $1 down?

Now isn't that nice? He has eight vacancies and to fill the gap he spends ten or fifteen dollars for a form letter and postage to send the offer broadcast. And think how terrible it would be if a hundred fell for the bunk and ninety-eight had to be disappointed. But would they be?

Mr. Langley also speaks of his "national reputation" and his connection with one of the largest producing companies as scenario editor. Will Mr. Langley please tell a mildly interested audience with which company he has been connected as scenario editor. He says in some of his advertising that it is the Selig Company, but Mr. Prybil has stated that Langley never was editor and that he wrote the letter stating that he had been "connected" with the Selig Company on the Langley representation that he could get a job on the strength of the letter.

Inquest Dates.

The remaining dates of the Inquest Club for this season are:

April 5.
April 19
May 3.

Any person wishing to attend these meetings should come to the Savoy theater about seven o'clock, watch the program and come into the lobby when the slide indicates—which is about nine o'clock.

Leeds an Editor.

Arthur Leeds, part author of Writing the Photoplay and instructor in the Home Correspondence School Course in photoplay writing, has severed his connection with the school to accept an editorial position with a licensed company. In an effort to make good with his pupils, Mr. Leeds was compelled to abandon his original work entirely, and the change is made to enable him to do creative writing.

Those Books We Want.

So far we have had but one response to our request for the aid of readers in completing our library of works on photoplay. We would like to get one full set and two of many of them. We have books by Leeds, Wright, Phillips, Dench, Ball, Katterjohn (Photoplay Enterprise), Hoagland, Thomas, Carr, Radnor and How to Write Photoplays, of the Enterprise Publishing company. If you have any other please state title, publisher and price, but do not send the column until you hear definitely. Address this writer, direct, please.

What You Need.

The action you need in a story is the action that tells the story. More than this, as a rule, is like lead about the neck of a drowning man. It doesn't help any and it generally hurts. In comedy, particularly, it frequently happens that an entire episode can be removed without in the least interrupting the real story, and with the benefit that the true action then runs consecutively. It also holds, though in a lesser degree, in drama where some side action is given too great an importance through over-development. Look over your script before you send it out and see if it is carrying excess baggage.

To use an example, perhaps a mother-in-law comes to afflict the newly wedded pair. The story is stopped to show the mother leaving her own home, some of the incidents of her travel, her arrival in town and the final and only necessary scene of her appearance at the house. All of this could be cut as having no real bearing on the story, but the author thinks it is more interesting, so in it goes—and out it comes again, if it ever gets to production.

Breaking Scenes.

Enough of a good thing is plenty. Just because you are told that it is sometimes better to break two scenes with a non-essential flash scene rather than a leader, it does not follow that a script using this device all of the time is going to be good. To the contrary, it may be viciously poor because it has palpably unnecessary scenes sticking out like the spines on a porcupine.

John is about to send a bullet into Tom's back and you have a natural and intelligent hunch that the various local censors will cut out the scene. You want to evade the murder. You do so by breaking with a scene. Now, this might be Tom's sweetheart, waiting for Tom to come and bring her the engagement ring, or it may be the astute police official who hears a shot and dashes off in the direction of the scene of the crime. Either of these might be good, the latter being better than the former because more intimately related to the immediate action, but if you showed Jack's mother's school friend making the apple pie that Jack is eating in scene 47, when apprehended by the sleuth-hounds of the law, you are not making a good break, because, as yet, no one knows anything about that apple pie.

In other words, the scene does not "belong." It is recognized by the spectator as an intrusion, and a most unwarrantable one. He resents the intrusion and there is a sense of dissatisfaction with the play. If there are but one or two examples of bad breaking, it may not matter importantly, but if the same thing is done again and again through the course of the play, it hurts the chance of the play's success.

But the more vicious break is done to save a time leader. Jim starts for home. His home is in another town. We see Jim start from the house, we see Billy kissing his sweetheart and then Jim has covered the two hundred miles and comes in remarking how the old home has changed. There the ten foot scene is not as good as a five foot leader because it does not cover a sufficient interval of time and also because the incident has no relation to any part of the story. Even the kiddies realize that it is unnecessary and wonder why it should be.

One great trouble with the beginner is that he is carried away by his latest discovery. When he finds that the break scene will sometimes avoid a leader he tries to avoid every leader. He overworks the device. It becomes tiresome where it should be effective.

It cannot be written too often that the real art of photoplay writing is not only the evolution of a plot but its most cunning and adroit exemplification in written action. Have at your command the whole catalogue of tricks, but do not let the audience see that you are resorting to trickery. Make them believe that every inch of film, every word of leader is absolutely necessary to the unraveling of the plot. And make it so to the extent that every scene really is germane, not alone to the play, but to the main action of the moment.

If you want to break, think of half a dozen different scenes and a couple of leaders. Then pick out the best. After that, see if you cannot swing the main action so you do not need the break at all. It is well to escape time leaders, but if you must have one, you do not escape it by merely writing in a break scene instead. You merely leave the leader for the editor to write in—and he is not likely to appreciate the privilege.

Don't Do It.

Writing on your script or the accompanying letter that your story is copyrighted and must not be stolen not only marks you a stupid liar, but it renders you liable to a fine of one hundred dollars. Read this extract from section twenty-nine of the Copyright Law:

> Any person who shall knowingly issue or sell any article bearing a notice of United States copyright which has not been copyrighted in this country * * * shall be liable to a fine of one hundred dollars.

Offering for sale a story is issuing in the acceptance of the term and a misdemeanor because you are claiming a protection to which you are not entitled. It is not likely that any editor will take the trouble to prosecute an offender, but a more immediate effect is to tell the editor that the story is not worth reading because only the crudest kind of a fool will resort to this device and that sort cannot write.

Forcing Situations.

You may possibly force a situation, but you will never have a good play. One recent two reel showed a mining town with a little child, employed in a dance hall as an entertainer. The leader assured us that it was only mother's extreme poverty that forced her to consent to the child's work, that she was surrounded by the most loving care, and a crucifix was prominently displayed in one of the sets to show that this was so, and yet the mother let the child go alone each night to her work and was surprised and indignant when a burly Mexican tried to kiss her and the kiddie came home and threw a fit. The situation was so palpably untrue that any interest in the story was lost in disgust at the slovenly script. Surely no woman in a mining town ever supposed that she could send her immature daughter to "work the wine room," and that without chaperonage, and not have her kissed, and yet this is what we are asked to believe.

If you do not know about western honka tonks, don't write about them. If you do know them, write accurately.

To Roy McCardell, et al.

We know that Roy McCardell will let out a fresh yip of joy when no less an authority than Horace G. Plimpton, discussing the college student contest, makes this statement.

> The Edison company are frankly disappointed with the result of the contest and, in Manager Plimpton's opinion, the inference is that the Motion Picture Companies' hope lies more in professional writers than ideas of originality and plot coming from a larger number of amateurs. With every reasonable cause for expecting the college field to be particularly fruitful, the quality was, to put it mildly, no better than the average than comes into my studio daily. The Edison company would have been glad to accept more of the submitted manuscripts had they shown merit, but as it is, only eight were so considered.

McCardell is strong for the argument that only the trained writer can make good in photoplay. We differ with him only to the extent that we believe that the greater promise is given by the lesser flight of writers than the men and women with nationally known names. Those who have seen some recent productions bearing the names of well known writers, realize that either the story is worthless or that it does not follow the author's version but has been reconstructed by some clever studio man.

The only reason is that most authors of established reputation are too content with their fame to condescend to study the camera and its possibilities and its limitations. More than this, there are many whose reputation is based on style rather than originality of idea. When you get right down to hard facts there are few writers of real note who have made good for the camera. The only ones we recall at the moment are McCardell, Bannister Merwin and Gilson Willetts.

That is another way of saying that until you can make your work measure up to a professional standard it is useless to submit, but it is just as useless to try and convince most in this class that it is of no avail to send in junk, because they do not know it is junk.

Getting Speed.

One of the real people, after saying that it takes him two or three weeks to write a double reel in the time he can spare from his vocation, asks.

> If you can tell me any way that I can make better speed on my work and still keep up the quality, I would greatly appreciate it, but I don't believe that you can do this. I just have to have time to develop my greater power which will enable me to toss them off rapidly. Give me another year and then if I can't make the speed I'll be willing to admit that I don't belong Until then, I'll have to just be satisfied with what I can do.

Speed comes with practice alone. Sometimes our good nature gets the better of our common sense and we put on some amateur entertainment. One of them was a minstrel show and we got a real, regular minstrel to come up and teach the tambos their work. A funeral was an express train in comparison with his speed. He worked them at the rate of a tap every five seconds, but along about the third lesson he started to speed them up and before the night of the performance they could not only keep time with the orchestra—but even get a little ahead.

It's the same way with script writing. Start slowly and painstakingly. Make your chief aim the production of a script as perfect as you can make it. Take two weeks to a reel if you have to, but do it right and later on, when you do a couple of reels a week or even three and four you will still have good work as well as speed.

There is no short cut to speed in anything. You can work quickly right from the start if you wish, but if you work too rapidly at the beginning you will gain speed but not finish and you never will gain finish, whereas, if you first acquire finish, you will, automatically develop speed.

Finding It Out.

Mrs. Owen Bronson, who has enjoyed unusual success as a writer, is one of those who now realizes that perhaps early sales are even worse than early discouragements. She writes:

> "I was one of the unfortunate ones who started to sell my work immediately, and I soon acquired that fatal impression that the work was "easy." I still make a gratifying amount of sales, but I have changed my mind about the "easy" idea—I now think it is about the hardest game I have ever tackled, and every sale brings a sense of amazement that I have been able to land another story!
> I have learned to accept all my little set-backs with stoicism —preferring not to become known among the editors as a "kicker," but I can assure you I have had to over-look some pretty raw deals.
> But, taking it all-in-all, I find it a most interesting and remunerative occupation, and every release brings its own recompense. I am fortunate enough to have gained the notice of two kind editors, and owe a great deal of my success to their aid and encouragement.

Mrs. Bronson has retrieved her ground, but the disappointment that follows a run of sales is far greater than the discouragement of making no sales at all in the early days.

Empty Houses.

Did you ever seen a house vacant for so long that it looked as though it never had been lived in. The rooms are bare, the windows filth-encrusted, desolation is everywhere because there are no people in the house.

Some scripts are the same way—nobody home. There are characters but not people. Tenant your script houses with real live people.

Golden Rules.

If you know your story is good and the editor doesn't, don't try to educate him—just pity his ignorance.

Persistence.

Try, and if you do not sell, send so many in that the editor either buys or asks you to stay away. Get him used to your name.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturer's Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. The second half of the questions, seventy-six in number, is now ready. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 77.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is a "choke" or "reactance" coil? How is it made? Explain its action in detail, setting forth the points for and against it from the operator's standpoint. Can it be used on D. C.? Where would you locate your projection circuit rheostats? Explain points for and against locating them inside and outside the operating room.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 71.

There were quite a number of very good replies to question 71, but the fact remains that none covered all the points. The Roll of Honor stands: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. H. Brooks, Canton, Pennsylvania; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; John Solar, Watertown, New York; Harry W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Robert P. Bailey, West Lynn, Massachusetts; L. M. Spencer, Attleboro, Massachusetts; "Boulevard," Seattle, Wash.; P. Reg. Day, Cainsville, Ont., and Montreal, Canada.

The choice for publication lay between Messrs. Brooks and Spencer, though Brother Brooks' reply was finally selected on account of its comparative brevity. Several answers came too late to be considered for publication.

Reply to Question No. 71.

By W. H. BROOKS, Canton, Pa.

The Question:

Suppose 110 volt D. C. to cost 8 cents per K. W., and that you are using 40 amperes at the arc through resistance. How much difference would there be in economy per hour by using 70 volt current? How much difference would there be if a D. C. to D. C. economizer, having an efficiency of 70 per cent. were used instead of resistance? Your supply is 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C., your picture 16 feet, and your plaster screen coated with calcium. You can get an excellent rheostat large enough to deliver the necessary amperage for $20, an economizer with a secondary capacity of 60 amperes for $60, or a motor generator set, reducing the pressure to arc voltage and having a guaranteed efficiency of 67 per cent. for $225. What would you advise and why? (Current costs 9 cents per K. W.)

The Answer:

If you were using 40 amperes from a 110 volt supply through a rheostat there would be a total consumption of $110 \times 40 = 4400$ watts, which would cost you, at 8 cents per K. W., about 35.2 cents per hour. If, however, you could secure 70 volt current at 8 cents per K. W., then the consumption would be $40 \times 70 = 2800$ watts, or 2.8 K. W., per hour, which would cost $2.8 \times 8 = 22.4$ cents per hour, so that by using the lower voltage there would be a saving of $35.2 - 22.4 = 12.8$ cents per hour, which, in ten hours, would amount to $12.8 \times 10 = \$1.28$.

By using a D. C. to D. C. economizer with a rated ("rated" and actual efficiency may be very different—very different, indeed.—Ed) efficiency of 70 per cent., pulling 40 amperes at the arc, allowing 50 volts at the arc, 2000 watts would be required at the arc. This amount would constitute 70 per cent. of the amount taken from the line, therefore the wattage consumption registered by the meter would be $(2000 \div 70) \times 100 = 2857$ watts per hour, which, at 8 cents per K. W., would amount to 22.8 cents per hour, which shows a saving of $35.2 - 22.8 = 12.4$ cents per hour as against the rheostat. Taking 110 volts supply would cost .4 of a cent more than 70 volt supply through a rheostat.

In estimating the cost of operation and probable advantages of the three different methods outlined in the third paragraph of the question, I shall base all my figures on one year's use, with an allowance of five hours a day actual operation, six days a week, and fifty-two weeks to the year. With a picture 12 x 16 feet, approximately .3 of an ampere per square foot of screen would be necessary, which totals about 60 amperes. With the rheostat working on A. C. this would mean 60×110 volts = 6600 watts, or 6.6 K. W., or $6.6 \times 5 = 33$ K. W. hours per day, which, at 9 cents per K. W., would be $33 \times .09 = \$2.97$ per day, which, at six days a week and fifty-two weeks to the year, would foot up to $833.04 per year. As the rheostat is comparatively short-lived, it is necessary to figure the annual depreciation at 50 per cent. and to the above amount we must, therefore, add $10.00, making a total annual cost of $843.04.,

Assuming the efficiency of the low voltage transformer to be 90 per cent. and an arc voltage of 35, the arc wattage would be $35 \times 60 = 2100$, and this amount would be 90 per cent. of the amount taken from the line, therefore the total wattage consumption would be $2100 \div 90 = 2333$ watts, or 2.3 K. W., or $2.3 \times 5 — 11.5$ K. W., hours per day, which, at 9 cents per K. W., would be $1.03 per day, or $321.36 a year. From lack of actual knowledge the life of the low voltage transformer must be limited to five years, though it would probably last much longer, therefore, we must add 20 per cent. of the purchase price, or $12.00, to cover depreciation, making a total of $321.36 + 12 = $333.36, which constitutes a saving of $500.68 as against a rheostat working on 110 volts.

To estimate the cost of operating motor generator sets which will reduce current to arc voltage, we will again set the necessary arc wattage at 3000 and the efficiency of the set at 67 per cent., therefore, the line wattage consumption would be $3000 \div .67$ — approximately 4.5 K. W., or in five hours 22.5 K. W. hours, which, at 9 cents, would equal $2.02, which, multiplied by 6 days in a week, 52 weeks in a year, would equal $630.24. It is common practice among electrical machine operators to charge off 10 per cent. per year for such devices as this motor generator set to cover depreciation, therefore, we will add $22.50, making a total cost of $652.54, or a saving as against the rheostat of $190.50.

Basing my advice on the foregoing figures, which might be largely altered by slight changes in local conditions, I would advise the use of A. C. through a transformer because it is cheaper, and with careful handling just as good light can be had from A. C. as from D. C. However, many managers prefer the direct current and are willing to pay the added price to get it.

[I cannot quite agree with the brother that just as good light can be had from A. C. as from D. C. To my mind there is always a harshness to A. C. illumination; it has not that mellow tone found in D. C., and then, too, granting that just as good illumination can be had with A. C., it would take a great deal more than 60 amperes to do it. However, the foregoing is a very good reply to question 71.—Ed.]

How They Got Married.

Ray Chase, Boyne City, Michigan, writes at some length with regard to the film puncture damage, and winds up with the following:

> I believe I can tell how, where and when Mr. Condenser and Miss Objective got married. With your permission I will try next week.

The film damage matter has been closed, but we will be glad to have a copy of the marriage certificate of the above-named parties, together with all data relating thereto.

From Kansas City.

Kansas City, Missouri, is here with the following:

> I present these few remarks to bring this western city to your notice. I am one of the two operators employed in one of the "first class shows" in the city. Note: First class here means fancy front, with several hundred incandescent lights, mirrors, marble trimmings, etc., an expensive pipe organ, five-piece orchestra, 600 seats, two single reels and a two-reel feature, changed daily, all first run, with one extra first run reel on Saturdays and Sundays. We jam 'em through on a fifteen-minute schedule—orders of the manager. Am operating (??) two Powers Six A projectors, to which I have adjusted two 16-inch d. c. fan motors, with a ¼-inch belt 9 inches between pulley centers, using the Powers motor drive attachment on the mechanism. This arrangement works noiselessly up to 75 feet a minute; after that the pin and cross start knocking. The operating room is 5 feet 1 inch by 7 feet by 6 feet 5 inches high. (God save the mark!—Ed.) Have 25 inches between machines and 15 inches between back wall and back of lamp house. Have worked in this operating room for two and a half years, and have not sat down yet. (In the room I suppose you mean.—Ed.) The first year I worked from 11 to 11, with an hour for lunch, than the local got busy here in the city and we now work eight hours a day. I work the long shift (eight hours) and my partner the five-hour shift and three hours in another house. I am not competing for the prize (There is none.—Ed), but I would like to give my views on Question 68. Deducted from actual operating experience from 1906, during which time I have projected at almost all distances up to 160 feet, I believe that an 18-foot picture at 50 feet is best, these figures being approximate only. Am using 35 amperes d. c. at the arc, ¾ carbons, above and below. The light is bright and steady and the pictures are likewise—clear and flickerless. It, the picture, is 18 feet at 50 feet. The flicker has been entirely eliminatd in this theater, and by a very simple little process of my own. It is yours for the asking, if you are curious enough to want it. (Send it along, brother. We will look it over, and if it is good we will publish it.—Ed.) My reasons for selecting the 50-foot throw are as follows: (a) Because the detail of the photography would be more readily visible to the eye than it would be at a longer distance; (b) I would not need to use so much current to cover the field with a clear, bright light, and therefore would be relieved of a great amount of heat, besides saving considerable current and carbon bills each month, which, I believe, is more important to him than flat lenses and reflected light rays, details of lens curvature and combinations. Briefly, I prefer this distance because (a) easier for the operator to see the picture; (b) more light and best light at least cost; (c) minimum voltage and heat in the operating room. That is all. But I think it is sufficient as an introductory note from Kansas City, where 97 per cent. of the theaters employ members of local 170, I. A. T. S. E. As a parting shot, I would like to ask two questions, which I believe all "first run" operators would like to see answered. First: Why does the Lubin Company make up their two-reel features of such short pieces of film? Second: Why don't Lubin use cement that will at least hold their splices together for the first run and first rewinding?

In the first place, brother, I am glad to hear from Kansas City again. It is one of my "old home towns." I ran an engine in there on the Wabash for a long time, in the days when the flats were known as "Hell's Half Acre," and they deserved the name too. And now I am going to upset your apple cart by saying that with a properly matched lens system, and a given amperage you will project just as bright a picture at 100 feet as at 50, provided always that the atmosphere be reasonably clear, therefore you don't save anything by the shorter throw. On the other hand, a properly-matched lens system will unquestionably and undoubtedly operate to give you a greater curtain brilliancy for a given amperage, so, my brother, I will close that end of it by saying you are all right, except that you are all wrong; outside of that you are perfectly O. K. Your idea that the operator can see his picture easier at 50 feet than at 100 is correct, but this matter may be offset by using a pair of opera glasses to examine the focus, and on the whole the longer focus objective gives better definition than its shorter brother. Therefore, sorry, Old Man, but I cannot agree with you, but, notwithstanding this fact, I am glad to have your views. It is arguments that bring out knowledge. That certainly is some operating room you have. When I was in Kansas City, one and a half years ago, I found conditions very, very bad, meaning by this, that, although I visited all the leading down town houses, I did not find good projection in any of them; also most of the fronts were smeared all over with cheap posters, which operated to give one a very bad impression. Come again. Kansas City is a city which has always had a warm spot in my heart, and I hope in time to come that operating rooms and projection there will be raised to a higher standard. As to the Lubin splices and cement, why there are lots of kicks about that proposition, and it seems to me it is about time "Pop" Lubin spit on his hands, took a good grip on a four-foot hickory spike-maul handle and interviewed the head of his film splicing department. There is need of it, Brother Lubin—there certainly is.

Later: I wrote "Pop" and he replies, saying he has done that very thing.

Still Kicking.

Alfred Fowler, Alliance, Ohio, says:

It has been a long time since I wrote, and these few lines are to inform you that the I. A. brothers of Alliance are still alive and kicking. On page 365, January 16th issue, John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says he thinks the Powers loop setter causes damage to the film. Now, I believe he is mistaken, since I am using a loop setter and have no trouble whatever. I think if operators would keep their sprockets scrupulously clean they would have less trouble with jumping film. I have a tooth brush and clean my sprockets every three reels. (I do not think Brother Griffiths would be guilty of dirty sprockets.—Ed.) Here are a few film samples amputated from "Runaway June," Series No. 2, Reliance Company. All of their splices are like this, and when I examine the films before running them I hardly make a patch, but when they have been run several times they pull apart as they go through the machine. All Reliance and Majestic films are joined together like the samples. Why don't they use better cement? Those operators who desire to get a motor for their machine will find those put out by the Electric Specialty Company, Stamford, Conn., to be a fine article. I have two and they give no trouble at all; one of them has been used every day, except Sunday, for two years, have had no repairs except a set of bushings and are in fine shape. They are worth their weight in gold. In closing, I want to extend my best wishes to the brothers all over the country, as well as to the editor of the department. May he has a prosperous year, and may his troubles all be small ones.

Well, Neighbor Fowler, my youngest trouble is sixteen past, and the eldest one, if living, would be about twenty-five. I agree with you that the trouble is not caused by the loop setter, unless it is out of adjustment, but it is important—very important—that this loop setter roller be kept in exact alignment with the face of the sprocket. I am glad to know the Alliance boys are "alive and kicking," which, I presume, means doing well. Let the good work go on. As to the cement, why there are a lot of kicks on the cement used by the Lubin Company, the Reliance and the Majestic, and I am going to take that matter up and see if we cannot get something done about it.

Dallas, Texas, Visited.

Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, has visited Dallas several times recently and now tells us what he finds in that fair city.

At the Crystal the manager was very courteous and invited me to visit the operating room. The screen is in the front of the house. The music was exceptionally fine. In the operating room everything was neat and tidy. The picture was projected in the best possible manner by two Powers Six A machines, and the operator followed the film action with the proper speed (Good! —Ed.), showing that the "man at the wheel was onto his job," and it happened to be the relief man at that. At the Roseland I found two Powers Six A projectors in a neat operating room, though a little smaller than it should be. Projection was very good. At the Feature theater were two Simplex machines. Projection is fine. The operating room is large, roomy and has plenty of ventilation, the only possible objection being that the back half of the floor is a few inches higher than the front, there being a step in the center. At the Nickelodion I was surprised beyond measure. This manager can shake hands with himself for the good work his operator is doing. The operating room is fairly good, but alas, an Exhibition Model Edison that had seen better days, was the only staff that poor operator had to lean upon—an Edison Exhibition, I said, not two of them. Oh! when will some managers wake up to the need of up-to-date projection machinery in their theaters? At the Washington the manager even refused to let me into the theater after I had paid twenty cents for admission. Some managers are rather narrow minded. I then visited the Candy, Best, Dixie, Empress, Queen and Palace. All these houses had nice operating rooms, which I was cordially invited to inspect. The work on the screen in Dallas, as far as I have seen, is a credit to the boys over there, except that conditions might be bettered. For instance: a rubber insulating mat should be on the floor where it is covered with galvanized iron. At the Happy Hour the operating "hole," "booth," "coop," which ever you want to call it, is the smallest I ever saw. It is in the form of the letter L with an Exhibition Model Edison set over to one side, and incidentally the whole thing sets to one side of the house. A man weighing two hundred pounds would have to go into the coop backwards, as he could not turn round after he got in. The projection under the conditions was high class in every respect—under the conditions, I said, mind you. But the theater runs vaudeville and only one reel of film, which is, I suppose, the answer.

Now, I wonder why the Washington manager refused Brother Smith admission. Sounds very much like as if he did not want him to see the projection, which possibly he is not at all proud of. I don't know, but that is the best guess I can make. Friend Smith undoubtedly knows good work when he sees it, therefore his compliments to the boys in Dallas ought to be appreciated by them.

Griffiths Replies.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, writes:

Replying to Arkin's welcome criticism (I say "welcome" because I believe fair criticism to be the greatest help I could have in the study of my subject). With reference to error I made in size of spot, Mr. Arkin is correct; it should have been .97" instead of .92". But with reference to the latter part of Brother Arkins' remarks regarding size of spot as calculated from my tables, I would call attention to the fact that the results obtained for Griffiths' table are calculated from the prevailing type of slide carrier, 3" x 2.75", whereas Arkin's results are calculated for a slide 3 6-16" x 2½", which, of course, is the correct shape, but inasmuch as the tables were compiled for use with the present type of equipment calculations of comparison should be made with two slide carriers alike, and when this is done it will be found that the spot projected by Griffiths' tables is slightly the larger, owing to the shorter distance between condenser and film. Had I compiled the tables with the formula E. F. x 3½ as Friend Arkin suggested it should be, our results would have been almost identical, but I purposely made it E. F. x 4½ to bring the size of the spot on the aperture to workable dimensions, and further experiments since then indicate that it was a move in the right direction, although leaving much to be desired. In so far as Arkin having proven that geometrical optics hold good in projection, why my flag is up on the same pole that bears that of our esteemed editor, and when apparatus is constructed that will project a rectangular beam of light from condensers having a cross sectional area in the proportions of the aperture and all the rays contained therein directed toward the point of equivalent focus, then I will willingly haul it down. Also note that I am already convinced that the objective lens does its work under strictly geometrical rules, and have had that impression right along. On page 1073, November 21st issue, I distinctly stated the trouble was not due to the theory of geometrical optics, but to the apparatus in use. I also made an error by saying that a 6" diameter condenser would improve matters; on further consideration I find it would not. Trying to fit geometrical optics to practical projection is pretty much like trying to cover a square space with a round cover of the diameter of the width of the square. If the aperture was circular like the condensers, and the condensers free from aberration, then geometrical optics would hold good, (Them 'eres my senterments, too.—Ed.), but conditions being as they are, it is necessary to cover the aperture completely with white light, and also the angle of the condenser cone should be narrower than the angle of the lens in order to completely surround the rectangle through which the effective rays enter the objective, so as to fully illuminate the corners of the picture. This means loss, but there are worse ways of loosing it.

P. S. Taking the two tables, as they stand, if I may be permitted the liberty of comparison, the e. f. of the condensers in Arkin's tables are a little less than the e. f. in my own, and as the position of the lamphouse is approximately the same, the total difference between the two is that the arc is a trifle nearer the condenser with the Arkin table when the spot at the aperture is the same in both tables. I would therefore suggest that Friend Arkin's tables be considered for light amperage and Griffiths' for heavy amperage; also the 5½" back condenser ought not to prove an obstacle, as a 6½ menuscus could be substituted to advantage with a modern condenser mount and light amperage.

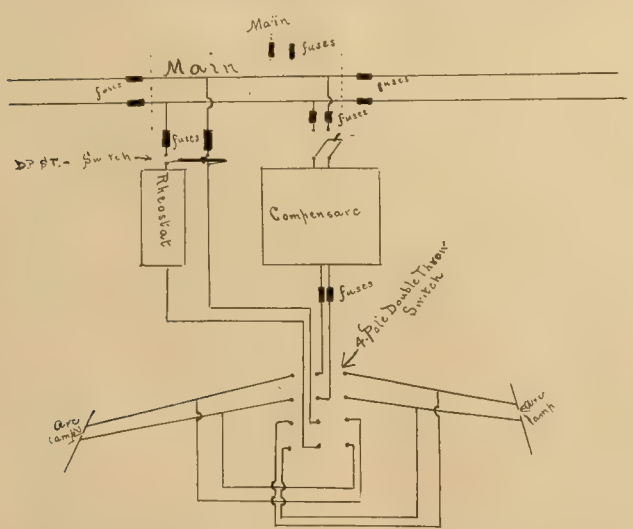
I think I will pass up the comment on this at this time. I would have to drop everything and look the whole thing over for half an hour or more to get it straightened around in my mind. You and Brother Arkin fight that matter out, won't you? I am sure the criticism of both of you on the work of the other will be entirely fair and friendly.

I Stand Corrected.

New York sends in the following, with the request that his name and name of the town be suppressed. He says:

I fully realize the good work you are doing in this important field, and that without the support of operators and managers you would be unable to bring about the maximum improvement, and, believe me, from conditions as viewed by the unprejudiced observer, plenty of improvement is needed. I do not know how the films get the abuse they do, or how to overcome this excessive wear and tear, but one thing is certain; at the bottom the damage is chargeable to inefficiency in those who handle them. This damage becomes apparent in films almost at once. If one rented a horse and carriage and returned it in bad condition one would have to pay the damage. The exchanges ought to be imperative in this matter. It is the "punches" in the picture that pulls the people, and people will stand for a great many things in the way of projection faults. Like the little boy watching a base ball game through the crack in the fence, they cannot see much but have a look anyway. You well know how many pictures are short titled, no leaders, or tail pieces, broken sprocket holes, scratched, mis-frames, imperfect patches and dirty. How many houses have machine patching or film cleaning machines? How many operators know how to make a perfect patch? How many operators know how to take good care of their machinery, to the end that it produce the least wear on the films and the steadiest picture on the screen? How many operators even know how to put a leader under the spring on the take-up reel? How many operators would take as good care of the film as though it belonged to him?

With reference to your correction of the drawing, why you are still wrong, because the inquirer wanted to know how to connect up so as to heat up the carbons on one machine with the rheostat while finishing the other reel on the compensarc.



Here is a drawing which I think you will find correct. The main is marked in dotted lines, and I put fuses on same inside of operating room with the idea that the brother may be slightly overloading the main with the two lamps burning, though, if he is only doing this for a change-over, and the overload is but slight, the mains will not heat much. If the main is heavy enough the fuses will be unnecessary. It is surprising how the projection department of the Moving Picture World has grown. It won't be long before the paper will have to give you more room, and shekels, too, I hope.

I stand corrected. When I looked at the drawing I did not stop to reread the brother's letter, as I should have done. I guess I got in bad all around with this thing. The fact of the matter is just now I am trying to do more than any one human man ought to do, and if I make some bulls occasionally I will ask you to overlook them. By and by you will know what the extra work consists of, and maybe you will wonder how I managed to do it all with just one set of hands and one poor lonesome bunch of sawdust in the top of my head. In the meantime don't be too severe if I commit an occasional seemingly unpardonable blunder.

With regard to the other matter, why I could write columns, and some of it would burn holes in asbestos, too. It is not altogether the operator, though he too must shoulder his share of the blame for the utterly disgraceful amount of damage that is done to film. As I see the matter it stacks up this way. The average theater manager and operator do not care one single, solitary red cent about the condition of the film when it leaves his hands, provided he has not done enough violence to attract the attention of the exchange and bring forth a bill for damages. Managers themselves are very largely to blame in a large percentage of cases. They hamper the operator in every direction by compelling him to use worn out equipment, by compelling him to work unreasonably long hours, under inexcusably bad conditions of ventilation and other things. They place the rewinding and patching in the hands of ushers and boys who know absolutely nothing whatever about the damage to films by "pulling down," or other carelessness in rewinding, or about making a proper splice in the film, and who care even, if possible, less than they know about these things. Is it any wonder that films are damaged? But when you pile on top of that the fact that hundreds of exchange managers to all human appearances don't care any more about their own films than the theater managers do; that they hire cheap, inefficient inspectors, send film out with inadequate inspection, or without any at all, and appear only to be interested in getting the greatest amount of money out of the film in the least possible time, it is a marvel that the damage is not even greater. You ask how many theaters have patching machines, meaning, I suppose, a patch press, and film cleaning machines. Great Heavens, man, how many film exchanges have them? Possibly one in ten. This whole matter of the care of film, or rather its lack of care, I believe, hinges on one proposition, and that is the fact that with the enormous number of releases and the consequent change-every-day policy of theaters, the useful life of a film is very short, bearing in mind that the exchange counts the useful life the time during which they can get a fairly high price for its rental.

I, myself, have seen films that had only been in use ten days which were damaged to an absolutely disgraceful extent. It was a shame and a crying outrage, yet nobody, from the operator to the exchange seemed to be particularly interested.

I have hammered at this subject for six years, but there comes a time when a man says: Well, Great Heavens, what's the use? If exchange managers haven't brains enough to take care of their own property, and if theater managers are not far-sighted enough to understand the proposition that if they don't take care of the film they need not expect the "other fellow" to, then I don't know as it is up to me to jump all over the operator. The operator is merely following the lead of the exchangeman and the manager, and, I believe, in many, many cases the operator would cause less damage to the film if (a) he was supplied with a comfortable, decent place to work in; (b) with proper equipment and repair parts, and with a responsible assistant or apprentice, rather than forced to accept the services of an absolutely irresponsible Jimmy—the usher at the rewinder. As to cleaning the films that is the duty of the exchange, not the theater. The theater manager presumably rents a film which is in perfect condition, according to its class (age). In no class can "perfect condition" be expected to include dirt, oil, broken sprocket holes, badly made patches, and kindred faults.

Out of Focus.

C. A. Rasor, manager Gem theater, Rushville, Indiana, writes:

We are in trouble. Picture is out of focus in the center. When a sub-title is on it is out of focus in the center and in focus on the outside. It can be noticed more on titles than on pictures. Have tried turning lens in tube, but it don't do any good. Can you offer any suggestions? Screen is a gold fibre and is in bad shape. We would like to coat it with some good emulsion to make it white so we could get a clearer picture. Can you tell us the name of such an emulsion? The department is very good indeed.

No, turning your lens would not affect a proposition of that kind. First carefully examine your objective lens and be very sure it is perfectly clean. Next examine your aperture plate of your machine, and if the tracks are worn, that is probably where your trouble lies. See General Instruction No. 1, page 217 of the Handbook, also General Machine Instruction No. 9, page 216. Also examine your tension springs, or shoes, and see that they bear squarely in the track of the aperture place; if either or both of them set to one side of the center of the track it is likely to produce the effect you speak of. You should have told me the kind of machine. As to the screen, I cannot recommend any emulsion which you could use as being superior to flat white paint, say fifteen pounds of good white lead, or better still, white zinc ground in oil, which you can get in any paint store. Mix the same with about one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine, putting in sufficient prussian or ultra-marine blue so that it has just barely a faint bluish tinge when in the pot. Mix the paint fairly thin, and, first having put down drop clothes to prevent getting the floor daubed, give your screen enough coats to make the surface a perfectly solid white, then project the light on the screen and outline it with flat black. The directions for all this will be found under the heading "The Screen," pages 336 to 343 of the Handbook, if you have one, and if you have none, then I would advise you to send $2.50 to the Moving Picture World and secure a copy. I cannot take up valuable space in the department repeating directions in detail which have often been given and which are given in permanent form in the Handbook.

In Two Years' Time.

H. B. Tull, manager Lyric theater, Monon, Indiana, says:

> Am one of the interested readers of your department. We have a Rochester 65 volt D. C. generator, and a kerosene engine, and generate our current at an expense of 2½ cents per k. w. We get a perfect picture with practically no trouble in the "power house." City current is available at 10 cents per k. w. We have paid for our plant in difference in cost of operation and cost of city current in two years' time. If any of your readers are interested in knowing more will be glad to supply information.

Inasmuch as the "2½ cent per k. w." statement was pretty strong, I immediately asked for further particulars. Here is the reply from Brother Tull:

> Yours of the 3d, relative to the "2½ cent k. w. item" to hand. Here is the proposition. We are using 20 k. w. per hour. Our department store consuming 2 k. w., our residence ½ k. w. per hour and our motion picture show 2½ k. w. per hour when the arc is running. The show lasts three hours each night. However, the entire theater is lighted at four o'clock with all the house lights on the entire evening. The generator is a 5½ k. w. Rochester with a 10 h. p. Falk kerosene engine. This power plant consumes one gallon of kerosene per hour at (wholesale) 6½ cents per gallon. The average running hours at this season of the year are six, thus making a total cost per day of about 40 cents for fuel,, to which must be added 10 cents for lubricating oil, or a total of 50 cents per night, or 2½ cents per k. w. We have had excellent success with the plant, which has been in operation for almost two years. We figure a saving of $1.50 each night, as against city current at 10 cents per k. w. The cost of the engine was $406 and generator $185, making the total cost of outfit $591. We have purchased about fifty dollars worth of repairs in the two years; however, most of them are unused and ready for emergency.

You seem to be a little twisted in this matter of cost, Friend Tull. According to your figures you are using $2 + ½ + 2½ = 5$ k. w., but you are not using the whole amount all the time, which would make accurate figuring somewhat difficult. Presumably the whole thing is in use a time equal to four hours, which would make a total of $5 \times 4 = 20$ kilowatt hours, therefore, if your total cost is only 50 cents per night the cost per k. w. would be $50 \div 20 = 2½$. I presume that is about the way you figure it, although you do not put it that way.

The one thing I want to impress upon proposed purchasers of outfits of this kind is that they only work at high efficiency when at full load. The plant that will deliver current at, say, 3 cents per k. w. at full load will probably not deliver it at less than 5 or 6 cents when working at half load. The matter of generator capacity is, therefore, an exceedingly important one to prospective purchasers of isolated plants. Brother Tull did not get things stated quite as clearly as he might have, but we thank him, nevertheless, for his kindness in submitting the data. Things of this kind are of very distinct value to theater mangaers who are confronted with the proposition of city current at from 10 to 12 cents per k. w.

Mustered Courage.

Rhode Island says:

> At last I have mustered sufficient courage to expose my ignorance in the attempt to answer Question 70. It is not my first attempt, even though it is the first answer you have received from me. I have tried to study them all out, and can truly say I have gained considerable knowledge in so doing. I am in possession of the last Handbook, and, although I have seen Hawkins' Electrical Guide spoken of in the department, I cannot find its price. Please tell us again.

I am glad to know the questions have been of value to you. In private correspondence I am informed of the fact that thousands of operators are studying these questions, although they do not send in replies. The Hawkins' Electrical Guide consists of six volumes at one dollar per volume; one dollar down and one a week. I cannot give addresses on matters of this kind, that being the legitimate function of the advertising department, but if you care to send me the money with a stamped envelope I will forward it to the proper parties.

Transformer Trouble.

C. W. Brown, E. Dedham, Massachusetts, writes:

> I have a number of times run across the same trouble experienced by Brother Jones, Decatur, Ala., February 6th issue. In my opinion it is due to one of two causes, i. e., either there is a short circuited turn or a number of turns in one of coils, or a ground between the primary winding and the case of the transformer. A ground, in order to cause heating of the apparatus and not blow the fuses would be somewhere within the primary coils, and not at a terminal. Under these conditions with one line grounded, as is the usual practice here, there would be a fine chance for a little extra current to leak out through the iron floor to the nearest grounded pipe or conduit, and this is, I think, what happened to Friend Jones, who has only fixed half his trouble in removing the ground in the conduit.

Very possible Neighbor Brown. I am not going to enter into an argument with you on that proposition.

Film Injury—Its Reason.

Carl Hotton, Hazlehurst, Pennsylvania, encloses three samples of film with the sprocket holes ripped out, and says:

> This is what happened to me. The trouble was simply a matter of adjustment of the lower idler, the same being set a little too close to the sprocket. Our machine is a Simplex and we have run it for six months. Have had no trouble whatever except this, and the injury only happened when a very bad patch showed up. I try to avoid bad patches, however, by inspecting the films before they are run, and if other operators did the same there would be far less trouble.

Quite true, Friend Hotton, quite true, but, after all, it is not the business of the operator to put in anywhere from one to three hours every day in inspecting films, unless he gets paid extra for it. On the other hand, the exchanges simply won't do the inspecting right, due to the fact that competition is so very keen that exchanges book their films right up to the minute, and, moreover, instead of employing really competent inspectors at from fifteen to twenty dollars a week they employ girls at from four to seven dollars a week, and what do you expect under these conditions? It is all a great big, involved, complicated subject, into which at least a dozen different things enter.

A Roast.

Connecticut says:

> Sorry, but this letter is a roast. Enclosed find samples of patches taken from reels, none of which were more than four weeks of age, and some four days old. Can you beat it? Were you, yourself, a producer and found your work, the product of the toil of a small army of skilled men and women, massacred thus in such a short period of time, how would you feel about it? Cannot you find some means whereby the operator and the producer can work hand in hand to correct those faults which are continually cropping up? I believe the producer of today has brains enough to realize the fact that the fate of his product lies largely in the hands of the operator. Some of our so-called exhibitors have the audacity and nerve to tell you openly they run a five reel feature in fifty minutes. They do not seem to realize that the very statement is an outrage on everybody connected with the business, to say nothing of the public in general. The present tendency is to clear the house as soon as Mr. Operator can jam through five, seven or nine reels of film, utterly regardless of the effect on the screen. I, myself, have positively refused to place my union slide before the eyes of the audience either before or after such an indecent exhibition. I did this for the simple reason that I had no other weapon with which to combat the practice. When I protested I was told by my manager that he had too much money tied up in his house to allow me to tell him how to run his business. So there you are. The operator cannot fight this thing alone, but if the producer would do his duty and help the operator it could be accomplished. I will close by trusting my effort will get by the "National Board" and by signing myself an apostle of the Universal Brotherhood of Uplift and Betterment in projection.

The brother wrote a good deal more, but I am too deeply flooded with matter to give it space. Yes, the producer ought to help, but apparently he won't. I am beginning to doubt if he ever will. I do not see any comment I can make on this that would be of much practical value. All the brother says is true, but I suppose in the future, as in the past, we will just have to keep plugging along in this department (it seems to be the only thing there is which cares a tinker's d—am about matters pertaining to projection), accomplishing as much as we may, and, while the net results of our efforts in the past years in the aggregate have been very large, still it might have been five times as great had we had the active support of producers.

Extensive Apprenticeship.

Detroit, Michigan, says:

> For years I have had a desire to become a moving picture operator. I am eighteen years old, and am willing to serve an apprenticeship of a couple of months, or even longer. Will you please tell me how I can get such employment?

Now this good brother is getting perfectly reckless in his desire to become a moving picture operator. Please take note he is willing to serve an apprenticeship of two whole months, or EVEN LONGER, if necessary—marvelous! Let me sugest to him that it is a sinful waste of time to put in two months learning a trade or profession. Why not take a job firing, serve an apprenticeship of sixty days and become a locomotive engineer, or serve a sixty days' apprenticeship and become a plumber, a carpenter or brick layer, though it may take a week or so longer to learn it right. Oh, piffle! What nonsense! If Detroit wants to become a moving picture operator let him talk sense and figure on serving an apprenticeship of anywhere from six months to two years, preferably the latter. As to getting employment, why, my dear sir, you will have to do the same as the rest of us—go out and find it. I have spoken!

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

Licensed.

THE BEAUTIFUL LADY (Biograph), March 8.—The unselfish devotion of a crippled Italian peasant lad to a beautiful American woman, makes this film appealing, although it is a mere dramatic fragment. The boy prevents his stepfather from robbing the lady, and is shot down, dying with his eyes fastened upon the object of his adoration. Picturesque exteriors, and good acting by William Ehfe, Ivan Christy, Mary Malatesta and Isabel Rae, are two of this one-reel drama's best features.

THE MISSION OF MR. FOO (Edison), March 8.—The struggle between the imperialists and the republicans of China, is the foundation of a dramatic film rich in oriental color, although the scenes are laid in Washington. Mr. Foo, capitally impersonated by Carleton King, wants to overthrow the new government at Pekin, his antagonist being the Chinese Ambassador to this country. A beautiful American girl also figures in the plot. A series of highly dramatic incidents, staged with intelligent regard for correct detail, and ending with the death of Foo, result in a novel and worth-while photoplay. T. Tamamoto in the part of the Ambassador and real Chinamen in the mob of Orientals, add materially to the verisimilitude of the scenes.

FATHER'S NEW MAID (Essanay), March 8.—Father does not approve of his daughter's "steady company," and shows him the door. The young man calls again, however, when Father is not at home. Father discovers it and determines to hire a muscular Swedish girl, who will throw the young fellow out when he comes around. Daughter's beau overhears the plot, secures an outfit of female garments, and the job. As it is obvious that he cannot throw himself out, he wins the contest with Father, and Daughter's hand. Wallace Barry, Billy Robinson and Betty Brown earn quite a number of hearty laughs during the progress of the comedy. (One reel.)

PATSY IN TOWN (Patsy Bolivar Series No. 11) (Lubin), March 8.—The eleventh instalment of the life and adventures of Patsy Bolivar, according to Clay M. Greene, exhibits that amusing hero in a high state of earthly felicity and renown—he becomes a policeman. He falls into good fortune before this however; falls out again, saves the life of a member of the force, is made "one of the finest" as a reward, and the reel ends with Patsy rescuing his sweetheart from a gang of thugs. Clarence J. Elmer continues to make Patsy as likable as ever, and as laughable.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 19, 1915 (Selig), March 8.—Girls boxing in church gymnasium open the reel. Realistic views of a wreck on the Boston and Maine railroad; the "Yanks" on their way to Savannah, Ga.; Spring styles, including khaki uniforms for ladies; the four-master Brynhilda, flying the first American flag on a ship of her class in forty years; and war pictures, are also among the interesting news items found on this film.

THE JARR FAMILY DISCOVERS HARLEM (The Jarr Family Series No. 1) (Vitagraph), March 8.—Life in Brooklyn may have its drawbacks, but so it has in Harlem—if Roy McCardell is to be believed. The fleeing of the Jarr family, with their goods and chattels, across the East River, does not end their troubles, by any means. Mr. McCardell makes it very evident that their domestic peace is again disturbed—to the intense annoyance of the Jarrs and the amusement of many followers of the film. Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley as the two Jarrs, extract the humor from every situation that is capable of raising a laugh.

ROONEY, THE BRIDE (Edison), March 9.—"Look out!" the driver called to the Irishman he had just run down. "Why?" demanded Pat, "are ye comin' back ag'in?" This story must occur to the Son of Erin in "Rooney, the Bride," when the automobile starts to chase him from one side of the road to the other, after knocking him down; a hilarious bit of business that goes with a roar. The entire comedy keeps up the fun at a steady pace. William Wadsworth, Arthur Housman, Harry Etynge, and Warren Cook, are in the cast.

WOOED BY A WILDMAN (Kalem), March 9.—Another of those prehistoric farces, which reveal such a welcome fund of unsuspected humor in the very early settlers of the Stone Age. The first "jag," also the first elopement, are incidents shown on the reel. Most of the doings of "Old Fearless" and his subjects would convulse a wooden Indian. When "Strengthless," the chief's heir, fills up on the juice of the grape and starts to beat up the almost exhausted champions, the fun becomes one loud scream, even if the educational worth of the incident is of doubtful value. Another thing: where did the bold youth obtain the piece of ribbon with which he adorns his raven locks? History makes no mention of John Wanamaker running a department store for the benefit of the Cave Dwellers, in the days of the dinosaurian and the five-toed horse.

WINNING WINSOME WINNIE (Lubin), March 9.—This one-reel comedy of rural life, when entered by the smooth stranger from the big city, is rich in comic possibilities; and Lottie Briscoe as the heroine, Arthur V. Johnson as Sam, Howard Mitchell as "Diamond Dan" and Barnard Segel as the Judge, see that all of the fun is brought to the front. The manner in which Same prevents "Diamond Dan" from carrying off his lady love will win him the laughter and approval of every audience.

THE STAGE-COACH DRIVER AND THE GIRL (Selig), March 9.—The writer of this comment sat through this picture three times in one day, and responded as readily to its thrill and dash at its last representation as at the first. The story isn't at all new; just the oft-told tale of the western hero and the eastern heroine, and an attack on a stage-coach; but this attack is carried out with so much vigor and zest by all concerned, and Tom Mix puts so much real manhood and unconscious grace into the stage-driver, that the interest in the film is irresistible. Louella Maxam, Goldie Colwell, and E. J. Brady give Mr. Mix splendid support.

A PIPE DREAM (Edison), March 10.—A Mark E. Swan one-reel comedy, built from well-worn but still entertaining material. A bachelor dines with a married friend, admires the picture of domestic bliss, returns home and dreams that he also takes unto himself a wife. The result is so productive of trouble, and an ever increasing family, that the "batch" awakes in terror, more determined than ever to retain his freedom. Herbert Prior and Jessie Stevens lead in the fun-making.

THE FABLE OF "THE DIVINE SPARK THAT HAD A SHORT CIRCUIT" (Essanay), March 10. "Never kid an amateur; it may start something." George Ade's veracious but keenly satirical history of a stage-struck maiden's awakening when she attempts to astonish the world with her histrionic ability, forms the basic motive of the Indiana humorist's latest filmable. It also illustrates the truth of the above quotation, which closes the film. The actual experience of a company of "fly-by-nights," doing the water-tanks, is pictured in all its disillusionizing reality. As usual, the sub-titles are half the fun. Ruth Stonehouse is the lady of the spark. Her personality and acting are a judicious blend of the right material.

THE EAGLE AND THE SPARROW (Selig), March 10.—A crook drama, in which "The Eagle" of the plot has a distinct sense of humor. When he discovers "The Sparrow," a poor wretch attempting his first crime by robbing the swell thief's house, this latest Raffles does not turn the man over to the police. "There's too much competition in my business, already!" is his excuse. The drama has little of complication, but a great deal of grip, and receives the best of treatment at the hands of the two actors who impersonate the name parts.

A STUDY IN TRAMPS (Vitagraph), March 10.—Father and Mother do not approve of their daughter's young man, and give him a gentle hint to that effect, by throwing him out of the house. Daughter's beau learns that Mother is strong on the uplift, when applied to tramps. Daughter and Daughter's beau make up as hoboes, impose on Mother and Father, and bring their love affair to a successful issue. Amusement of the elementary sort is sprinkled freely through this part-reel. Billy Quick and Constance Talmadge are the lovers.

A VERY RARE COMPANIONSHIP (Vitagraph) (Educational), March 10.—On the reel with "A Study in Tramps." This picture must be seen, to be believed. A hound and a rabbit are shown as boon companions. They romp, feed and sleep together. To see bunny stand up on his hind feet and box the dog, after the fashion of a trained kangaroo, is to suspect that this "Br'er Rabbit" is an Australian by birth.

HIS OWN HERO (Biograph), March 11.—A "Weary Willie" falls asleep in front of a moving picture theater, and dreams that he is inside, gazing at a film upon which he enacts the hero and rescues a fair maid from a band of brigands. The club of a policeman brings his dream, and the picture, to a finish. An entertaining split-reel.

MUD AND MATRIMONY (Biograph), March 11.—This comedy is on the same reel as "His Own Hero." A sea-going automobile and a mud puddle of great depth and expanse are the most important features of the film, next to a pair of prospective brides and their prospective husbands. On the way to the altar, the auto becomes stalled in the puddle. The men attempt to wade ashore with the brides, stumble, and —a more bedraggled wedding party never ventured upon the matrimonial sea. Fun of the boisterous sort without stint.

MUSTANG PETE'S PRESSING ENGAGEMENT (Essanay), March 11.—Unquestionably one of the best of the farces in which Harry Todd, Victor Potel and Margaret Joslin, are such important factors. The comic complications are singularly enforced and uncommonly laughable.

DESPERATE DUD (Kalem), March 12.—The Kalem Komedians have full play for their "knock-down-and-drag-out" komedy in this one-reel komic, and share honors with a bathtub and a pot of paint. Acrobatic pantomime of the most ludicrous sort abounds in this film.

THE WINTHROP DIAMONDS (Lubin), March 12.—A female crook and her male accomplice secure entry to the Winthrop home, and rob the mistress of her jewels. Suspicion is cast upon an innocent girl—the companion of Miss Winthrop. The story ends with the downfall of the crooks, and the engagement of the innocent girl to the son of the house. The telling this familiar tale, on the screen, makes the reel of decided value. Edgar Jones, James Daly, Louise Huff, and Clara Lambert, are all excellent.

AND THEN IT HAPPENED (Selig), March 12.—William E. Wing has hit upon a happy device for exciting laughter, in this one-reel comedy. It has to do with a restaurant deal, engineered by a small-town Wallingford. The restaurant is sold to a pair of investors and then bought back again, after the "Get-Rich-Quick" gentleman's approved method. Broad fun, deftly staged.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 20, 1914 (Selig), March 11.—Views on Sir Thomas Lipton's steam yacht Erin, which he has presented to the English Red Cross, leads in interest the several bits of world news shown in the H. & S. review. U. S. Army signalmen setting up newest field wireless; Sec. Daniels turning up first spade of earth for new memorial at National Cemetery, Arlington, Va.; and Grace Darling arriving at Colon, are also shown.

THE BLACK WALLET (Vitagraph), March 11.—The story of a feud in the West, "The Black Wallet" is a modern "Romeo and Juliet," the son and daughter of the contending families falling in love with each other. A dramatic, closely-knit and specious photoplay that wins one's liking and respect—until the big situation is reached. The spectator is then asked to believe that eight husky cow punchers would lower a young girl over a steep precipice to rescue her lover, and not force her to let one of their number take her place. Dramatic license should not shatter a cherished tradition of the land beyond the Rockies, even if chivalry has disappeared from the cattle country, along with the bunch grass and the unfenced plains. Estella Owen played the girl who put all her male companions to shame.

CUPID'S COLUMN (Vitagraph), March 12.—Frank Dazy's one-reel comedy is refreshing. A jealous husband becomes the editor of a "Cupid's Column" in a daily paper. His wife, to cure his jealousy, writes for advice about a love affair with another man. Friend Husband thinks his wife does not know of his position on the paper. As Sidney Drew plays the jealous gentleman and staged the film, and Jane Morrow does the wife, complete success is the only possible result.

THE BANDIT AND THE BABY (Biograph), March 13.—The bandit of this one-reel photoplay takes to the road when the woman he loves marries the other man. Several years later the bad man finds an infant, the child of emigrants that have been murdered by Indians. Knowing that the death of her own child has shattered his old sweetheart's reason, he puts the little orphan into her arms. The distracted mother regains her health of mind, and does not suspect the substitution. The producer has given the film picturesque scenes, swift movement, and an excellent cast. Chas. Perley as the bandit, and Augusta Andrson as the sheriff's wife, are earnest, skillful and visually satisfying.

WHERE ENMITY DIES (Biograph), March 13.—A dramatic episode, the scenes laid in the West. Two men quarrel, an explosion injures one of them, the other man offers to take the badly hurt ranch hand to a hospital, mistaking him for a friend. The enemies are lost on the plains, and the stronger of the two men does his best to rescue his companion. Played with earnestness by the entire cast, the reel rates well up in this class of film.

THE FAMILY BIBLE (Edison), March 13.—A one-reel drama, in which the story outweighs the incidents. Events are not properly developed, and very little skill is shown in concentrating the interest. Even a murder trial is not made impressive. The family Bible contains the evidence which clears the hero. Herbert Prior, Bessie Learn, Thomas Tomlinson and Mabel Dwight are in the cast.

BRONCHO BILLY'S TEACHINGS (Essanay), March 13.—"Thou Shalt Not Kill," is the text of Broncho Billy's teachings. He endeavors to instill this command in the heart of an Indian maiden, who befriends him after he has been treacherously wounded. Later, he meets his enemy, and has considerable difficulty in conquering his own desire for revenge. The film presents Billy in a new light, and, unquestionably, a most favorable one to his large following. Carl Stockdale, Margaret Clayton and Evelyn Silbie furnish the support for Mr. Anderson.

THE NIGHT OPERATOR AT BUXTON (Kalem), Eighteenth of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series, March 13.—The desperate illness of an express messenger's child offers Helen a chance to take the man's run and get into a peck of trouble. A gang of thieves attempt to rob the express car, and several moments of well-sustained interest keep a spectator on the edge of his seat. The entire cast follows the example set by the lady operator, and the film moves on a fast-time schedule. Helen Holmes still heads the cast.

MAZIE PUTS ONE OVER (Lubin), March 13.—Ethel Clayton, Joseph Kaufman, George Trimple and Marie Sterling give a "touch-and-go" performance of this lively one-reel comedy. A sporty old gentleman with a weakness for pretty chorus ladies is taught a lesson by his daughter-in-law, one of the ladies in question. Mazie's new mamma is also given a little instruction on how to welcome a son's wife—even if she has been an actress.

COME 'ROUND AND TAKE THAT ELEPHANT AWAY (Selig), March 13.—The title is in admirable key to the plot of this one-reel Jungle-Zoo comedy. A pair of miners buy a stranded elephant to help them work their claim, and find that they have an elephant on their hands—when the pachyderm steals a basket of dynamite and stirs up excitement wholesale. As the knowing beast also turns up a deposit of gold for his new owners, they are inclined to regard his rampage in the light of a blessing, after all. The starring of the four-footed "heavy comedian" gives novelty to an amusing film.

Licensed Specials.

THE WHITE GODDESS (Kalem), March 8.—The scenes of this three-part drama shift from America to India and have to do with an American girl, who was stolen by the priests of a temple, while visiting India with her parents. The girl was then too young to realize what had happened. The adventures she is made to pass through by her creator are decidedly more romantic than real, and will not impress the sophisticated observer very deeply. The manner in which her father and mother give the priests the opportunity to steal the girl is crudely planned; and the ease with which the hero effects her rescue, at the climax, is startling without being impressive. Portions of the film are well staged, but Director Kenean Buel is occasionally very much at fault. Alice Joyce, Arthur Albertson, Helen Lindroth, Guy Coombs and Jere Austin complete the cast of principals.

THE LADY OF THE CYCLAMEN (Selig), March 8.—A pathetic story of artist life in Paris and America is told with feeling and refinement, but with little appreciation of dramatic values, in this two-reel photoplay. There is no clash of human wills in the unfolding of the plot, the death of the heroine supplying the main motive. The author has evidently not made a close study of dramatic construction and learned to get the proper focus on his characters. The two leading persons of the drama in question, are kept too much in the background. Aside from a few ungrammatical sentences and the abuse of the overworked comma in the inserts, the handling of the material given them reflects great credit upon the Selig forces. The atmosphere of the different scenes is faithfully preserved; the acting is also praiseworthy. Stella Razeto and Jack McDonald are in the cast.

AURORA FLOYD (Biograph), March 9.—An excellent dramatization of the well-known English novel is shown on this two-reel film. The unhappy marriage of Aurora to her father's horse-trainer, their separation, the report of his death, the girl's marriage to John Mellish, Conyer's return and his murder by the half-witted stable-boy are all told swiftly, clearly and with compelling force. The work of the director calls for sincere commendation. He has selected his cast and his settings with rare judgment, and presents a number of scenes on an English country-seat, that are full of restful beauty and correct detail. Louise Vale's personality responds readily to the title role, Jack Drumier as Mr. Floyd, Franklyn Ritchie as the horse-trainer, and Alan Hale as John Mellish, also deserve special mention.

SNATCHED FROM A BURNING DEATH (Vitagraph), March 9.—This subject has been reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1618 in the issue of March 13.

FOLLOWING A CLUE, Episode No. 7 of "The Girl Detective" Series (Kalem), March 10.—Water rats, policemen, detectives, wild adventures afloat and ashore, and the brawn, bravery, brains and beauty of the girl detective, are all component parts of "Following a Clue," which, in this case, almost results in the death of the intrepid lady "gumshoe," and leads to the capture of the gang of river thieves. The motherly old lady who wanted her drama like her tea: "Good an' hot!" would revel in this two-reel Kalem. Ruth Roland, in conformity to the accepted idea of a detective's invariable custom, dons a disguise—a well fitting suit of male garments. She shows to great advantage during the entire action of the photoplay.

THE CHAMPION (Essanay), March 11.—Charlie Chaplin in the prize ring—his admirers will chuckle at the bare thought, and roar when they see the picture. The scenes in the training quarters are a steady laugh, but when Charlie faces his opponent in the roped arena, the fun is more than doubled. There have, doubtless, been burlesque boxing matches ever since the birth of the drama, but this one knocks them all out. It is a three round "go" that grows in excitement and hilarity at every blow struck. While it must be admitted that Charlies wins the championship on a foul (with the help of his bull dog), everyone will be delighted with the result. A two-reel side-splitter.

IN THE DRAGON'S CLAWS (Lubin), March 11.—The Boxer rebellion, a lovely American girl, a Chinese prince, a daring attempt at abduction, and a magnificent yacht flying the Imperial Dragon, should, it would seem, offer a firm foundation for a moving tale by land and sea. The climax brings a feeling of disappointment, however. Matters are made too easy for the hero, and the action lacks that inevitableness which is the life and soul of a drama. L. C. Shumway, Marvin Mayo and Velma Whitman, have the leading roles.

ON THE STROKE OF TWELVE (Edison), March 12.—"On Trial" was inspired by the moving picture play; "On the Stroke of Twelve" shows a trial for murder and gives the history of the crime, in much the same way as the spoken drama. It is frank melodrama, but melodrama of the better kind, human and compelling, seizing the attention at the start and retaining it to the end. Produced with liberality and intelligence. Gertrude McCoy and Bigelow Cooper have the leading roles. The entire cast, which also includes Richard Tucker and John Sturgeon, does excellent work. (Three reels.)

MR. BUTTLES (Essanay), March 12.—Mr. Buttles is an English butler, with an eye to the main chance. His titled master is broke. The butler gets the nobleman to fill his house with invited guests, agreeing to give "Me Lud" half the tips which he (the butler) receives. The gentleman agrees, runs over to Paris, leaving his double, a London newspaper man, to play host. An American heiress is the heroine. The newspaper chap wins her, in spite of not being a lord. A large number of minor characters halt the action and interfere with the unfolding of the story. The staging is adequate. Richard C. Travers doubles the lord and newspaper man with skill. (Three reels.)

A SIREN OF CORSICA (Lubin), March 10.—Clay M. Greene's three-reel drama, with scenes laid in this country, Paris and Monte Carlo is an ambitious offering on the part of the author, and also of the producer, Joseph Smiley. A married American abroad gets entangled with a foreign lady, who divides her time between roulette and playing the siren. The American pays rather dearly for his folly, convicted of murder being one of the consequences. The shifting scenes are reproduced with good effect and reasonable accuracy, except those showing the Casino at Monte Carlo. Habitues of Baron Blanc's Palace of Chance will never recognize the gambling room or the manner in which roulette is played. Of the acting only pleasant things need be written. Lilie Leslie, Florence Hackett, Jack Standing and the entire cast are efficient in every way.

PATHE WEEKLY NO. 18, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), March 3.—Interesting items of this number are the opening of the Panama Exposition, showing a portion of the grounds including the Fountain of Energy; American nurses sail, preparing to sail for France via the La Touraine, which before the end of the voyage went afire; the Pathe cartoon "Patriotism" (very good); the "Black Army" in Algeria training to fight for France, and various other attractive scenes.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY (Kriterion-Punchinello), March 8-13.—A comedy with Kathryn Sheldon and Tom Ward in the leads. These talented players have been seen to better advantage in other productions when better opportunity has been afforded them. This is a case of the juice of a berry pie smeared on a shirt front being taken for blood. The idea is rather far-fetched.

COUSIN FLUFFY (Kriterion-Thistle), March 8-13.—Frank Moore, Rena Rogers and Allan Fraulick figure in this acceptable one-reel comedy. The wives of the men away, they proceed to have a high time. They meet a pretty actress whom they give a dinner for. But in the midst of the proceedings the wives come home and the situation is saved only by the fact that Rena, the actress, is a long lost cousin of one of them.

HOTEL DE HOBO (Kriterion-C. K.), March 8-13.—This is a slapstick comedy which could not be very highly recommended. It contains a shadow picture of a woman in a room whose window looks out opposite the window of the Hobo, taking off various articles of clothing, some of which might as well have been omitted for the sake of the audience. There are other points of the picture that are really very funny.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 157 (Universal), March 10.—Pictures of John Ashley, the Florida train robber, school children celebrating in Australia, a South American gala day, and interesting war scenes are included in this number.

EASY MONEY (L-KO), March 10.—A low comedy number with Peggy Pearce and Dick Smith in the leads. The rube arrives in the city, is picked up by the adventuress and lured to a hotel. He is fleeced in a poker game and considerable excitement follows. This type of plot is very familiar and is handled here in average fashion.

HIS MYSTERIOUS NEIGHBOR (American), March 12.—Ed. Coxen, George Field and Winnifred Greenwood are the players in this excellent little comedy. The story is of a young lawyer who is overworked, and who has found it necessary to have an assistant. It happens that the assistant and his sister move next door to his home while they are still strangers to him. He proceeds to fall in love with the girl, imagines her brother is her husband, and has a pleasant awakening when the new assistant and his sister present themselves at the office.

CAUGHT BY THE HANDLE (Komic), March 14.—Director Edward Dillon has made a decided success of this eccentric comedy bit. Fay Tincher, Max Davidson, Eleanor Washington and Chet Withey make laughing easy in their eccentric manner of presenting the characters entrusted to them. What happened because a smuggler hid some uncut diamonds in the handle of Mrs. Riche's umbrella while in the keeping of Tootner, her maid (Fay Tinchey) affords some unusually comical scenes.

THE REWARD (Reliance), March 15.—The plot of this concerns a young girl whose tendency toward romance induces her to leave home and search for a man who loves her for herself alone. She falls into the hands of an unscrupulous reporter, but is saved by her father and sweetheart. Well-pictured but not very strong in plot.

THE DANCING BEETLE (World Film), March 15.—Richard Carle appears in this, the first one-reel release in the World Comedy Star series. It is an amusing offering with plenty of farcical action in which the principal player is assisted by an able company.

IN THE MANSION OF LONELINESS (Beauty), March 16.—One of the prettiest domestic stories shown for a long time. Virginia Kirtley plays the part of a childless young wife and Irving Cummings the husband. She entertains the neighbors' children while he is gone, and he brings back the daughter of his old chum, who died. This has a good touch of pathos in it and gets hold of the observer's better feelings.

THE EMERALD BROOCH (Majestic), March 16.—This is a jewel robbery story, with Eugene Palette and Billie West appearing as the crooks. She manages to get the brooch from the old jeweler and a neat piece of work is accomplished when the detective employs a pickpocket to get it from her. There is not much of a novel nature in this but it succeeds in holding the interest.

COMPETITION (American), March 17.—This story, featuring Vivian Rich and David Lythgoe, has a rather absurd plot but is bright and entertaining in the picturing. The city chap masquerades as a farmer, in order to fool the girl's father, who wants her to marry a man of the soil. He makes good and wins the girl. The dairy scenes are good.

THE BALANCE (Reliance), March 17.—The story of a poor married man who joins a crook in robbing a house, both being shot and killed. A contrast is made between the former's death and that of a millionaire, but the moral does not seem very strong. The picture as a whole is not in any way exceptional.

JOE HAWKIN'S WARD (Princess), March 19.—A young mining man, whose partner is killed, falls heir to a girl baby. He adopts her and in later years learns to love her. This plot has been worked out many times, but is handled pleasingly here.

COURTING TROUBLE (United-Empress), March 19.—Considerable fun is gotten out of the fact that the firm of Brown & Greene (consisting of two married men) are of one mind on the question of the charms of the new stenographer. The dreadful climax occurs when their wives catch them at lunch with the pretty maid.

AN ARRANGEMENT WITH FATE (Laemmle), March 21.—A pleasing number featuring George Larkin, Helen Leslie and Gretchen Lederer. The artist falls in love with a gypsy girl, but she turns out to be a society girl playing a part. The surprise is nicely brought out and the story has good appeal.

TOO MANY BACHELORS (L-KO), March 21.—This is a low comedy number featuring Peggy Pearce as a country girl beset with many admirers. There is an elopement, a chase and a bad spill over a cliff. The number has amusing spots and is on the whole one of average merit.

THE STOLEN JEWELS (Thanhouser), March 21.—The is the story of jewel thefts committed by the manager of a large business. The girl's sweetheart is blamed and she turns detective, succeeding in bringing the real criminal to justice. The photography is dark in places and the plot only about of average merit.

ONE NIGHT (Imp), March 22.—This story is a familiar one, having been used by another company not long since. The burglar, the baby and the repentant mother all meet at the clubman's apartments, which the burglar intended robbing. The plot is pleasing and contains considerable heart interest. King Baggot and Arline Pretty play the leads.

THE WRONG ADDRESS (Joker), March 22.—A knockabout low comedy number, introducing a new eccentric comedian, Don Barclay. The principal action is brought about by a change of addresses in two advertisements by a mischievous printer. Some of the scenes are quite laughable. There is a great mixup at the end when the print shop is raided.

IT HAPPENED ON A FRIDAY (Nestor), March 23.—A pleasing little comedy number, featuring Jack Dillon and Billie Rhodes. The couple exchange suit cases on a street car, which leads to some amusing complications. This has a youthful flavor and is attractively pictured.

OLIVE'S PET (Sterling), March 25.—A juvenile number, featuring Olive, Little Billy and other children. The boy swipes some dolls for his sweetheart and later there is an adventure in which a dog takes part. This has no particular plot, but is well photographed and quite pleasing.

THEY WERE ON THEIR HONEYMOON (Nestor), March 26.—Lee and Victoria are on their honeymoon. Lee is seized by the college students and hazed while Eddie runs away with the bride. This is full of student horseplay and is enjoyable throughout. The plot is a mere trifle but the action pleasing.

THE SKINFLINT (Princess), March 26.—Another version of the "Old Scrouge" plot. In this a selfish old man has a change of heart and tries making life happier for his children and grandchildren, This is not very new, but has a pleasing human touch in it.

JEALOUSY (Thanhouser), March 26.—A "triangle" story in which the young husband dreams of a clash between himself and a former rival for his wife's hand. There is nothing very exceptional in this; it merely depicts the evils of jealousy and the observer is glad to find it all a dream.

A DOUBLE DECEPTION (United-Empress), March 26.—This is rather a cleverly developed comedy, with Marion Swayne and Joseph Levering playing leads. Each plays a double role in deceiving Marion's papa, but the majority of the credit of the success of this portion of the work is due to efficient camera management, no great strain being laid upon the players, who otherwise do exceptionally well.

DIXIE'S DAY OFF (Joker), March 27.—Dixie is an escaped orang-outang and has a number of diverting experiences in this number. He gets into a great deal of mischief and his antics bring many smiles from the observer. A good subject of its kind.

THE ACE OF CLUBS (Powers), March 27.—A story depicting the evils of drink, with Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Scott Beal in the cast. The father tells his wild son of his early days. Some of these scenes are too brutal to constitute the best entertainment, though the moral is well indicated. The photography is good and the story fairly strong.

JOURNEY'S END (Royal), March 27.—A film story by George S. Sargent, in which two quarreling boys grow up to be enemies, though both are ministers. Their children are in love and marry in spite of the parents' objections. The photography is only fair in this and the story contains too many old situations to be very strong.

SERINGAPATAM (Pathe Exc.), March.—Showing many interesting views within this ancient city of East India, including temples, street scenes, religious customs, etc. This subject appears on the same reel with "The Police Dog Episode 3."

THE POLICE DOG EPISODE 3 (Pathe Exc.), March.—No. 3 of this series is guaranteed to keep an audience in good humor during its run. The Police Dog and his associates are quite as wonderful as ever. This time the "goods" he delivers at the police station consists of a policeman, a pig and an unruly negro.

THE TREASURE (Pathe Exc.), March.—In this production, which is, strictly speaking a comedy-drama, Thomas Wise is what one might call the "whole show," sharing his popularity with a seven or eight months' old baby. The child, left on the doorstep of the old man, and later called for by the despairing mother, stirs up considerable excitement. The picture is in many ways a very acceptable offering.

Independent Specials.

THE FIGHT (World Film), March 8.—A five-part adaptation of Bayard Vieller's melodrama of the same name, produced by George W. Lederer. Margaret Wycherley and John E. Kellerd are the chief players in a strong picture, reviewed in The Moving Picture World of March 20.

THE BROKEN GLASS (Kriterion-Santa Barbara), March 8-13.—A two-part melodrama produced by Robert Daly, with Fritzi Brunette, Edward Alexander and other capable players in the cast. The story is not always clearly told, nor is it exactly original, and it is necessary to concentrate very closely in order not to miss a point. In many respects the production is an enjoyable one. Its types are well-defined, its settings are artistic, and it is sensational enough to appeal to almost any audience.

THE SORORITY SISTER (Kriterion), March 8-13.—An excellent two-part comedy with a girls' boarding school atmosphere. In fact most of the incidents of the story take place in or about the school. Some good types will be found in the picture, and plenty of harmless fun. Rena Rogers and Allan Fraulick have the comedy leads.

EX-CONVICT 4287 (Keystone), March 13.—Arthur Mackley has made this two-reel production, and it may be said that considerable credit is due him for the artistic and logical development of a story which in some respects lacks originality. As in many another instance the director has sought new avenues in the working out of the theme, and the result is very favorable. It will doubtless be acceded that the introduction of the fairy in the fireplace in one of the closing scenes is a mistake, but this may be regarded as almost the only serious fault that could be found with the production. Catherine Henry, Howard Gay, Ralph Lewis and others whose names are unknown to us, but whose work is excellent, appear in the cast.

HER BURIED PAST (Majestic), March 14.—Florence Crawford appears in this two-reel number as a girl reporter. She succeeds in rounding up the woman who murdered a gambler, but after listening to her story decides never to put it in print. The woman's story is the principal feature of the plot; it gives her experiences from the time she left home to go to the city with the gambler. The killing was in self-defense. Irene Hunt does some good work as the woman in the case. This makes a fairly strong offering.

THE ISLAND OF MYSTERY (Thanhouser), March 15.—Episode No. 8 of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" series. This shows Baird and Hunt on a trip to the Zudora mines at South Africa. Zudora herself is captured by the conspirators and conveyed to an island in a launch. She brings about her release by the familiar device of sending a letter adrift in a bottle. The number is an ordinary one, and has no particularly strong features. There is one thrill where the work train falls over the high embankment, resulting in a serious injury to Radcliffe.

TRAPPED ON A LINER (Reliance), March 17.—No. 10 of the "Runaway June" series. This occurs on board the ship bound for Bermuda, with a few of the latter scenes on the island itself. It brings some new adventures to June and the others. Ned manages to board the vessel before it sails and has his runaway wife in his arms a few moments. But Blye intervenes and has Ned locked up in a state room on the grounds of insanity. Later Ned escapes, dives off the steamer and is picked up in a launch. This number contains considerable interesting action.

THE RIDER OF SILHOUETTE (Rex), March 21.—A two-reel number of fair strength in which Ben Wilson appears as a good-looking bandit in the Northwest. So much aimless shooting between himself and the sheriff spoiled the suspense of the opening situations, giving the scenes almost a comedy effect. He wounds the sheriff, but afterward saves his wife and child. The sheriff then allows him to escape. There is not much intensity in this film story. The photography and settings are quite pleasing.

THE BLACK BOX (Universal Special), March 21.—"The Hidden Hands." This second episode in the new serial continues the same characters as the first and the thread of the former number is continued in an interesting way. Sanford Quest is called upon to recover the skeleton of the anthropoid ape, which the professor had presented to a museum. Other features are the escape of the criminal, Ian MacDougal, which was well handled; also the theft of a valuable necklace under mysterious circumstances, and the conversion of the professor's servant by the Salvation Army. There are several threads of mystery still unraveled when the number closes. The photography is unusually good throughout.

MARY'S DUKE (Victor), March 22.—This three-reel number is an excellent comedy subject. It reflects credit upon Lane Stearne, who wrote the scenario, and Lucius Henderson the director. Mrs. Chas. Craig in the part of the soap king's widow proves an intelligent and interesting screen performer, with a good grasp of humor. The cast also includes Matt Moore, Etienne Girardot and Mary Fuller. The latter has the best role we have seen her in for some time. The tone of the whole production is unusually good and the story is one that will please the average audience very much. A good feature number.

THE DUEL IN THE DARK (Thanhouser), March 23.—A two-reel story, written by Philip Lonergan, in which the wife of a prosecuting attorney falls a victim to a hypnotist. Her husband is at the time engaged in routing out the fakers in this and kindred lines. The hypnotist compels her to install a dictograph in her husband's room and betray him in other ways. The duel in the dark is where she and her daughter fight to free the mother's mind from the hypnotist's power. This plot is somewhat similar to previous offerings of the kind and makes an offering of about average strength throughout.

IN THE SWITCH TOWER (Broncho), March 24.—A two-reel railroad story, with Walter Edwards in the leading role. Drink brings him down from an engineer of good standing to a worthless hobo. He is cast into prison for a saloon killing. Later his son becomes division superintendent of the road. He has been advised that his father was dead, at the latter's request, but on his release from prison the father turns up and saves the son's special train from being wrecked. The fight with the discharged employe in the switch tower was the main incident. This is handled with good suspense. The situations in this are rather obvious and the treatment conventional, but it has numerous interesting points. It is a good production of this type.

TO REDEEM AN OATH (Laemmle), March 24.—A two-reel number of fair strength, enacted by an agreeable cast including Frank Lloyd, Millard K. Wilson, Helen Leslie, Olive Fuller Golden and Marc Robbins. The story is one of two brothers, one crippled as the result of an accident caused by the other. Each falls in love with the same girl and the well brother gives her up to the crippled boy. The latter, however, suspecting the truth, says he is in love with his nurse. This sacrifice allows the well brother to marry the girl. The story is one of pretty sentiment, not very strong as to action, but quite pleasing in motive.

NO. 329 (Big U), March 25.—Murdock and Albert MacQuarrie appear in this interesting two-reel offering as clerks in a broker's office. John is sent to prison for the other's crime and his number in the penal institution is 329. Later years bring some dramatic moments for both men. The recognition was well staged and the fire scene later was well put on; also Small's confession. This is a very good example of this type of story.

TRICKED (Domino), March 25.—A two-reel story written by Thos. H. Ince, with Jerome Storm, Elizabeth Burbridge and Gertrude Claire in the cast. Tom, the younger brother, increases the amount of a check made out to their mother, who is very poor and in failing health. The elder brother is about to prosecute him when Edna, Tom's sweetheart, goes to an apartment Sidney had engaged. She then threatens to expose Sidney, who is married, unless he releases Tom. The plot, as can be seen, is not very elevating in tone. It is put on with a fair degree of strength, but the methods of both Tom and his sweetheart to achieve good results were questionable in themselves.

UNCLE JOHN (Imp), March 26.—This two-reel offering, written by Wm. Addison Lathrop, makes one of the best slum stories thus far released. Etienne Girardot gives a convincing portrayal of the crabbed old millionaire who is injured on the rotten stairway of his own tenement. The orphan children take him in and care for him, calling him Uncle John at his request. Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau play the lovers. The story is free from the usual sordid details which characterize the average slum story, yet at the same time carries its point. The fire scene and rescue work were finely staged. A good offering.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Kaybee), March 26.—A two-reel offering containing some strong rural types. The story is of the old-fashioned "Shores Acres" sort, two brothers being the leading characters. One is a poor old veteran with a daughter. The other brother is hard and puts the veteran in the poorhouse. Later the veteran's back pension comes and retribution overtakes the other in the way of a sheriff's sale. The plot of this is of the familiar rural brand, but it makes a good setting for some character work that is better than ordinary.

THE HIDDEN CITY (Bison), March 27.—An adventure story in two reels recalling "King Solomon's Mines" and tales of the kind. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard appear, he as the young lieutenant and she as the princess in the subterranean city. The hero ventures into the city and is condemned to death. The princess loves him and saves his life at the cost of her own. Some of the scenes are a little dark, but there are many points of interest in this and it proves a fairly strong offering of the kind.

THE KREUTZER SONATA (Fox Film Corporation), March.—In the film version of the famous novel of Count Leo Tolstoi, made by that able producer Herbert Brennon, will be found a production with which little fault, if any, can be found. Both the novel and the stage adaptation have been utilized in the making of the picture. Nance O'Neil as the star of the production does not play her best until the big scene of the production, where, driven mad by the revelation of circumstances surrounding the love affair of her husband and sister, she shoots them both. In this scene she rises to splendid dramatic heights. Earlier in the production, however, she appears to be working under restraint and a consciousness of the camera. Theda Bara as the younger sister gives a fine portrayal of the role. William Shay as Gregor Moskowitz does an excellent piece of work, as does also little Mimi Yvonne as the child of Ruth. The sociological significance of the story has been well preserved.

THE LOST HOUSE (Majestic), March.—A Richard Harding Davis story which in its four-reel film version is quite as interesting as it is gruesome. Dorothy Gish plays the role of the unfortunate young heiress whose unscrupulous uncle places her in the clutches of an anarchist who plans to do away with her on condition that the uncle divide her fortune with him. The production is in many ways a strong one. It is at the same time not by any means without its faults. For instance, the beard of the anarchist is too noticeably false, and toward the close of the picture where the police raid the sanitarium in which the girl is imprisoned, and which is prescribed to be for mentally weak subjects, an unlicensed amount of shooting and fatalities occur. Otherwise no fault could be found with it. It is a decidedly impressive picture, logically developed for the most part, reflecting credit alike on director and players. W. A. Turner, Wallace Reid and Elmer Clifton also appear in the cast.

THE QUEST (American), March.—In the five reels of this production there is much that is beautiful, as well as much that is crude. The scene where the feminine ideal of his imagination comes gliding over the water toward the rapt young man on shore, is as fine a piece of double exposure work as one could wish to see; the scene is, in itself, a gem. Had the film been cut to four reels the illusion might not have been destroyed, but the adding of reel number five brings with it a double climax and also a taint of confusion. The photography displayed in the production cannot be too highly praised. The players, too, are worthy of much commendation, and Marguerite Fisher is a delight; likewise Harry Pollard's work is exceedingly good.

THE IGNORANCE OF BLISS (Pathe-Balboa), March.—Three reels of film have been expended in this instance on a production that might be termed a somewhat hysterical one. The inspiration for the story has evidently been extracted from Eleanor Glynn's novel, "Three Weeks," and is aimed directly against the principle therein contained. The drama is intended to stand for cleanliness and purity of principle, and in a sense it reaches its aim; but the impression obtained from viewing it is that the subject requires a more professional handling.

THE PRAYING MANTIS (Pathe Exc.), March.—This film will afford interesting study to the naturalist. The peculiarly shaped bug, which, with its habits, the picture illustrates, is a native of Southern Europe and India. Despite the saintly name given the little animal on account of its strange attitude while watching for its prey, it is interesting to note its disagreeable, and even cruel disposition. On the same reel with "The Gorges of the Tarn."

THE GORGES OF THE TARN (Pathe Exc.), March.—On the same reel with the above, and intensely interesting as a scenic. It is another of those films that do so much toward familiarizing the untraveled with the beauties of the French scenery.

Cheap Advice Worth Little

THE Editor and Publisher and Journalist, a newspaper trade journal published in New York, offers some gratuitous advice to newspapers in general in a paragraph published in its issue of February 27, as follows:

"The Hines Syndicate, of Minneapolis, is approaching newspaper publishers with a plan to furnish three-column film stories of the various manufacturers, and a Query Bureau, answering questions relating to photoplays players and play writing at $4 per week. In other words, the newspapers are asked to pay for the privilege of printing these stories advertising the film plays. The syndicate is, of course, paid by the manufacturers for getting these stories published. Nice scheme, isn't it? Collect money at both ends and ride the newspaper goat! Have you fallen for it?

Nothing is nicer than to be able to give advice—good advice—to your patrons. But to give real advice one must know something of the subject upon which the aforesaid advice is offered. From the above advice offered by The Editor and Publisher and Journalist it is evident that it is not in touch with the present situation regarding the syndicating of motion picture information of the character mentioned and the value of that information to the newspaper.

As to the statement that the Edison Company pays for the service afforded by the Hines Syndicate, that is emphatically denied by both parties and needs no further comment.

Regarding the advisability of editors "falling" for the Hines proposition that is a question on managerial policy. It is a well-known fact that the best circulation booster available to-day is a good motion picture department and that the newspaper that runs such a department not only increases its daily sales, but is in line to secure local motion picture theater advertising in a most profitable amount. The Editor and Publisher and Journalist has only to scan a few of its exchanges to prove this statement. Now and then we receive a copy of a country town daily ourselves and have noticed that the greater part of the advertising carried was for the local picture theaters. Hundreds of small town daily papers are carrying this kind of advertising and supplementing it with just the kind of syndicate service supplied by Hines.

Now as to the charge for the syndicate service: Is it not cheaper for the editor of a small town daily, who must necessarily have a small staff of assistants, to pay $4 for the syndicate service, which is up to date, ready to use, and has been compiled by experienced writers, than to pay $10 per week for a local writer to prepare it for him?

There is no chance for an argument on this question.

Neither is there any question as to the necessity of a small town daily carrying a motion picture department.

Therefore, instead of warning the newspapers of the land that they are being "handed" something by the Hines Syndicate, The Editor and Publisher and Journalist would be giving far more practical advice if it were to tell its clients how to get some of the money that the motion picture men all over the country are distributing for advertising purposes. Any newspaper can get from picture makers for the asking the information syndicated by Hines, but if Hines is willing to cover the field for $4 per week, we do not know of a cheaper proposition.

Madeline Preston

SWIMMING in ice-choked and wind-swept Lake Michigan probably wouldn't appear to the average girl as an ideal way in which to win a dinner, but that's the manner in which Miss Madeline Preston, a North Shore Chicago girl makes her bow to the film fans in the first release of the Miss Follome Daly Film Co., Inc., in a two reel comedy thrill of the same name.

Madeline Preston.

Newspaper reviewers and practical film men are a unit in declaring that this picture will be a drawing card on any program not only because of the comedy features and the daring stunts of Miss Preston in the part of Follome and her associates on the screen but because of the photography, the unusual locations, important from a publicity standpoint and the sustained interest throughout the entire 2,000 feet.

From the time Follome comes out of the water for a short winter sun-bath on the ice cakes until she is faded out of view in a rowboat into which she has made a daring rope-slide from a drawbridge over the Chicago river, Miss Follome Daly holds the audience tense in her escape from her father who wants her to return to the country town to marry and settle down. Follome, just out of school, prefers the city for a while for experience. Her escape from dad by leaping on the stage of a cafe during a singing act; her flight in an automobile which knocks down her own father in Michigan boulevard—this shows Chicago's half-billion dollar mile—near Grant Park; her escape in Commodore Pugh's world's record-breaking hydroplane, the Disturber IV, over the waters of Lake Michigan, followed by her father in the yacht of William Hale Thompson of Chicago; a sky-trip in an aeroplane at Cicero aviation field by one of the girls to throw Follome's father off the track so she could escape; her battle with the holdup man on one of the famous jackknife bridges during which her father, in a fight, forces the girl's assailant to leap 65 feet into the river, are among the features of the picture.

The Miss Follome Daly Company, Inc., has offices in the Tribune building, Chicago, with Walter R. Early as general manager. Mr. Early proposes to put out one and two reel comedies and announces that all of his productions will be high-class and clean of the box-office pulling and repeating variety.

EDISON NIGHT AT THE STRAND.

Tuesday evening was made an Edison evening at the Strand Roof Garden, New York, where the film folk were especially invited, the event being widely advertised. A fitting reception was accorded the favorites when they appeared. Those who were present were: Gertrude McCoy, Sally Crute, Bessie Learn, Edward Earle, Augustus Phillips, Harry Beaumont, and Yale Benner.

CHARLOTTE BURTON IN "THE TOUCH OF LOVE."

In "The Touch of Love" it has been necessary to substitute Miss Charlotte Burton in the part assigned to Miss Louise Lester owing to the latter's forced absence from an attack of grippe. Miss Lester's illness occurred after she had appeared in several scenes which, to conform, had to be retaken with Miss Burton in the role.

HOUSMAN IN A NEW CHARACTER.

"Arty" Housman, responsible for a good share of the Edison fun, who so far has appeared beardless and youthfully callow in the "Arty and Waddy" comedies, is in a departure in the forthcoming "His Sad Awakening" as an old man character.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THERE IS a strong feeling of resentment on the part of the motion picture people of this city against the sentiments expressed by William A. Brady in a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post regarding motion picture productions of the past, present and future, and the paper itself is being more severely criticised for the gullibility with which it placed before the public a manifestly skilful piece of work on Mr. Brady's part to put over a boost for a film corporation in which he is interested at the expense of the Post. However, none of offended people have taken the pains to follow the lead of one of the western manufacturers in publicly refuting some of the statements. One manufacturer who felt they were at least unfair said Mr. Brady could not be wholly blamed. He is a theatrical manager who knows the advertising game from A to Z and the Post alone should be held for any incorrect statements made by Mr. Brady in his zeal to get free advertising for his own concern.

"But," the manufacturer continued, "in that zeal Mr. Brady has been unfair to the whole business. His sentiments have a tendency to prejudice the interests of all manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors who do not make and handle feature subjects exclusively. There is a large proportion of the public who are easily influenced by articles written and published by prominent people and publications, particularly when such writings bear upon theatrical affairs; and the great popularity attained by motion pictures has made these people eager to read and listen to everything that is printed and said about them. When these people learn from such sources that one-reel comedies and two-reel plays have small vogue today and their production is being discontinued the public is apt to lose interest in them. The same is true with regard to Mr. Brady's statement that the popularity of the old motion picture actor has passed and the stars from the legitimate stage appearing in features only are now in the lime light."

"Now this unfairness to the many reputable manufacturers who are producing very excellent one and two-reel subjects, as well as to the many motion picture players who are justly endeavoring to maintain their popularity with the public is uncalled for. Mr. Brady is one of the best known and experienced legitimate theater managers in this country, but he has a great deal to learn about the motion picture business. It may also be remarked that he is not well posted as to what is going on in it. If he was he would not be found in the incongruous position of declaring that one-reel comedies have small vogue, 'although some of the smaller houses still stick to them' when his own company is advertising one-reel comedies. This condition of affairs would seem to take considerable weight out of the article the Post published and the Post should have known of its existence. But none of the publishers not connected with the motion picture trade ever get things right. My experience with interviewers convinced me of this. If you want to get posted on what is going on in the motion picture field you must read the publications and consult the people who are in direct touch with the producers, distributers and exhibitors."

During a discussion of the Post article in another quarter there was a decided sentiment that the shorter films will eventually regain the field and the feature business will drop back to where it was a couple of years ago. The contention was that material for the one, two and three-reel productions of comedy and drama is less exhaustible than for features. The latter have already suffered in the eyes of the public because of ruthless padding. Advertising will not make features. They must make themselves upon the screen. The comment too often heard in the picture houses that "this is tedious" must not go unheeded. It shows that the public knows the producers have taken the road to Tipperary to get more money out of the story. Genuine features have a big field. Stories full of good action, well put together and produced will be in demand at all times, but the day when even such productions can be run long enough or produced frequently enough to hold the screen to the exclusion of the short subjects need not be looked for. Features have had as good days as they will ever have and at no time have the one or two reelers been put upon the discard shelf.

Listen to this, from one of the best known exchange men: "The time is drawing very close when the motion picture business will again be identified purely as such. There will be a distinct class of legitimate motion picture producers and distributors and a distinct class of players. The legitimate class will be composed of those who have been pioneers, or have grown up with the business and know it in all its branches, as well as knowing what the public wants and what should be given them. They will not depend alone upon the success certain plays or people have attained upon the stage. Some people would have the public believe that the advent of legitimate stars and plays brought the motion picture business to where it is today. They certainly helped to elevate it and attract audiences that previously ignored motion pictures, but they were forced into the field because they saw the pictures were driving their own business to the wall. Steady and rapid improvement in the preparation of film subjects had been in progress for years and the business would have continued its prosperous march if the people who now claim they made it had never entered the field. I do not believe that the regular theatrical people who have entered the picture game intend to make it a permanent business. All of them will tell you that there will be a revival in their old line. When it comes they will return to the old field. Some may retain interest in the pictures as a side line, but the bulk of the business will be left to what I have termed the legitimate motion picture people. One thing that impresses this idea upon my mind is the failure of the newcomers to keep up with the regulars in the erection and enlargement of studios. There will be another class of producers who will eventually succumb to the legitimate producers. The game has become overcrowded and the returns have been ruinously impaired by the encroachment of people of limited or no experience, but who have succeeded in persuading financial backing. Some have started seriously and honestly. Others have depended upon what is known on the stage as the 'angel' game. There have been many wrecks, and many more are to follow. They will be supplanted, but the supply of 'angels' will run out. The initial cash outlay is so great that it is not as easy, even at the present time, to get them into the picture game as it is to get them into the old theatrical business."

Contemporaneous with the expressions of the old time exchange man one who has been a motion picture actor for several years says a big shake-up is due and that the oft predicted development of survival of the fittest will be realized. He says the visions of millions being made by producers has been dispelled and capital is scarce; that those who have it are gradually learning that the companies supposed to be making fortunes are not doing so and most of them are losing money. On the financial standpoint of the business players, as a rule, are not in a position to express reliable opinions, but where a player has been prominently connected with the business for several years his opinion is worthy of more than passing notice.

Reports from Atlantic City say that the Director of Public Safety, who is also the official censor, has decided to prohibit vaudeville and burlesque shows on Sundays but will allow motion picture exhibitions. The W. C. T. U. of the city is up in arms against the official. They say it is only a half way measure and the pictures should be stopped. They claim the censor is influenced by being the landlord of one of the most prosperous picture houses in the city. Well, there is local official censorship for you! What the W. C. T. U. complains of is one of the strongest arguments the motion picture people make against the censorship octopus that is spreading its relentless tentacles all over the country. If the shoe were on the other foot the motion picture people probably would get nothing but what the W. C. T. U. cared to allow them, even on week days. Conceding the censor is influenced by his interest in the picture building it only strengthens the argument that local official censorship cannot be counted upon for fairness to all concerned because of the ever present element of self-interest.

MIRIAM NESBITT IN THIEF PLAYS.

Miriam Nesbitt, the Edison leading lady who has often been seen in characters widely ranging but usually sympathetic, will appear in a radical departure in a number of plays in which she is featured as a master thief. The first of them—which, however, have no connection with each other as to story—appeared as the three-reel feature, "Killed Against Orders." The others are in production, yet unnamed. They are all by Mary Rider.

DAINTY romance in its presentation, an exquisitely tinted miniature on ivory, "A Theft in the Dark" has symmetry of form, swiftness of action and not a little of the tingling vitality of intense drama. Its whole atmosphere has the fascination of once-upon-a-time stories, the kind we used to read long after we should have been in bed, the kind that holds us with a charm all their own when we sit in the half-shadows of picture shows and watch the illuminated screen. A very large part of this effect is due to careful treatment by Charles Brabin—he always beautifies his subject and rarely jars us with inconsistencies.

A delicately affectionate understanding exists between wandering Lord Stranleigh and Lady Sinclair, one of purest friendship, verging on the warmer sentiment but restrained by a philosophical attitude on the part of Her Ladyship—she fears that His Lordship has been pampered by good fortune until he lacks real nobility of character, the kind that is capable of self-sacrifice. She does not exact that he shall put his love to any violent test, but that he shall demonstrate true manhood when the occasion demands. Occasions are rare, but at last one comes that is worth while.

During a costume ball on New Year's Eve—this is an unusually fine ensemble—lights are dimmed on the stroke of the hour, and a pretty maid emerges from the overhead clock to scatter roses of the New Year, bright hopes, over the assembled guests. Lady Sinclair discovers later on that her pearl necklace is missing. Lord Stranleigh takes it upon himself to discover which one of the guests, there being no servants present at the moment of the theft, has taken the jewels. He sends for detectives and prepares for a general search, but decides to make a personal investigation meanwhile. He conceals himself in a suit of armor that stands in the hall, where he can discover any attempted escape from the house, and thus learns that Ralph Vernon is the thief and about to elope with Lady Genevieve.

Stranleigh's attitude is one of both dignity and generosity. He prevents the elopement and hushes up a scandal, but he becomes involved in difficulty himself as a consequence. He shields Lady Genevieve when her sister finds them together under peculiar circumstances and accepts dismissal from the house rather than save himself by revelation of truth that might compromise the young girl. The latter clears Stranleigh in time to prevent a permanent rupture between him and Lady Sinclair, and all ends happily for the manly lordling and his doubting lady.

MacDermott and Miss Nesbitt are beyond criticism in their flawless interpretation, but they do not carry all the honors—Edward Earle also intensifies interest by intelligent work.

Edith Ritchie

EDITH RITCHIE, who in private life is Mrs. Stephen Morris, a well known society leader of Philadelphia, is playing the sympathetic role of Ruth Hunter in the elaborate production of Clyde Fitch's society drama, "The Climbers," which the Lubin company is filming in its Philadelphia studio, under the direction of Barry O'Neil, and in which Gladys Hanson will be featured.

Miss Ritchie is a descendant of the Biddles on her father's side and of the Sommer Smiths on her mother's side and is related to most of the prominent old families in Philadelphia. She is a member of most of the fashionable city and country clubs of Philadelphia and Newport, and is a most charming hostess. Up until last summer her winters were spent either in Philadelphia or traveling in Europe, and her summers at her picturesque cottage on Bay Side at Newport.

Edith Ritchie.

Before she became a Lubin photoplayer Miss Ritchie had achieved quite a reputation as an amateur actress in Philadelphia, New York and Newport, and she was always a prime mover in arranging and producing society plays for various charitable institutions. Miss Ritchie was educated in Switzerland and London and spent many years traveling abroad, studying music, art and the theater for her own amusement. When she returned to America she married Stephen Morris, and her wedding was one of the big social events of the season.

Mrs. Morris joined the Lubin players and served her apprenticeship last summer, helping create "atmosphere" and playing small parts in different productions. Her natural dramatic ability, however, added to her good looks, won her recogniiton and she was given the role of Miss Carpenter in "The Fortune Hunter," in which William Elliott was featured. Her success in this exacting part won for her the role of Mrs. Dalzell in George Ade's "The College Widow." She played the lead in "The Urchin," a Terwilliger play directed by John Ince; did some very excellent character work in some of the Arthur Johnson comedies, and had an important part in "The Evangelist," Henry Arthur Jones' play. When Barry O'Neil wanted a woman to play the part of Aunt Ruth Hunter in "The Climbers" he selected Miss Ritchie.

Miss Ritchie is a tall, very good looking woman with a charm of manner that is irresistible. It took courage to make the break from a social life of comfort and luxury and get into the daily routine of the exacting type of work that the photoplay demands, but Miss Ritchie did it and she did it with an enthusiasm that won for her the friendship and admiration of everyone in the Lubin studio. She finds her work most interesting and says her main ambition now is to make herself a success in her new profession.

INCE TAKES COMPANY TO GEORGIA.

Ralph W. Ince, one of the best-known directors of the Vitagraph Company, took a company of Vitagraph Players to Georgia, leaving Tuesday, March 9, to work on the new Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," of which Gouveneur Morris is the author. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Paul Scardon and Julia Swayne Gordon are the principal stock members who accompanied Mr. Ince. They expect to be gone a month or six weeks as the topography of certain sections of Georgia is ideal as backgrounds for the enactment of special scenes that require realistic natural settings. "The Goddess," which is announced to be complete in fifteen episodes, is the most pretentious work ever undertaken by the Vitagraph Company.

"The Quality of Forgiveness"

Pathe-Balboa of Three Reels Which Succeeds in Making Its Title the Objective Point of the Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

DISTINCTLY a drama, into which has been inoculated considerable of the melodramatic element, sufficient to make an attractive semblance for the ordinary audience, this production will class as one of the best of the output of the Balboa studios. It is not without its faults, and it may be that the story is not a strong one, nor altogether an original one, but the director of the picture has done well with his material and has converted it into an attractive and symmetrical whole.

The story is of two brothers, one of whom goes on a hunting trip of some duration, and the other, a chemist, and incidentally a gambler, whose entanglement with two women at the same time, his preference for the second arrival on the plane of his affections, and the uprooting of his moral principles because the second lady demands wealth with her love potion, stimulates in the spectator dissatisfaction with the lines of his character.

Scene from "The Quality of Forgiveness" (Pathe-Balboa).

As the story progresses and the gambler, beset by his debts on the one hand and his lady love on the other, robs the safe of his formerly intended father-in-law, who dies from the shock and injuries inflicted in the conflict, the first love left alone becomes blind and is married later by the returning brother, who impersonates the chemist. At the climax of the story the chemist, who is also a doctor, is prevailed upon to operate on the girl's eyes, and the closing scenes bring us to what is evidently the objective point of the production, which illustrates the "Quality of Forgiveness."

Among the cast appear the names of George Tutt, Roy Watson, Margaret Nichols, Joyce Moore, Gordon Sackville and Henry Stanley.

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE COMPANY'S NEW HOME.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., located for a long time on the twentieth floor of the World Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street, has removed to a larger and more pretentious suite on the sixteenth floor of the Masonic Building, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City. There are five private offices, a large reception room and a projection room, second to that of no other feature film organization in the city, included in the suite. The company's move to larger quarters has been made for the purpose of handling its rapidly increasing business. Plans are being made at the present time for an even more aggressive campaign in the feature film field.

CLAWSON LEASES NEW THEATER.

T. G. Clawson, manager of the Park Theater Company, Longview, Texas, has taken a long lease on the motion picture theater which is being built by F. T. Rembert of that city. The new structure will involve an investment of $20,000. It will be 55 feet wide and 140 feet long, and will be up to date from every point. Mr. Clawson formerly owned and operated the Grand theater in Longview which was destroyed by fire on January 4 last.

Cecil B. De Mille

CECIL B. DE MILLE, director general for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is being overwhelmed by letters from motion picture authorities and photo-dramatic play goers all over the country, congratulating him on the extraordinary success of Blanche Sweet in "The Warrens of Virginia."

In the character of Agatha Warren, Miss Sweet has a role radically different from anything in which she has heretofore been seen, but the consensus of opinion is undoubtedly that it marks a great advancement in her career and the beginning of a new stage in the artistic development of this new Lasky star.

Cecil B. De Mille.

Miss Sweet, for her part, is never tired of emphasizing her debt of gratitude to Mr. De Mille for the way in which he directed the entire production and worked with her to get the very best effects in every scene. The play, written by Wm. C. De Mille, brother of the director general, is particularly dear to his heart, for it deals with events true to life in the history of the De Mille family, but even this inspiration would not have sufficed to obtain snch truly remarkable results without the most extraordinary art and labor. Mr. De Mille, drawing on the traditions of his own family for "The Warrens of Virginia"—the Warrens being the De Milles in real life—meant to make a masterpiece, and unquestionably succeeded.

Among the productions staged, personally, by Mr. De Mille for the Lasky company prior to the Lasky-Belasco presentation of Blanche Sweet in "The Warrens of Virginia," were such successes as "Call of the North," "Virginian," "Man from Home," "The Rose of the Rancho" and "The Girl of the Golden West."

Such a series of extraordinary hits, all produced within a brief period of time, stamps Mr. De Mille as the foremost photo-dramatic producer in the world. This record of achievement is all the more remarkable when one bears in mind that, in addition to having directed all these specific productions in person, Mr. De Mille, in his capacity as director general, has supervised the entire list of Lasky attractions and has been the executive head of the studio which, within a single year, has grown from small proportions to one of the most magnificent establishments of this nature in the entire world.

NEW STARS FOR VITAGRAPH.

The Vitagraph Company has added a number of players to their stock membership who were prominent on the legitimate stage. Joseph Kilgour, a Broadway favorite for a number of years, the original John T. Kelly, the Irish Senator, Lionel Adams, who will be remembered for his work in "Ben Hur," playing the name part, and Anna Laughlin, who won presige as a musical comedy star, being among the best known. Zena Keefe, who first began posing for the camera under the Vitagraph banner, has returned from a trip to Europe to again appear in pictures bearing the Vitagraph stamp. The list of directors has been increased by the addition of Lorimer Johnson, while other prominent legitimate and moving picture stars and directors are considering offers from this enterprising firm.

UNIVERSAL PLAYERS SHIFT.

William Clifford, formerly with the 101-Bison Company, has been transferred from the direction of Henry McRae to that of Joseph De Grasse, where he will work with Pauline Bush, playing character leads in place of Lon Chaney. Chaney has been promoted to director of the Kerrigan-Victor Company. To fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Clifford's transfer there has come from the East Wellington Playter, who has made an enviable reputation on the legitimate stage, as well as in the moving picture field.

"The Renegade"

Two-Reel Broncho of Intrinsic Interest and Superior Treatment.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ARTISTIC covers the entire treatment of "The Renegade," and this applies to the very pretty conclusion. The mounting of a play of this kind, presenting as it does scenes in darkest Africa and glimpses of high life in England is a craft by itself. To be sure, it is called into existence for the sake of a larger art, but it has a positive function in moving pictures and one to which little attention is given by directors. The fine taste shown in "The Renegade" gives evidence that the art of producing is composite. The play contains the theme, the plot, the characters, and, above all things, the structure, but it usually meets with pictured expression so inadequate that it is spoiled in the handling. In this case it is glorified by a splendid harmony of treatment from start to finish.

Robert Graves is a white slaver in dark Africa, with a body of slave traders from Morocco under Ali Hamid to call upon in an emergency. The emergency arrives when Captain Marley appears with a body of troops to capture Graves. The troops are surrounded and annihilated with the exception of a sergeant who escapes, and Captain Marley who is captured and thrown into captivity. He is chained to the naked blacks and sold to Ali Hamid as a body servant. He thus meets Normah, a beautiful slave girl, and so completely wins her affections that she plots to spare him further degradation.

Robert Graves has found a letter in the possession of Marley which identifies him as the heir to a title and a fortune. Graves goes to England and successfully impersonates Marley for a while. He enters upon possession of a magnificent estate and the guardianship of a young girl, Alice Craven, whom it is intended that Marley shall wed. The impostor's conduct, especially under the influence of drink, repels the girl, and she gives her heart to a suitor in humble circumstances.

The sergeant who escaped finds his way to the main body of English troops and they set forth to rescue Captain Marley. He meets them on their way, having been assisted to escape by Normah. He returns to England and presents his claim so convincingly that he is permitted to expose the impostor in an ingenious manner. He recovers his estate, but he finds that Alice Craven has made a natural selection, and he gives it his benediction. The conclusion is a very deft touch, one entirely satisfactory without being commonplace, one which must be seen to be appreciated.

The story itself is interesting, and it is raised far above the average by an artistic taste that fits the presentation beautifully to the play. The charm of it is that, far from being intrusive, it concentrates attention on the action. It accomplishes what the sympathetic accompaniment does for the song.

George S. Trimble

GEORGE S. TRIMBLE of the Lubin players who can step on a pair of scales any hour of the day and make the arrow spin around to the 275 pound notch, is one of the most versatile of the character men in the studio, especially when it comes to comedy, and well he might be, for Trimble has a quarter of a century of theatrical and operatic experience back of him.

Trimble was playing the part of an inn keeper in "Patsy Bolivar," and Peter Lang was an irate father and they started to chase and capture an eloping couple. The couple, both lightweights, waded across a swamp in part of the chase scene. Trimble and Lang floundered after them until they got into the middle of the swamp and there they both stuck fast. The more they struggled the deeper in they sank. To get the pair of heavyweights out it was necessary to utilize a stout rope and a horse.

George S. Trimble.

Trimble is an actor of the old school and played with such stars as Barrett, Willard, Mansfield, Keen and Lewis Morrison. His first engagement was with Haverley's minstrels as a bass singer, after which he took up the serious drama, playing the leads and heavies in an extensive repertoire. Returning to minstrelsy he made the trip to England with Haverley's Mastodons and came back to America to sing the bass roles with Pauline Hall in the Gilbert and Sullivan Operas.

Following this engagement Trimble became associated with Dan Daly, Andrew Mack and George Fortescue; played one season with Mansfield, played a couple of seasons with Keen and then made a trip to Honolulu with Nance O'Neil and L. R. Stockwell and McKee Rankin. Upon his return Trimble joined Lewis Morrison, then playing a repertoire of classical plays. He next made a tour of the world with Nance O'Neil and McKee Rankin, returning after a two years' trip to join Lewis Morrison again. The following year and for three successive years he was featured in the role of Mephisto in "Faust." During these different engagements Trimble was stage director for Morrison and produced the first version of "Frederick the Great." He was also stage director at Moroscos in San Francisco, Stevens in Oakland, and Forepaugh in Cincinnati.

When Trimble gave up stage work he joined the Lubin forces and has been there ever since.

KOSCH BACK FROM CANADA.

H. G. Kosch, the treasurer of the Alliance Films Corporation, returned last week from a visit to Canada to look over the exchanges of the Allied Features, Inc., distributors of the Alliance Program in the Dominion. While there, Mr. Kosch spent a considerable part of his time in studying the situation and in getting a general insight into conditions.

"The Canadian film man," said Mr. Kosch, "is seriously handicapped in his operations by not only a rigorous censorship but a very high import tax which is levied upon film coming from the 'States.' Why this is necessary I failed to realize, for Canada has but a small film industry to protect from foreign competition, and I hope that these laws will be repealed or amended.

"Business is not being hit as hard as one would expect by the war; the Canadians apparently are attending to their affairs undisturbed by the present and confident that all will be well in the future."

HENRI GACHON DIES FROM WOUNDS.

Henri Gachon, formerly head of the negative department of the Eastern laboratories of the Universal Company, died in France recently from a bayonet wound received in a severe engagement in the Vosges. Mr. Gachon was one of the first to leave for France when the call to arms was made.

"The Quest"

A Five-Reel Feature by the American, With An Unusual Story Laid Amid Picturesque Surroundings.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE first of the big features bearing the "Flying A" brand is out, and will be released shortly as one of the Mutual masterpieces. The production has been under way for several weeks past, and it was with accumulated interest that I awaited the first opportunity to view the pictures in private.

The first, and overmastering, impression was that of the surpassing natural scenic beauties of the exteriors, the second was the continuous grip of the story, and the third—though not at all subordinate to either of the preceding, I wish it understood—was the talented acting of the principals in the cast.

I understand that Harry Pollard, who takes the role of the hero in the photodrama, and who formerly directed and played leading roles in "Beauty" subjects, directed "The Quest." Mr. Pollard has exercised great care in his selection of the outside scenes in these films, and where nature has required artificial additions to meet the demands of the story, he has furnished them with artistic taste. The scene showing the village of rude huts on one of the South Sea islands, with castaway white people as the inhabitants, will linger long in mental vision. The beautiful coast scenes and the wild, rugged bits of landscape from the interior are in rich harmony. A striking view of one of these inland scenes is shown in the midst of a great thunderstorm, during which the rain falls in torrents and lightning bolts shatter rocks and kill human beings.

Mr. Pollard deserves special credit for his care and success in making the interiors used in the photodrama—and which are supposed to represent the interiors of fashionable New York residences—conform with the required demands. There is nothing tawdry or cheap about them; they indicate refinement and affluence.

In this connection it is timely to give a word of praise for the costuming of the characters, as they appear on the island. One might think, at first sight, that Margarita Fischer was bedecked in civilized costume or, at least, in garb too closely like it. But a little close observation reveals that this is not true. Her bewitching natural beauty has the tendency to make her look natty and au fait in any kind of costume. The great difference between her island costume and that of fashion is seen on board the yacht, when her husband's lady friends attempt to clothe her in decorous style.

The story of "The Quest" is quite unusual in moving pictures, and yet excellently adaptable to visualization. That fine dream scene, in which John Douglas is shown the dangers to which his semi-civilized wife will be exposed among the fashionable set of his friends in New York, tells the story far better than it could be told in words. I believe everyone will agree with me that Director Pollard used both art and good judgment when he omitted to introduce this dream scene by a subtitle. That it is a dream is fittingly disclosed at the close of the scene, where Nai is shown shaking him vigorously, to awake him, while the old tribal priest reclines on his rocky couch nearby. This treatment of the scene is almost as pleasurable to the spectator as must have been the sensations experienced by the sleeper, when he awoke to find that he had been the victim of only a frightful nightmare.

To the many who have delighted in seeing Margarita Fisher in photocomedy, her appearance in a straight photodramatic role will afford novelty; but, what is far better, it will furnish proof positive that she is an actress of much greater ability and versatility than had been supposed. In the part of the untutored Nai, she merges her real self thoroughly. I fail to remember a single time when Nai was anything but a simple child of nature—with the girlish whims, likings and devotion of such a creature—in Miss Fischer's impersonation. The scene aboard the yacht (in the dream scene), where she furiously attempts to discard civilized modern garb, without any respect for buttons or hooks and eyelets, is a fine bit of realistic acting and true comedy. Nai's fear of and aversion to her newly-found, civilized sisters are so real that one cannot believe them merely feigned. That first meeting with John Douglas, when she saves him from the sea, and when he beholds in her the "dream girl" of his life, affords another instance of Miss Fischer's thorough submergence in the role of Nai. Not understanding the manner or attitude of the forlorn, shipwrecked man, she fears only attack, and strikes him unconscious with a piece of rock.

Harry Pollard does the best photodramatic work I have seen him do, in the role of John Douglas. Robyn Adair, who appears as Kaura, the sub-chief of the tribe, gives a strong characterization. Joseph E. Singleton, in the dual role of chief of the tribe and De Villiers, the well-bred New York society man, is equally happy. The old tribal priest is in the capable care of Wm. Carroll. Helen Carruthers, the society butterfly, is well drawn by Nan Christy.

Harry "Atlanta" Mason

ONE of "Cabiria's" best little exploiters is the same Harry "Atlanta" Mason who, in 1908, operated the Acme theater in Goldsboro, S. C., and was getting his film service from the Consolidated Film exchange in Baltimore, which was opened and operated by Harry R. Raver. This was the beginning of the Consolidated chain of exchanges which now covers the entire south and southwest. Mason suggested taking on a few Carolina customers for Raver and he soon developed a business of $1,000 a week on old films. He was later made general manager of the Consolidated chain with headquarters in Atlanta. Mason subsequently managed the Mutual Atlanta office and is now looking after Mr. Raver's "Cabiria" interests in the entire south.

Harry A. Mason.

The fact that all "Cabiria" films are kept under the Itala Co.'s control makes it necessary that men selected to represent the company in the various territories measure up to a high standard of honesty, exchange experience and showmanship. These essentials Mr. Mason possesses, according to Harry Raver.

Mason's office is renting all Itala releases, besides Great Northern, Blinkhorn and other brands. He is located in the Rhodes building and has a completely equipped suite of offices.

COMMISSIONERS AS ACTORS.

Edison is releasing April 5th, the film which they made in connection with the United States Civil Service, designed to show, through the weave of a love story, how the Civil Service holds forth great opportunities for the youth of the country. "Won Through Merit" shows Secretary McAdoo and a number of the high and honorable officials of the Civil Service Board who act like seasoned film fellows. Pat O'Malley and Gladys Hullette are the principals. One scene shows a novel double exposure successfully done by Horace Plimpton, Jr., camera man, with the two actors on each side telephoning to each other with a panorama of Washington in the center.

"The Stoning"

One of the Strongest of Edison Plays and Best Three-Reel Feature of the Year.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STORY of significance, one in accord with the generous heart of American intelligence, "The Stoning," is imbued with the spirit of sincerity and truth—it strikes root where the ordinary production is inane and impotent. It will reach warm sympathies and through its very tenderness soften hearts and broaden minds not to be reached, or to be affected, by cut-and-dried codes promulgated from the pulpit. Taking us by the hand and leading us into the bright and pretty story of Ruth Fenton, picturing her the pride of her graduating class, a favorite in the church choir, the most loved of all among the young people who give her a surprise party, a simple, pure-minded, affectionate girl of upright father and fond mother, "The Stoning" contains no warming of the intense drama to follow, even when Ruth gives up Buck Jones' boy to follow the God-given natural dictates of her heart. It is a drama of actuality.

Next to its noble theme, it is this actuality which counts most heavily. Director Brabin has joined the band of those who know the secret of convincing realism. It does not lie in realism of action so much as in truth of mental revelation—it is largely a matter of psychology. Ruth falls in love with Alec Peters, a handsome young brakeman. Something in his personality causes her susceptible heart to whisper that he is her natural mate. Her father's opposition only serves to fan the flame of love—it has the appearance of injustice—so Ruth runs away with Alec. He evades marrying her on one pretext or another until she knows the sharpest pain a human heart can support. The man to whom she has given all a loving heart can give is a low and utterly worthless scoundrel.

The minister finds Ruth and brings her home—her mother's condition is precarious. She is forgiven by mother and father, her fault being one of judgment, not of immoral impulse. She is forgiven by the minister, even as Christ forgave, but his congregation has not reached a breadth of view on the redress of social wrongs, especially that which blames a woman for a man's successful deceit. Instead of according her sympathy and punishing the seducer, her friends and associates stone her in the modern method. Next morning her body is found in the lake—she has gone to Him who forgives poor erring humanity. The minister, who has attempted to make the people of his flock Christian in deed as well as in profession, now turns on them in his wrath. He points to the pure face of the girl in the casket, her face sanctified by knowledge that she followed the dictates of her heart to fulfil her divine mission, and he denounces them all. "There is one word written large across all your hearts, it is MURDERER, and there lies the child you have murdered."

"The Thumb Prints on the Safe"

A Quite New Situation Enlivens Well-Worked Up Detective Story by Kalem.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IF A WRITER wants to get a truly fresh situation in a detective story, he must "force" it. He must be more than up to date and his interesting crook must have a "touch of genius" that would mark a distinct advance in the trade methods of crooks. In "The Thumb Prints on the Safe," by Hamilton Smith, a two part Kalem offering, a truly scientific light-fingered man is pictured. The usual "scientific" crook is more than apt to do mystical things, such as thought transference and the like, which are not only trite (many repetitions have made that sort of thing easy) but not at all scientific. This crook is a photographer and makes a false thumb from a photograph of his master's thumb-print and, protected by this rubber false thumb, opens the safe and steals his master's ruby bag, leaving prints that indicate that the master has "done the job" in his sleep.

It is a very interesting picture; for the suspense is held up well by the fact that the new situation cannot be readily foreseen and the carefully made plot is able to keep it hidden from us till the end, even though we are permitted to see a good deal, everything, indeed, but the last step. James W. Horne directed it and has managed to keep his human characters convincing enough. Cleo Ridgeley has the leading role, the society girl investigator. Thomas Lingham is one of the notable characters. William West plays the owner of the rubies very well. These are supported by a skillful cast, including Robert Gray, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee. The photography is as good as usual and the Kalem standard is recognized as as good as the best.

FAMOUS PLAYERS OBTAIN RIGHTS TO "MICE AND MEN."

The Famous Players Film Co. have acquired the film rights to Madeline Lucette Ryley's celebrated play, "Mice and Men," once the popular starring vehicle of Annie Russell, in which they will shortly present Miss Marguerite Clark, the dainty and diminutive star who recently stepped from an eminent place behind the footlights to assume a position of supreme importance on the screen, in which she has won new and greater laurels. This subject is especially adapted to the versatile talents and bewitching mannerisms of the youthful favorite.

In "Mice and Men," Miss Clark will portray the fascinating character of "Little Peggy," the winsome and pretty foundling girl, who is adopted by the middle-aged Mark Embury, with the idea of educating her along his own lines in order that she may become an ideal wife for the intellectual bachelor. But, in acordance with the truth upon which the title of the play is founded, "the best laid plans of mice and men oft go astray," as the kindly but mistaken philosopher learns to his sorrow.

How Peggy's romance is saved from tragedy, the snarl of tangled hearts unwound, how Mark makes a sacrifice himself, and learns the folly of too much foresight and not enough insight, and the beauty of self-abnegation for love's sake, is charmingly developed in this exquisite drama of comedy and pathos.

"The Bond of Friendship"

Two-Part Alhambra in Which a Dream Opens the Door to Realization and Prevents a Broken Friendship.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

IN SPITE of the fact that one or two points of this production may be open to criticism, it is an exceedingly attractive one, and revels in the joys of careful staging. Donald MacDonald has directed the making of the picture, which, along with others from the hand of this competent producer, tends to emphasize the fact that an evenness of quality from him may be depended upon. In the whole production there is but one missing link, and that is a rather insignificant one. This occurs in the dream portion of the picture when a telephone message is received by the husband telling him of the intended elopement of his wife with his friend, previous to apprising the audience of the fact, or signifying the location of the couple.

Dorothy Davenport and Rupert Julian play opposite one another, with Lee Hill and Benjamin Horning closely associated. The opening of the story is placed amid western surroundings, and contains a thrilling incident, where the young woman of the story falls over a cliff, and in the attempt of her two admirers to rescue her, one of them seeing that the rope to which they both cling is about to break, sacrificially allows himself to drop a great height in order to exclude the other from an even worse fate. He is picked up unconscious, and during the convalescence of the woman and the man, placed always near one another, the way is paved for a matrimonial union, which afterwards proves unhappy through the neglectful attitude of the husband. At this point of the story, and during a visit from the unsuccessful suitor, a dream which takes place, while his wife and friend are at the theater, where he has lazily refused to accompany them, awakens him to the danger in which he has placed his matrimonial craft, and tends to strengthen the bond of friendship between the two men.

"THE HIGH HAND" CAST.

In the last release of the Favorite Players' "The High Hand," a six-part photoplay, John Sheehan gives a wonderful rendition of the part of the little political jackal, Franques. Douglas Gerrard is forceful and admirable as the political boss, while Neva Gerber, the only girl in the photoplay, is sweet and pretty as the girl.

William Brunton as a political scoundrel of the approved type, Harry Kernan, as the father, and Richard Willis, as Bob, the foreman, are all ably suited to their parts.

Carlyle Blackwell, as Jim Warren, who works out his "big idea," is his old self at his best, and wins admiration all through the production.

ALLIANCE INVADES THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The Alliance Films Corporation, through its representative, Nat. A. Magner, in San Francisco, has arranged to have the entire Alliance Program shown in the picture houses of Hawaii and the surrounding islands, beginning March 20.

As soon as President Cobe received the report of this transaction he immediately wired to Mr. Magner to arrange if possible to have the pictures shown to the unfortunate shut-ins of the leper colony before being returned.

Grace Washburn in "World Film"

GRACE WASHBURN, a beautiful girl of American Indian extraction, is to be starred by the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company in a photodrama "When It Strikes Home." With her in the picture will be the "Thanhouser" beauty, Muriel Ostriche, and the picture will be released by the World Film Corporation at an early date. Miss Washburn's great-grandfather was a Cherokee Indian Chief, and thereby hangs a tale. Several years ago, Miss Washburn registered a great personal triumph at the New York Winter Garden in the "review," which is a perennially favorite form of entertainment at that delectable resort.

Grace Washburn.

Two years ago a bevy of American beauties were exported to London, England. That dear old town, ever since the days of Henry E. Dixey and Fay Templeton (who at the Gaiety Theater in the Strand wore next to nothing seductively and gracefully), always extends a cordial welcome to American pulchritude on the stage and off it. Seriously, good looks and self assurance from this side of the Atlantic unfailingly go well on the other. Grace Washburn was in the troupe and soon found herself the star at the London Opera House in a ragtime review "Come Over Here," by Wilson Mizner and Max Pemberton. The London Opera House, thanks to Oscar Hammerstein, is a classy music hall, resorted to by the best boys and girls in town.

Grace, a real American blonde, descendant of Cherokees and other scalpers, took London by storm. She smiled, danced, talked, insinuated her way into the good graces of the most generous and most appreciative public on the globe. Newspapermen, artists, of the best type, wrote about and sketched her. She became known as "the American beauty" and her fame for loveliness of face and figure and scantiness of attire packed the London Opera House.

GENE GAUNTIER WITH UNIVERSAL.

Gene Gauntier, whose reputation as an actress with the Kalem and Biograph companies and later as an independent producer of feature pictures extends over many years, left New York on March 7 with Jack Clark and a company of players to become a member of the Universal forces working in California. Mr. Clark will continue to be Miss Gauntier's director and leading man in the making of three and four-reel pictures that will be released on the Universal program under a brand name not yet selected. The Gauntier studio at 517 West Fifty-fourth street, New York, has been rented by Gustave Frohman for use by the producing company which he heads.

Miss Gauntier's work with the Kalem Company in "From the Manger to the Cross" and many other productions gave her a world-wide reputation. For a time she was scenario editor as well as a leading player of Biograph. The pictures made at her New York studio were always well acted and carefully presented.

FASHION NOTES IN HEARST-SELIG WEEKLY.

Dame Fashion is going to have a great deal to say in the pictures henceforth. The Hearst-Seling News Pictorial has instituted a department for the presentation every week by Lucille, Lady Duff-Gordon, of New York, of the very latest frills and foibles that are dear to the feminine hearts. Latest fashions in Milady's gowns will be shown on living models. These fashions are the very latest word from Paris and elsewhere. Women long ago learned to visit the motion pictures to get the latest in fashion hints. This latest innovation can be termed an "animated fashion department." Many fashion journals which have for so long enjoyed great vogue among women will find their occupation gone for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial will be first in fashion's realm with the up-to-the minute styles.

Two Biograph Pictures

"Lorna Doone," a Two-Part Drama Based on R. D. Blackmore's Novel.—"The Girl and the Matinee Idol," a Comedy-Drama in One Reel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"LORNA DOONE," R. D. Blackmore's tale of old England, has been made into a picturesque, entertaining two-part drama by the Biograph Company. A taste for the romance of a by-gone day, for the adventures and love affairs enacted in the glamor of a courtly period, was so thoroughly gratified in the novel that it lived for many years, and even now "Lorna Doone" remains a literary tradition well worth perpetrating in photoplay form.

Made in California, with a wealth of appropriate exteriors to choose from, the director of these two reels found just the locations needed for English backgrounds. As an artistic picture, the production is emphatically a success, and in the way of human drama it offers a story of sustained interest replete with physical action. A brief introduction shows why John Ridd, as a boy, comes to be a mortal enemy of the marauding Doones. His oath of vengeance is not forgotten in manhood; but it does not include the fair Lorna, who is pestered by the attentions of Carver Doone. Reduced to its elements the story resolves itself into a struggle between the two young men for supremacy and the possession of the girl, who has no difficulty in deciding in favor of Ridd.

Scattered through the picture are hand to hand fights presented with spirit—the henchmen of Doone opposing those of Ridd. And when it comes to a personal encounter, Edward Cecil, playing Ridd and G. Raymond Nye as Doone, do not spare themselves. They are the most prominent figures in a wisely selected cast, including Vola Smith as Lorna Doone, Jack Drumeir as Sir Ensor Doone, William J. Butler as the Earl of Lorna, and Kate Bruce as Ridd's mother.

"The Girl and the Matinee Idol"

In place of the split-reel farce-comedies now being issued by Biograph, each weekly program, beginning in April, will contain a straight comedy, or a comedy-drama. The new policy will be inaugurated with "The Girl and the Matinee Idol," a pleasant enough picture telling how a foolish girl is cured of her infatuation for a popular actor. Society bores her, she sees nothing to admire in her suitor and credits a stage favorite with all the virtues of a romantic hero. Her viewpoint is altered when she visits his home and meets his wife and children.

The film offers a number of pretty exterior scenes in the garden of the young woman's home and interiors are richly furnished. Altogether it is a satisfactory treatment of a familiar theme, with Gretchen Hartmann, Jack Drumeir, Herbert Barrington and Jack Mulhall presenting the chief characters. Pictures in this light comedy mood are welcome after the coarse humor of slapstick.

Tom Richards

TO aspire to a professorship, to gain success upon the operatic stage and find his real vocation as a picture star has been the peculiar fate of Tom Richards, the creator in song and film story of the title part in "The Chocolate Soldier," a recent release upon the Alliance Programme.

Tom Richards hails from the West. Upon leaving college he was possessed of the A. B. degree and a rich baritone voice. In Europe he studied vocal expression under Lehrie and Sbriglia. Upon his return to this country he created the role of Sharpless in the first American production of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly," and later he became one of the leading baritones with the Savage English Grand Opera Company. It was as St. Bumerli in "The Chocolate Soldier" that Mr. Richards made his greatest success. It was an undertaking from which even old stagers might well have faltered.

Tom Richards as "The Chocolate Soldier."

When F. C. Whitney decided to produce "The Chocolate Soldier" for the screen, Mr. Richards enthusiastically entertained the proposals to play his original role, and admitted that of all the experiances of his professional career his debut as a picture star was the most enjoyable.

Mr. Richards is now appearing as a co-star with Lulu Glaser in vaudeville, and when his contract expires will immediately begin the production of the first of a series of productions of popular novels which are now being selected. These features will be released upon the Alliance Programme.

DISTINGUISHED PARTY TO VISIT LASKY STUDIO.

Edgar Selwyn, who is to make his photodramatic debut under the management of Jesse L. Lasky in a picturization of his own drama, "The Arab," left New York for Hollywood, California, on Friday, March 12, accompanied by a most eminent party of "rooters," who all want to be on hand to tell him how good he is if he gets stage struck when placed in front of the relentless De Mille camera. This party includes his own wife, Margaret Mayo, and such celebrities as Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Cobb, Mr. and Mrs. James Forbes, Bayard Veiller and Margaret Wycherley. Though there is a strong dramatic element in this cast, it will be seen that comedy predominates and that, accordingly, the trip should be especially joyful.

VANOSCOPE SUED FOR TWO MILLION.

William J. Robinson is suing Lewis C. Van Ripper and the Vanoscope Company for $2,000,000 upon the grounds that Van Ripper failed to live up to his contract to develop the projection machine after which the company is named. The proceedings have been before Judge Hunt in the United States District Court for the past two weeks.

"The Key to the Mystery"

Exciting Melodrama in Four Reels by Picture Playhouse Company.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE quality of this picture, a four-reel offering, "The Key to the Mystery," by the Picture Playhouse Company, comes from the able presentation of its material. It is one of those pictures that we feel perfectly safe in terming a surely good offering and safe in averring that it will hold an audience and send them out pleased with the entertainment. In situation it is not new; is rather of proven popularity. Then it has a very pretty heroine and a better looking villainess and the men players are also personable. The backgrounds and photography are often artistic, sometimes extremely pretty; in one or two places the camera work is a bit dull. Such an offering is sure of success, but will not excite any special enthusiasm.

The mystery referred to in the title comes from the disappearance of a document from the war office. We know who took it, for we saw her. Her beauty is the excuse the picture offers for the weakness of the war minister's secretary who lets her make love to him till he can't see her robbing his desk and throwing the paper to her accomplice outside. The early scenes had prepared us to expect that the man's true sweetheart would come to his rescue, in spite of the fact that he had forgotten her in the charms of this new flame that was burning his wings. But noble and disinterested love after many vicissitudes earns a reward. The lovers are happy again when the secretary is forgiven by the minister and is told how the truth was guessed and the villains followed and arrested, not without some tense moments and virile struggles.

COURT UPHOLDS KEYSTONE COMPANY.

Justice Lehman on Wednesday denied the application of Marie Dressler against the Keystone Film Company to restrain the defendant from exhibiting the motion picture, "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Defendant interposed the defense that the Keystone Film Company had been authorized by the terms of the contract to handle and exploit the motion picture, and the plaintiff claimed that this should not have been done without her consent. The decision held that the Keystone Film Company was justified in conveying the exhibition rights of the picture.

HIPPODROME TO SHOW "THE HEART OF MARYLAND."

After witnessing forty big feature films which were submitted as possible opening attractions for the inauguration of the policy of motion pictures and music at the big New York Hippodrome, Lee Shubert, of Messrs. Shuberts, decided that the Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation's production of Belasco's former stage success, "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter, was the most likely and most potent drawing card, and when the biggest theater in the world opens Saturday night, March 20, "The Heart of Maryland" will have honor position of the occasion.

Ten, fifteen, twenty-five and fifty-cent prices will prevail at the Hippodrome, and there wil be continuous performances from one to eleven p. m. "The Heart of Maryland" is a special release of the Metro corporation.

Harry A. Kaufman

A WIDE-AWAKE and popular film man is Harry A. Kaufman, manager of the Montreal branch of Famous Players Film Service. He has charge of that firm's interests in the Province of Quebec, and through his untiring and ceaseless efforts has placed Paramount films in an enviable position in his locality. Harry, as he is known to the Montreal moving picture fraternity, came to Canada from Rochester, N. Y., about five years ago. He started in the film game in the services of the Allens, who then handled the Universal program in Canada. Some two years later, Warner's Features entered the Canadian field, and Harry connected with those people for a short while. His next and latest connection were with his old employers, the Allens, who had in the meantime sold their Universal rights and acquired the agency for the Famous Players' productions.

Harry A. Kaufman.

Interviewed as to the effects the war has on the Canadian film industry, Mr. Kaufman was sanguine in his opinion that trade would experience no serious set-backs. On the contrary, Mr. Kaufman thought it would be a decided gain for the picture industry. "While there is a certain falling off just now in box office receipts," said Mr. Kaufman, "there is every indication that business will pick up materially during the next few months. In Montreal, during this period of depression, the public seeks the most amusement for the least money. No regular road shows have come to town for the last few months, and the legitimate houses have been compelled to resort to photoplays and stock at popular prices. This is the exhibitor's opportunity to win over those who formerly looked down upon the moving picture."

"SALOMY JANE" AT SING SING.

"Salomy Jane," the California Motion Picture Corporation's initial production, was shown on March 5 to 1,800 inmates of Sing Sing Penitentiary, at the request of the Golden Rule Brotherhood and with the consent of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne. The enthusiasm of the spectators was unbounded, especially at the sight of the stirring chase of the vigilantes, the love scenes of Miss Michelena and the fall of the hold-up men down the precipice, followed by the daring swimming which enables "Jane" and "The Man" to reach safety and "The Dawn of Another Day," meaning liberty and happiness. The picture was declared to be the most interesting and stirring of the photoplays exhibited to the prisoners in the past. The California Motion Picture Corporation's representatives were profusely thanked by "the delegates" and the prison officials for the treat offered the inmates.

PITTMAN OPENS EXCHANGE IN LOS ANGELES.

John I. Pittman, one of the pioneers in the motion picture business, opens a film exchange in Los Angeles in the Los Angeles Investment Building of Los Angeles, California. Mr. Pittman was for seven years in the exhibiting business and for the past two years has been in the producing business in that city and has now branched out in the exchange business and will be glad to hear from all producers who have features open for his territory. He has already lined up several big features and is negotiating for others. He is also handling world rights on large animal productions being produced by the Nash Motion Picture Company, and expects to represent other large manufacturers as distributing agent. Mr. Pittman has had experience in every line in the picture business and is well qualified to handle any deal that he may undertake in this line.

HOPP HADLEY, widely and popularly known in screenland as a press representative and scenario editor, has joined the staff of John C. Graham, the new president and general manager of the United Film Service, and is now occupying a busy corner in the company's offices at 126 West 46th street, New York. For the purposes of this yarn the many good qualities of Hopp will not be categorically enumerated. He is one of the capable and high-class men who have come into the business in the last few years. His father was the celebrated Col. H. H. Hadley, lawyer, journalist and lecturer, and two of his brothers are occupying pulpits in near-by parishes. Hopp, himself, is a graduate of New York University and is entitled to practice law if, at any unfortunate time, the film business should go "Blooey-blooey."

Hopp Hadley.

Hopp slipped into the "film game" in the first place by way of the Majestic-Reliance combination after those companies were secured by Messrs. Aitken and Ritchey. When the Mutual Film Corporation was organized Hadley continued to turn out stories for "Reel Life" and was for a time under the direction of Phillip Mindil, who then had charge of Mutual publicity.

Resigning from this position Mr. Hadley became editor and publicity manager for the Solax Company and Blache Features, in which position he continued until that concern somewhat curtailed its activities a few months ago. A period of free-lancing followed until he made the connection with the United as mentioned before.

Hopp Hadley is a member of the Screen Club and was the secretary of that organization during the first year or so of its existence. His return to active service in the film business will be welcomed all round.

HENRY McRAE PRODUCES AN AEROPLANE STORY.

The most sensational aeroplane drama which the Universal has prepared in some time will shortly be released. Henry McRae, director of the 101-Bison Company, engaged aviator Frank Stites to fight a battle in the air with another aviator, and the filming of the fight was accomplished from another aeroplane.

Los Angeles newspaper reporters and thousands of spectators witnessed the thrilling spectacle which duplicated in all essential details the daily duels in Flanders and France between the British, French and German aerial corps.

LIFE PHOTO FILM CORPORATION COMPLETES ITS NEW STUDIO.

The glass-enclosed studio, in addition to the studio heretofore operated by the Life Photo Film Corporation, of Grantwood, N. J., has been completed. Radical innovations devised by Mr. John Arnold, the head camera man of the Life Photo Company, have been installed in this new studio, such innovations being ballbearing trolleys running east and west, north and south, for the manipulation of the Cooper-Hewitt lights installed in such addition.

The length of the studio is 110 feet by 68 feet wide, and an unusual method of construction has been inaugurated so as to eliminate entirely all posts and obstructions, the roof of the studio being supported upon the same theory as the cantilever bridge.

The Commercial Motion Pictures Co., Inc., an allied corporation of the Life Photo Film Corporation, are rapidly progressing with their work in enlarging their laboratories.

REICHENBACK WITH METRO.

Harry L. Reichenback, press agent and motion picture feature promoter, more recently with the Bosworth Company, has joined the staff of the Metro Pictures Corporation as press representative.

"The Heart of Maryland."

Mrs. Leslie Carter Appears in the Tiffany Corporation's Six-Part Production of Famous Play.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

MRS. LESLIE CARTER and Belasco's "The Heart of Maryland" are inseparable in stage history. Reflections from the past of some twenty years ago bring back an inviting, highly colored picture of a woman with streaming hair swinging out from the belfry tower—a human muffler on a bell. Such was the artist's vision of Mrs. Carter in the big dramatic scene of the popular war play that enjoyed a long run at the Herald Square theater, New York, and later was performed in every city of consequence the country over.

When the Tiffany Corporation arranged to place the drama in pictures, the logical selection for the part of Maryland Calvert was Mrs. Carter, and she was engaged to head an exceptional company under the direction of Herbert Brenon. The new "Heart of Maryland" in six reels of spectacle, action and strong human drama will be shown at the New York Hippodrome and at large theaters in other cities. Concerning its popular appeal there can be no question.

The production pleases the eye to a remarkable degree because of a great number of finely photographed scenes, the artistic merits of which are emphasized by beautiful tones and tints. The picture has every semblance of accuracy in the furnishing of rooms, the equipment of the armies of the North and the South and the detailed presentation of life in time of war. Every man in the picture who wears a uniform—most of them do—looks like a soldier, and when the troops are brought into action it is like standing on a hillside and watching a conflict in the valley—charges and repulses, onslaughts of cavalry, an inferno of exploding shells and lines of men rushing this way and that over a battlefield that appears to extend to the horizon. Supplementing the spectacle offered in these scenes is that of the burning church, built for the occasion and reduced to ashes after Mrs. Carter—there is no doubling here—has swung back and forth in the belfry tower. The camera men under Director Brenon secured striking contrasts in photographing the conflagration that is viewed from all angles.

"The Heart of Maryland" is a difficult story to present clearly in pictures, owing to the complexity of the plot and the number of families divided against themselves. But once the characters have been fairly established, the meaning of the action is readily grasped. From first to last there is not a foot of padding—not one scene that seems superfluous. And the chief figures are so well played that they excite interest of their own account.

Scene from "The Heart of Maryland" (Tiffany).

Dramatically, the picture reaches its height with the struggle in the church between Mrs. Carter as Maryland and J. Farrell Macdonald as Colonel Thorpe, a character that he makes forceful and convincing without once resorting to melodramatic exaggeration. William E. Shay, in the quite dissimilar role of Alan Kendrick, is of equal value to the production, whereas Matt Snyder, in appearance and manner is unmistakably a Confederate general. Vivian Reed, Raymond Russell, Marcia Moore and Mr. Brenon are among others whose performances give strength to a photoplay of marked merit.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

" IN THE HEART OF THE WOODS" (American).

Vivian Rich, as Nance, and David Lythgoe, as Jack, play the leads in the American-Mutual drama, "In the Heart of the Woods."

Nance, beautiful daughter of old Ben Morgan, game warden, enters an abandoned cabin and falls fast asleep. Jack Daley, who lives there in order to forget his rejection by Miriam Stern, discovers her; but she makes and flees before he can question her.

Nance comes back and straightens the place up for him, then hides to watch. He is so busy reading a letter from Miriam that he notices no improvement, and when he leaves, Nance musses things up again in anger. Hearing the noise he returns and Nance rages against Miriam's picture. At first he is angry, then he soothes her. Running home Nance confides her troubles to her pet rabbit which Jack shoots the next day in blind disappointment over Miriam's marriage.

Nance weeps, but is somewhat appeased when Jack gives her his dog. "If you ever need me send the dog," he writes. That night, when her father dies, she decides to forgive and tells the dog to get Jack. So the two lovers are happily reunited.

TO MAKE ADVERTISING PICTURES.

A recent development of the moving picture business in the West is the organization of the Gillette-Runyan Advertising Company in Kansas City for the purpose of manufacturing and displaying motion picture advertising. The company has taken extensive quarters in the Manhattan Building, with general offices, workrooms and studio. The actual work of giving life, movement and human interest to general advertising is now being carried on.

The Kansas City company purposes organizing state companies, and negotiations are now under way in a number of states to establish active organizations. In this manner the outlet for the stock films would be largely increased and the ability to serve sectional or national advertisers also enhanced.

The officers of the Kansas City company are Charles Gillette, president, who has been engaged in the advertising business for the past six years in Kansas City; Arthur L. Runyan, of Waterloo, Iowa, vice-president, who is the originator of the motion picture ad and organized the first companies devoted to this business in Waterloo, Iowa, and the second in Chicago; J. J. Brown, treasurer, who has had a great deal of practical experience in the manufacturing end of the business, having for several years produced films for weekly services; Frank Markward, secretary, a commercial newspaper and advertising writer of twenty years' experience, who will have charge of the copy department. Mr. Brown will conduct the manufacturing department. Mr. Runyan will manage the extension plans.

ITALA FEATURE RELEASED.

The second "Cabiria Stars" production is now ready for shipment by the Itala Film Company of America. It is called "The Serpent" and was written specially for the screen by Dante Testa, the prominent Italian author and dramatist.

Archimedes, the grand old man of "Cabiria," is the principal character in the new offering. Two new juvenile stars are also introduced. "The Incendiary," whose wonderful acting in "The Palace of Flames," one of the past releases so well remembered, is seen in "The Serpent" as the wine-bibbling accomplice of the title character.

A well defined plot is carried to a successful climax by this clever stock company while the photographic and scenic qualities of the picture are fully up to the recognized Itala standard.

ALLIANCE HOUSE ORGAN.

The latest addition to the numerous "house organs" published by film concerns is "Alliance Film Topics," published by the Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston, which controls the Alliance Program in New England.

The new publication, which will be issued weekly, will make its first appearance on March 20. It will consist of eight pages, and it is intended by Herman Rifkin, the head of the Boston house, to use this as the first salvo of his advertising campaign, which will later include the various trade journals devoted to the picture industry.

"MA'S GIRLS" (Selig).

"Ma's Girls," a Selig western drama, in two reels, released Monday, March 29th, written and directed by Tom Mix, a pictureplay out of the ordinary. While it retains western atmosphere, "Ma's Girls" is away from the beaten and stereotyped pathway of many western productions, and contains an unusual plot with an unusual ending. Instead of the cowboy assuming the leading role, "Ma," who loves her two daughters, is the real heroine of the plot.

There are a number of exciting situations, one of which is where "Rose" ropes the gambler and drags him by her horse across a ford. "Ma" leads the sheriff's posse, who go after the renegades who have captured the two girls. Ma kills the gambler in a spectacular fight. Tom Mix, Louella Maxam and others are featured. There is excitement and interest in every foot of this two-reel Pictureplay.

"THE BLESSED MIRACLE" (Lubin).

Harry Chandlee has here written a beautiful story which, with a strong cast, has evolved a photoplay that will appeal to the emotional mind. George and Gail Bowman are an admirable couple, but after five years find themselves childless and in consequence drifting apart. A clever girl friend comes into their lives and with ingenious cunning, weaves her wiles around the husband until a separation threatens. Then comes the blessed miracle. The wife realizes that a great happiness is coming to her and writes the joyful news to her husband, who is traveling. The letter is suppressed by the siren, but fate brings the truth to the husband and a realization of a perfect future of happiness is realized.

Ethel Clayton plays the wife, Joseph Kaufman the husband, and Rosetta Brice in the unthankful role of the wicked woman gives an admirable piece of acting. It is a three-reel picture mounted with all the advantages of the Lubin Home Studio.

NEW $20,000,000 MYSTERY POSTER NOVEL IDEA.

That the Thanhouser Syndicate never neglects the trade-aid so essential to the exhibitor is clearly illustrated by the new and novel line of paper this company is getting out in conjunction with the new serial The $20,000,000 Mystery. From the inception of this picture it was decided to give the exhibitor a new line of paper far superior to any picture paper produced. Accordingly, arrangements were made with George Peters, who is probably the best-known poster artist in the country, to do the sketches for this "Thriller." Peters, it will be remembered, established a new era in posters when he entered the moving picture field, as it was he who first deviated from the old way of taking a still picture and making it do the work as a subject for a poster. His striking use of colors and the sensational manner in which he plays up his action without deviating from the subject in hand has made his signature to "GP" on posters stand for something and the exhibitor has come to know this as a sign of quality.

A striking example of novelty in the poster line is shown in the new six-sheet of the Thanhouser made up in conjunction with episode seventeen of The $20,000,000 Mystery. The poster, contrary to the usual six-sheet, is not made up of one subject, but instead has a grouping of six heads representing the stars in the production, each head occupying the space of one sheet. The artistic and striking arrangement of these heads of James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham, Sidney Bracy, Frank Farrington, and Mary Elizabeth Forbes, form a layout which is distinctly original and unique.

Another good feature of this striking poster is the fact that it can be used for all the succeeding episodes of the Mystery, as it applies to the whole series as well as the current release.

GENTZ AND McKINNEY START PRESS BUREAU.

Will. T. Gentz has resigned as director of publicity and advertising manager of the United Film Service, to promote interest in the production of a new European operetta, "A Modern Eve," which is projected for an all summer run on Broadway by John Cort, Harry Askin and William Norris. Whenever Mr. Gentz is not busy making the remains of the late Mr. Webster squirm in his search for adjectives with which to herald the new production, he will meet all who would come within the radius of the great public eye at his new publicity headquarters, 716 Longacre Building, where he and Joseph A. McKinney, remembered to fame as the associate of George D. Perkins in promoting the Roosevelt Progressive campaign, have ensconced themselves to jointly practise the fine art of press agentry.

"ANCESTRY" (American).

In the two-part picture drama, "Ancestry," the American film Mfg. Co. have introduced some delightful exterior scenes in fac simile of magnificent Italian estates. To secure the necessary settings, Director Otto kept his men busy a month collecting furniture and statuary sufficiently antique and massive to truly reproduce the furnishings of a ducal palace.

FRITZI SCHEFF IN "PRETTY MRS. SMITH."

THE Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, who several months ago announced its advent in the motion picture field in association with Bosworth, Inc., offers as its initial release, Fritzi Scheff, the noted star of the legitimate stage, in "Pretty Mrs. Smith," a film adaptation of the recent success at the Casino theater, New York City.

This is the first performance of the well-known Fritzi before the motion picture camera and, according to reports received from the Coast, promises to soon establish her among the prominent screen artists of the country.

No expense has been spared to make this a memorable picture, and particular attention is directed to the staging of the scenes, which are in every way realistic. The trip to Africa, the ocean liner, docks, ocean views, dancing parties on board ship, and some exquisite moonlight scenes are offered in this production. Miss Scheff worked for days at a fashionable country club, getting interior and porch views, and some excellent pictures on the golf links. The scenes of "Pretty Mrs. Smith," in a hotel seeking repose, were made in the magnificent Hotel Alexandria. Throughout the play the illustrious Fritzi exhibits a wonderful array of artistic costumes, specially designed for this role, and a crystal robe worn in a fireside scene will attract no end of attention and admiration.

Fritzi Scheff in the title role is supported by an all-star cast. Owen Moore, who enacts the role of the third husband of "Pretty Mrs. Smith," is a popular artist and a favorite in the screen world. Louis Bennison, late star of the "Damaged Goods" company, and Forest Stanley, leading man of the Burbank theater, make their initial appearance in photoplay work in this play, and Leila Bliss, who plays the part of Letitia, was in the original company which produced "Pretty Mrs. Smith" on the dramatic stage, in which company Miss Scheff also created the role. "Pretty Mrs. Smith" will be released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in association with Bosworth, Inc., on the Paramount Program, March 29.

"A LESSON FROM THE FAR EAST."

Ben Wilson has introduced some real Oriental "atmosphere" in "A Lesson from the Far East," a two-reel human interest drama to be released under the Rex brand on April 4. One of the scenes in the play called for a Chinese missionary school, another for a living room in a Chinese home of the better sort, and still a third scene for a Chinese garden with a temple in the background.

Mr. Wilson enlisted the services of a very business-like Scene from "A Lesson from the Far East" (Rex).

Chinese student at Columbia University who is working his way through college. This student went to Chinatown and brought up with him three disreputable looking Chinese tong men who looked like fit subjects for a Chinese missionary to redeem.

The tong men didn't know what it was all about except that they were to have their pictures taken. For a time they suspected that it was some police trick to identify them, but the Chinese student assured them that everything was all right and that Ben Wilson was not a "flatty" or plainclothesman.

Perhaps the most expensive set in the picture was that erected in New Jersey. Mr. Wilson consulted a New York firm of architects which specializes in period architecture and a Chinese temple was constructed in the woods not far from Fort Lee, N. J. Stone dragons and other images were procured from an antique stone dealer who has his shop in West Twenty-eighth street near Broadway.

The costuming in the drama is especially noteworthy, many gowns of Chinese manufacture and of the finest texture being used to robe the players. The interior settings are faultless in the adherence to Chinese traditions. Dorothy Phillips supports Mr. Wilson.

The play tells the story of a white missionary to the Chinese who returns to America but becomes disillusioned with the "culture" and morals of the West and returns to his little Chinese sweetheart whom he has left behind.

AN INSTRUCTIVE COMEDY.

Beside being a real laugh provoking comedy of more than ordinary merit, "Competition," a single reel production, of the American Film Mfg. Co., has an educational value as well. According to the story the city lover of a pretty farmer's daughter, by becoming a competing dairyman and through the use of modern methods and sanitation, puts such a crimp in her father's business, that he is willing to give his daughter's hand in marriage in order to save himself from bankruptcy. Miss Vivian Rich as the farmer's daughter and David Lythgoe as the disguised farmer fill the leading roles.

"THE LAST CARD" (Majestic).

"The Last Card," a Majestic two-reeler in the Mutual program, unravels an interesting murder mystery and is ably interpreted by a cast including Billie West, Augustus Carney and Frank Bennett. The scenario is by Will E. Ellis. The production was made by Lloyd Ingraham at the Hollywood studios.

Frank Barker, who works for his uncle as a chemist, continually quarrels with the old man. Writing to a friend he complains of being badly treated and says sometimes his uncle makes him so angry he could kill the old fellow. Failing to find a stamp he leaves the letter unmailed. The next day his uncle fires him. The old man, careless about chemicals, gets some on a sandwich and staggers into the drawing room. Falling, he injures his head just as Frank rushes in, mortar and pestle in hand. The old negro cook discovers them. Everything points to Frank's guilt. The letter clinches the evidence, and Frank is arrested.

His sweetheart, however, believes in him and hires a scientific detective to unravel the mystery. This detective establishes that the old man died of poison, not from a blow, and Frank is freed and goes straight to the arms of his sweetheart.

MAKING A KRITERION KOMIC KARTOON.

Few people realize the time and labor expended in making animated cartoons. The Pyramid Film Company, which produces the Kriterion Komic Kartoon, released through the Kriterion Program, employs four men in the drawing and photographing of about five hundred feet of animated cartoons a week. Harry Palmer, the celebrated international cartoonist, heads this department, and is ably assisted by Clyde Spencer, formerly cartoonist of the Denver Post and Republican. William Reinhart, who has had long experience as an expert cameraman, is to be credited with the splendid photography shown in these releases. When you stop to figure that there are sixteen pictures to a foot of film, and in most instances a separate drawing is required for each of these sixteen pictures, you will readily understand the speed required to turn out five hundred feet of finished cartoon a week.

"JEALOUSY" (Thanhouser).

"Jealousy" is a one-reel Mutual drama written by Arthur H. Ashley, the well known Thanhouser leading man. Mr. Ashley also takes the leading role in this production which recounts a young husband's meeting with a friend. Just one drink made hubby forget an engagement with his wife, and the two theater tickets he had bought for her. While wifey forgives him she makes him swear he'll never do it again. Peggy Burke plays the part of the wife.

A MONSTER POSTER FRAME.

The Theater Specialty Mfg. Co., of Cleveland, have just issued a new folder illustrating their Lobby Frames and Brass Fixtures. One of the engravings shows a massive stand that weighs 800 pounds when crated for shipment. It is a veritable Jumbo, taking three sheets on each side. Friends of President G. W. Armstrong will be sorry to learn that he had the misfortune to lose two fingers from his right hand recently through an accident in the factory.

"PATSY ON A YACHT" (Lubin).

As the story goes on things are righting themselves for Patsy. His luck seems to have changed and Sykesy and old man Grace are getting what is coming to them for their persecution of young Bolivar. Encouraged by the vows of the faithful little Jane he again looks for work and secures a berth on a yacht belonging to Mrs. Sykes' brother. Tilly having married Sykesy is now a member of the family and certainly makes life miserable for all by her awful temper. The family all board the yacht for a pleasure trip and Patsy forces Jane on board. The party gets off at a small island and eat lunch. There they meet a clergyman, who wishes a lift back to town. Just as the yacht is moving off Grace and Sykesy fall into the water, and while they are being rescued Patsy and Jane are married by the accommodating clergyman. This is a big number of the series, employing the full cast and very picturesque in atmosphere.

"THE SHADOWS OF A GREAT CITY" (Metro).

In "The Shadows of a Great City" the Popular Plays and Players Company has utilized, for productional purposes, every point of interest, historically and scenically, in Greater New York. In the first reel, a perfect view of the skyline of lower Manhattan is given as the background for an intense struggle that takes place on top of a tall building.

Scene from "The Shadows of a Great City" (Metro).

Blackwell's Island, the East River, Brooklyn Bridge, Cooper Union, Five Points, Mulberry Bend, Twenty-third Street Ferry, Grant's Tomb, Central Park and Longacre Square were all used for locations, and the prison cells at Blackwell's Island were given over to the directors and used for several tense situations.

Adelaide Thurston, one of the best known touring stars, and Thomas Jefferson, famous for his "Rip Van Winkle," appear in the two leading roles. "The Shadows of a Great City" will be released by the Metro Pictures Corporation April 5. It is in five parts and contains two hundred odd scenes.

"A BARBER-OUS AFFAIR" (MinA).

This one reel MinA comedy deals with the rivalries of two competing barber shops. Harry LaPearl, as boss of one of these emporiums, again gives his many admirers a chance for a full reel of laughs.

Harry and George were friends; but when George makes love to Harry's manicurist the friendship ends and George is ejected by foot power from Harry's shop. The manicurist objects to this strenuous treatment and she and George plan a rival shop with the determination to down Harry. In order to do this, they hire attractive women barbers who are to act as decoys to bring in the masculine trade.

The struggle is long and fierce between the two shops, but Harry and his assistant finally win out by dressing themselves as women and securing positions in their rival's shop. Here they raise such a row that George's shop is disgraced and all his co-workers leave him to go with Harry.

Scene from "A Barber-ous Affair" (MinA).

This picture is full of screaming situations and is one of the funniest that has ever been produced by the MinA Company.

To Repeal State Censorship

Bill Presented to Pennsylvania Legislature to Do Away with State Censorship on Score of Economy, Lack of Necessity and Unpreparedness—Picture Men Think That National Board Can Do the Work Properly—Color Line Bill.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE fight on the state censorship of moving pictures was opened last week when Representative A. C. Stein, of Pittsburgh, introduced a bill to do away with the censorship in Pennsylvania altogether, assigning economy, lack of necessity and the unpreparedness of the censors as a reason for presenting the bill.

This measure has the support of prominent motion picture men of this State, in which fight the Pittsburgh Screen Club is taking an active part. Stein says he will make a most determined fight for the repeal of the present law.

According to the motion picture men, the National Board of Censors is the only body that does this work properly, and as it has the first "look" at pictures, should be taken as the final authority in a general sense as to the fitness of a picture story. Especially in Pennsylvania, according to Stein, there has been much done in the way of censoring pictures by the State that apparently pleased no one and put the exhibitors and producers to big expense. He said the State censorship has been a handicap from the time the board was established. Many prominent men in Pittsburgh have taken the side of the exhibitors in this fight. Stein declared that there would be no State censors when the Legislature is over.

Representative Stein also introduced a bill to give the negroes of Pennsylvania equal rights with the whites. This bill, if passed, would make discrimination in theaters, restaurants, trains or other public places a thing of the past and, if allowed, punishable by law. Stein's district includes the First, Third and Fifth wards and in the latter two, in the Wylie and Center avenue sections and in Arthur street there is a large negro population. This bill has appeared in Harrisburg before, but has never been able to attract sufficient votes to become a law.

EUROPEAN TRAVELOG POPULAR

On the wings of neutrality and with eyes that recognized no battle lines, Pittsburghers last Monday night visited England and Belgium and then went to Austria-Hungary and Germany with the aid of Dwight L. Elmendorf and his travel-talk on those countries. The talk was given at the Carnegie Music Hall. Every tale of adventure and each historical legend was aptly illustrated with motion pictures and stereopticon views and every anecdote the lecturer told was given a keener point through the same medium.

METRO FILM RELEASES.

The recently organized Metro Film Corporation of which Richard A. Rowland, of Pittsburgh, is president, reports that they have nearly perfected its plans and, it is said, will begin releasing one weekly subject March 29.

The Clark & Rowland interests will control the bookings on all Metro pictures in nine states. Offices will be in Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis, with Joseph S. Skirboll as general manager of the three branches. The Pittsburgh office will remain in charge of J. E. Davis, the Chicago office will be in charge of C. W. Leist and the St. Louis office has not been put in charge of anyone as yet, but it is likely that a Pittsburgh man will be sent there to manage.

LYRIC AT BUTLER, ACCEPTS UNION SCALE.

Several conferences with Mr. Carlton, manager of the Lyric Playhouse in Butler, Pa., during the past week probably accounts for the settlement of the union difficulty which Local No. 343, I. A. T. S. E. had against that theater for the past two weeks. Mr. Carlton stated that he would sign the scale of the I. A. T. S. E., and in all probabilities this house will be run soon by union workmen.

PITTSBURGHERS ON SCREEN.

Educational Film Company's "A Pittsburgh Romance" Has Several Prominent Local Faces.

It is not unlikely that a great many Pittsburghers will find themselves on the screen at the Grand Opera House when the "Made in Pittsburgh" photoplay, "A Pittsburgh Romance," is shown. Camera men are now busy in many streets, a few shops and several picturesque points, having taken quite a few snaps of persons prominent in civic, social and business circles.

Under the title, "A Pittsburgh Romance," this story has been written by Grayce Druitt Latus. It has local setting, tone and actors and actresses of note. Miss Gertrude Rosenstock, the first baby of the Woman's Club of Pittsburgh, is the leading lady. Members of this club have set a day when they will see their protege make her debut in the world of motion pictures.

Ewing Rafferty, whose well established reputation as playwright and actor has excited great admiration, will be leading man.

The officers of the Woman's Club of Pittsburgh, Mrs. John H. Armstrong, president of the Congress of Woman's Clubs of Western Pennsylvania; Mrs. J. Christopher Lang of the "Made in America" League and several suffrage and civic workers will have a part on the screen.

A number of enterprising business firms of the city are co-operating with the producers of the play, the Educational Film Company, and a successful presentation of this reel in a large number of high-class motion picture houses of Western Pennsylvania is already assured.

S. HENRY PINCUS DEAD.

Amusement Man and Inventor Dies in Houston, Texas—Things That He Had Accomplished.

S. Henry Pincus, a native of Philadelphia, and who was identified with various amusement interests in the city, died recently in Houston, Texas. He was buried from the home of his brothers, Walter and Florian Pincus, 1334 North Fifteenth street, Philadelphia.

Mr. Pincus was born in this city 56 years ago, and the earlier part of his life was devoted to mechanical invention. The folding opera chair, with the attached hat holder, was one of his products, and he held the first patents on machines for intermittent light transmission, which was the basis for the present moving picture machine. In fact, George Burnham, then the head of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and Mr. Pincus were developing a machine of this sort when the patents were issued to another man for a similar bit of mechanism.

In the amusement world Mr. Pincus was first associated with the late Dion Boucicault and later re-established the elder Sothern. He built the Winter Circus at Broad and Cherry streets, and with the late William J. Thompson, as the financial backer, created Washington Park on the Delaware.

He later went to New York and became associated with the Keith interests. It was during this production of "Mamzelle Champagne" at the Madison Square Roof Garden that Harry Thaw shot Stanford White. Mr. Pincus was an Elk and a member of the Pen and Pencil Club.

MRS. THOMAS EDISON OPPOSED TO SUNDAY SHOWS

West Orange Social Leader, Wife of Inventor, Believes in No Sunday Amusements.

Taking a stand against some of the most prominent welfare workers in the community of West Orange, N. J., Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, in her capacity of social leader, has put her foot down on all Sunday amusements. Although the First Ward Improvement Association has inaugurated a custom of holding Sunday evening moving picture shows for the benefit of the poor, and has gained the support of a large part of the population, she is unalterably opposed to amusement in any form on Sunday. Mrs. Edison is president of the West Orange Improvement Association. Her influence has swung the town improvement association around to the point of view that the practice of having amusements in any shape or form on Sunday must be discontinued.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

A new air of prosperity has been noticeable very recently around the office of the World Film Corporation, 1314 Vine street, due to the fact that Arthur C. Melville has appeared with a new stick pin in the form of a golden horseshoe studded with ice.

Dr. J. W. Harrigan, the proprietor of the theater, gave the use of his house for the benefit.

Frank Powell's understanding of modern photoplay devices helps to make "A Fool There Was," which was recently played at the Locust theater, West Philadelphia, one of the most stimulating motion pictures of recent months.

Federal Theaters Company

New Company Chartered in Delaware to Operate a Chain of Theaters—Will Be a Vigorous Force in Moving Picture Field of This Neighborhood—Offices Opened in Reading, Pa.—Prominent Picture Men at Head of New Company.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

A CHARTER was recently granted by the State of Delaware to the Federal Theaters Company, the purpose and object of which corporation is to establish and operate a chain of first-class motion picture theaters, locating one or more in every town and city of importance within such territorial limits as will produce the best results. The company has been organized by three prominent business men of Reading, Pa., who will act in the following capacities: Frank A. Gould, president; J. G. Hansen, vice-president and secretary; Harrison T. Kern, treasurer.

With the inception of this company, a new and vigorous force wil be introduced into the field of motion pictures. Mr. Gould, president of the new concern, is now owner and manager of the Rex theater, 1731 Cotton street, Reading. He made his initial appearance in the moving picture industry three years ago and has become popular, not only with the patrons of his house, but with the exhibitors of the State. For the past two years he has been publicity representative for the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania. Prior to his picture career Mr. Gould was a member of the reportorial staff of the Reading Eagle. He resides at 223 Douglas street.

Another officer of the company, who has had a vast amount of experience in the motion picture business is Mr. Hansen, of the Gem theater, Tenth and Spring streets. He is a conservative business man and will serve the company as vice-president and secretary. Mr. Hansen is secretary of the Reading Local, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and formerly held a similar position with the State organization. His knowledge of the business in general will be a valuable asset to the corporation. He resides at 419 Oley street.

Mr. Kern, proprietor of the Reading Railway Company restaurant at the main depot, is treasurer of the company. He enjoys a wide acquaintance among the traveling public, as well as employees in all departments of the railway company. Mr. Kern resides at 413 Douglas street.

The promotion of the concern is in the hands of George L. Boynton, who has been a resident of Reading for a large number of years, while John A. Keppelman is counsel for the company. Offices for the company have been opened in the Baer building, Reading.

STROUDSBURGH ATTRACTS NEW PRODUCING COMPANY

Group of Picture Men May Buy Site for Manufacturing Plant in Pennsylvania Mountains.

Moving picture film companies are fast becoming acquainted with the fact that the scenery of the hills, mountains and valleys in the counties of Monroe and Stroudsburg is especially adapted for their use in various pictures and are largely putting the above knowledge into practical use. These counties are also especially convenient as a mecca for summer visitors from New York, Philadelphia and Scranton.

At a special meeting of the Industrial Committee of the Stroudsburg Industrial Club, which was recently held, five representatives of a proposed moving picture concern were present and presented a plan to locate their studio in the borough.

The men were Arthur L. Aylesworth and L. N. Rosenbaum, of New York City; E. L. Drew and Louis Kriasik, of Brooklyn, and S. Hill, Jr., of Newton, N. J. These gentlemen, with about twenty-five others, spent nearly two years in the Canadian Rockies and Alaska, where they made a complete series of films. They have refused to sell it, due to the fact that they expect to produce other films and wish to use this film, "Hunting Big Game in the Canadian Rockies and Alaska," as a headliner. To all appearances the men have considerable financial backing and this is the proposition which they placed before the committee. They desire a piece of land not smaller than 150 feet square and a building erected at a cost of about $25,000. This building is to take up about 100 square feet of ground besides the room for offices, etc.

Those in back of the movement have the papers ready to file at the county seat and forward to the Governor asking for a charter as soon as a location is secured. The company will issue stock to the amount of $225,000, $125,000 to be common stock and $100,000 preferred stock. This stock has all been subscribed for and as soon as the location is determined and the building erected the firm will be ready to start operations.

"THE ETERNAL CITY" SHOWN

The first presentation anywhere in the world of the photoplay made from Hall Caine's novel, "The Eternal City," was recently given at the Chestnut Street opera house before an invited audience, which occupied every seat in the theater. This initial showing, which was one of the noteworthy events of motion picture activity, was witnessed by a large group of New York theatrical men, including Daniel Frohman, who made a brief introductory address; Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, which company made the picture; Edwin S. Porter, producing manager of the organization, and Hugh Ford, the stage manager.

FELT AMUSEMENT COMPANY TO BUILD NEW THEATER.

Announcement has been made that the Felt Amusement Company, who now own and conduct the Locust Moving Picture theater, at 52d and Locust streets, West Philadelphia, have acquired the property at 1410 North Broad street, adjoining the Mercantile Club, and that they will erect on that property a picture theater to be known as the La Blanche.

It is intended to start construction about the first of April, and it is also hoped that the theater will be ready for opening to the public on or about September 1. The new playhouse, which will have a capacity of about 1,000 people, will be thoroughly modern in every respect and will possess a number of features, not the least of which will be a permanent fountain as a part of the stage decorations. The theater will have a frontage on Broad street of 37 feet and an auditorium and stage depth of 200 feet, making it one of the largest playhouses of its kind in the uptown section.

SIG LUBIN IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

Four persons were injured, a grocery window smashed and an automobile wrecked recently when a light car, driven by Miss Clara Hall, 20 years of age, of 1415 South 29th street, struck the rear of the touring machine of Sigmund Lubin, the motion picture pioneer, and plunged through the window of a grocery store, at the northwest corner of 20th and Somerset streets. All of the injured were occupants of the smaller car.

Pictures That Disturb

Censorship Advocates in Louisville, Ky., Stirred Up by Showing of the "Frank Case" Picture—Another Instance of What Surely Follows Certain Kind of Offering—Prize Fight Films Did Same Thing—Business Doesn't Profit by Them.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ACTING Mayor J. William Miller, of Louisville, recently issued orders to H. Watson Lindsey, Chief of Police, instructing the latter to see that the film known as the "Frank Case" is not exhibited to the public of the city of Louisville, on the grounds that the film is contrary to good morals. The picture was to have been shown during the second week of March at the Masonic theater, and would probably have been shown in several of the smaller theaters later on. Mr. Miller stated that he was requested to take this action by the Board of Trustees of the Masonic Home; C. C. Stoll and C. J. Meddis, president and secretary, respectively, of the Men's Federation; the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, chairman of the Vice Commission; Mrs. Helm Bruce, president of the Woman's Club, and a number of other prominent citizens of the city. He said they had called upon him and asked that the pictures should not be shown in the city. This order stirred up a good deal of interest in moving picture circles as it is the first time in months that any movement has been started or any strong feeling of opposition shown to any moving picture scheduled in the city. A great deal of opposition was shown a few years ago when there was some talk of booking the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures in Louisville, and the authorities took action on the matter at that time. The Masons of Kentucky own the Masonic theater.

"MAKING NEGRO LIVES COUNT."

Motion pictures of negro life, illustrating the hopelessness of old plantation times as well as the new efficiency made possible by the industrial training at Hampton Institute will be shown in an entertainment, "Making Negro Lives Count," exhibited at the Masonic theater Tuesday night, March 16. The pictures will be interpreted by plantation melodies, to be sung by the Hampton Singers, a quartet which has won distinction in the large cities of the North and East. Brief addresses on the work of Hampton Institute will be given by Dr. Hollis, B. Frissell and the Rev. John Little. Prof. O. L. Reid, principal of the Girls' High School, will preside. The program will be divided into three parts. The first will include scenes from the old life—ramshackle cabins, ragged children in the sunlight and the sad old mule dragging by the doorway where the negro woman washes. The second group of pictures will illustrate the work done at Hampton Institute. The last pictures will show how Hampton graduates carry the message to their own people. The plantation songs to be sung are those which show "the soul of the black folk" in its varied moods of wonder, weird despair and irresistible laughter. The pictures were produced at Hampton, Va., and naturally appeal strongly to Southern people. A large list of patronesses has been made up, among whom are most of the elite of Louisville's society. The show will undoubtedly be one of the biggest things in the motion picture line ever handled in this city.

MILK FILM AND LECTURE AT KEITH'S.

Under the auspices of the Babies' Milk Fund Association and the Board of Health Miss Una Clayton, star and author of the comedy "Milk," gave a free lecture at 11 o'clock in the morning at B. F. Keith's theater. The subject of the lecture was "Clean Milk and Baby Welfare." Motion pictures were shown in conjunction with the lecture and the combination brought out the strong points of the arguments. Mayor Buschemeyer and Dr. W. Ed Grant, city health officer, saw a special run of the pictures beforehand and gave Miss Clayton and her players in their "milk" playlet their hearty indorsement.

LINEMEN'S SAFETY FIRST FILMS.

The Employes' Club, of the Louisville Gas and Electricity Company, recently held a special meeting at which the topic was "Safety First." Moving pictures showing the dangers encountered by linemen were exhibited. The film showed the results of the carelessness which grows more prevalent as the linesman becomes more familiar with his work, and in addition a number of slides showing methods of safeguarding workmen as well as the public were depicted. The Louisville Railway Company and the two telephone companies were represented at the meeting, and more than three hundred people attended. The film shown was prepared by the National Electric Light Association and is being used for similar work all over the country, with excellent results. A number of high officials of the various companies represented at the meeting made addresses concerning the adoption of "Safety First" methods.

FIRE AND EXCITEMENT, BUT LITTLE DAMAGE.

Patrons of the Columbia theater, 211 South Fourth street, were watching a thrilling Western film, when suddenly there was a flash of light and the house was filled with the odor of burning film. Owing to the rain the crowd was small and only about one hundred persons were present. A rush was made for the doors, but the employes had them thrown wide open in time to avoid any crush and no one was injured. Emil Greenberg, who was in the operating room, was on the far side of the burning film, and was forced to jump over it in order to reach the door. Returning with a chemical fire extinguisher he put out the flame before the fire department arrived. About 2,000 feet of film were on the three reels and the entire film was a loss. Other damage consisted of burned out wiring. Miss Emma Hall, the ticket seller, became somewhat alarmed when an usher told her the building was on fire, but she had the night's receipts in a canvas bag before she left her post. Fred Sheldon, manager of the theater, said the loss was trivial, and that the theater would open just as soon as a few minor rearrangements were made.

NEW BROADWAY SOON TO OPEN.

The latest and undoubtedly one of the most beautiful motion picture houses in the city is nearing completion and will be ready to open shortly. This theater is the New Broadway, located at Shelby street and Broadway. W. G. Unglaub, of the Modern Building Company, general contractors in charge of the work, says that as far as he is concerned the theater will be ready to open on schedule time, which is Easter Sunday, April 4. One commendable fact about this theater is that it has been erected without a strike or tie-up of any kind on the work. In addition to the regular moving picture screen it will have the largest stage of any moving picture house in the city, that is, taking into consideration houses constructed expressly for the moving picture business. A good deal of expense has gone to installing a perfect ventilating system.

SHORT LOUISVILLE ITEMS.

The Novelty Amusement Company which recently sold its theater to M. Switow, has published a notice stating that the company is winding up its affairs and that all parties having claims against the company are requested to present them on or before March 15.

Ralph Studevyn and Mr. Porter, representing the new Criterion Film Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., were in Louisville on Sunday, March 7. An agreement was made with L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, whereby Mr. Studevyn made a run of special pictures before an audience composed of nearly all of the prominent moving picture men of Louisville and several from out in the state.

Dr. J. B. Adams, of Danville, Ky., opened a new motion picture house recently in the Danville Auditorium. The Danville orchestra furnished the music for the initial performance, which drew a large attendance.

The Pathescope Company of America, recently staged the third of a series of entertainments given for the school children of Louisville. The entertainment was held at Baldwin's Hall, one of the large music studios of Louisville. The film program is being changed entirely between entertainments. The show is given absolutely free of charge and the film program consists of splendid reels on a variety of interesting subjects which appeal to children. The entertainments are being held partly through the courtesy of the Baldwin Piano Company.

PICTURES FILLED THE BILL.

Nemaha, Iowa, School Finds Ideal Entertainment to Keep "Box" Party Going.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

THE box social program—traditionally a boresome affair—is now made interesting by moving pictures.

Whenever a rural or village school needed some new books for the library it would announce a box social. All the girls in the neighborhood prepared attractive boxes of lunch, placing their names inside on a slip of paper. These were auctioned off, the boys bidding desperately, and generally blindly, against each other, in hope of eating supper with some favorite damsel. The revenue was the main thing, but there had to be some kind of a program, generally a necessary evil, to keep the crowd together until all possible bidders could reach the schoolhouse.

The opera house at Nemaha was used recently by the Nemaha school for one of these affairs. The feature of the program was moving pictures of school life at the Iowa State College at Ames. It was more than a novelty. The films were entertaining. They reached the very class of young people from which the state school wants to recruit its students. They showed the old-fogey taxpayers (surely Nemaha has them) that the money spent on the state school is not going for foolishness. A new interest was created for the young people in a more-or-less pleasing festivity which threatened to decline.

EXHIBITOR DAN WILLIAMSON SET UPON.

Dan L. Williamson, proprietor of the Lyric theater, of Jackson, Tenn., and lessee of the Marlowe theater, was recently attacked on the street in the rear of the East Chester street theater by negroes whose motive was robbery. An iron implement of some kind was used and Mr. Williamson was found later in the evening suffering from a fractured skull. He was removed to the Crook Sanatarium, where he is in a critical conditon. The negroes evidently imagined that he had a quantity of money with him, as the show had closed for the evening. The continual barking of a dog attracted attention to the spot where Mr. Williamson was found. No clue has been secured as to the perpetrators of the outrage. Mr. Williamson is a native of Cairo, Ill.

MOUNTAINS AND REVENUE MEN TO BE FILMED.

The mountain section of Eastern Tennessee with its traditions, romances and tragedies, is to be pictured in a series of moving pictures to be made by a film producer of the East. The United States government has consented to co-operate with the producers of the series by permitting the noted revenue raiding officers of the section to assist in producing the film. Revenue Agent Knox Booth has been advised that the department will permit his noted force of moonshine raiders to assist in making some of the pictures. W. H. Kilgore and W. H. Tyler, two of the celebrated raiders will become moving picture stars and will give practical demonstrations of the operations of federal officers in the wildcatting section. Miss Edith Stow, a successful writer of New York, will assist in producing the series.

The Crystal theater, of Nashville, recently exhibited the well known film called the "Photoplay Without a Name." This feature is somewhat of a novelty and has created a good deal of interest as the Moving Picture Contest Editor of the Universal Film Company of New York has offered a reward of $50 for the title.

Screens Near Street

Nashville, Tenn., Board of Commissioners Passes New Building Code Requirement—All New Theaters Must Place Screens Near Street—Operating Rooms Must Be Outside and to Rear of Auditoriums—Fireproof Doors Required in Projector Openings.

By D. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN accordance with a requirement of the new building laws, passed by the Board of Commissioners of Nashville, Tenn., machine booths in moving picture houses will hereafter be placed at the rear of the houses and the screen at the front. It is not required, however, that theaters established before these laws were passed, shall be rearranged so as to accord with provisions of Section 49 of the building core. This code is as follows: "Every theater, auditorium or room hereafter erected, remodeled or used for the purpose of operating a moving picture show shall be on the ground floor of the building in which it is located, and shall front the public highway and have ample means of exit at either end of the room in which the people congregate. The machine booth shall be located in the rear, outside of the main auditorium, or if the inspector deems practicable, it may be placed in a separate outside room or space with an integral wall of the building between this operating room and the main auditorium, and any openings therein shall have a door of fireproof construction and this door shall be kept closed during each performance."

EXHIBITORS IN SMALL TOWNS COMPLAIN OF SERVICE.

Say They Are Not Getting Fair Break with Tennessee Exchanges.

Exhibitors as well as operators in the rural districts of Tennessee are disappointed in the quality of film service which is being sent from some of the Tennessee film exchanges at this time. The smaller houses are compelled to secure cheap film service, but this "cheap service" does not necessarily mean no service at all.

An exhibitor recently stated that on one occasion a film came in just as the house was ready to open and it had to be placed on the machine without being run over ahead of time. The film was in such bad condition that it broke in eight places during the first run, and the operator had to stop and patch it before proceeding. Naturally he did not feel like holding up the show while he inspected the reel which should have been inspected at the exchange regardless of whether it rented for fifty cents a day or ten dollars per day. Not only do the exchanges in some instances fail to inspect closely, it is declared, but they are also very careless in shipping films out in time to get to the theater for the next day's show. The show man, in order not to have to pay additional rentals, is compelled to ship his show out at the wind-up of each day's business on the very first train. If the exchange fails to get a new set of films to him he is unable to open his house unless he happens to have a few odd films for emergency cases.

The rural houses are coming on steadily and in time will possess a vast power in the moving picture business. The rural house should be given good service and, it is urged, protected against delay just as far as it is in the power of the exchange to do so.

CHATTANOOGA DRUGGISTS AND BURGLAR FILM STORIES.

It has been suggested by druggists of Chattanooga, Tenn., following a number of drug store robberies, that burglar films shown in the moving picture houses may be partly responsible for the penchant that has been developed for drug store cash. It is stated that films showing burglars at work have a bad effect on the minds of young boys of the tougher element. Detectives and patrolmen have been working diligently on three drug store robberies that occurred in two nights, but have been unable to bring anything to light.

WANTS NO SUNDAY SHOWS EVEN FOR CHARITY

Cleveland, Tenn., Charity Organization Refuses to Sanction Sunday Shows Even Bearing Gifts.

An attempt was recently made at Cleveland, Tenn., to start Sunday motion picture shows to aid in charity work. However, some opposition has been encountered and it is said that a number of ministers severely condemned the show in spite of the fact that the film shown was the big production of the Bible story of "Sampson."

The past winter has been the hardest on the poor that has been experienced for many years and the associated charities have been unable to cope with the situation in spite of the fact that a number of large contributions were made to the fund. To meet this crisis two enterprising citizens conceived the brilliant plan of giving a religious motion picture show on Sunday afternoon at the Bohemia theater, and any contributions received to be given to the charity organization. In spite of the fact that snow was falling and the streets were full of slush, it is estimated that about 1,500 persons attended the theater, which shows that a good portion of the population is in favor of Sunday pictures. The reels were shown between the hours of 1 and 5 o'clock. No charge for admission was made, but a donation box was placed at the entrance to the theater. The entire proceeds of the afternoon were only $27.35. It developed later that the president of the charity institution had notified the treasurer not to accept the fund as the board did not approve of the way in which the money was raised. The treasurer was authorized to take the money and devote it to cases of emergency, but not under the auspices of the association.

A number of the most enterprising citizens were interviewed on the question of motion pictures on Sunday, being asked: "Would you be in favor of presenting on Sunday afternoons, in one or more of our theaters, Bible scenes, pictures moral and clean, for the benefit of the poor of our city?" The question was asked of ministers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, manufacturers, county officials and laborers, and it was found that only a small majority opposed the plan. The ministers were all opposed to the plan and a small majority of the lay members, while the non-membership of the churches were largely for the method. There were few who objected to the pictures or the use of the funds for the purpose indicated, but urged that the principal objection was that it was a bad precedent to establish, and that those who owned and entertained the public in these playhouses would take advantage of this enterprise to enhance their private interests.

The Monarch Film Company, of Memphis, Tenn., has made arrangements to furnish first release films to J. E. Powell, of Lewisburg, Ky., and H. C. Waddell, of Central City, Ky., who are opening a new house on Fourth street, in Owensboro, Ky. The management of the new theater selected a name for the house, but before announcing it a guessing contest is being held, free tickets will be given for all correct answers received.

The Small House Problem

Getting Features for the Small House Is Big Problem in Missouri and Elsewhere —Small Exhibitor Feels Demand for Pictures Mentioned by Newspapers— Affiliations Among Picture Men for Booking Big Offerings Is One Way Out.

Special to Moving Picture World by Kansas City News Service.

THE theaters out in the Missouri territory want features. They are just as up-to-date as the moving picture theaters in Kansas City, and film managers and booking agents that travel the territory no longer "think them behind the times," for every week the orders for more and better feature plays come into the office.

The day of the feature play is just in its dawning, and already it has done much damage to the stage, revolutionizing the city theaters and dividing them into two classes, the big, up-to-date theater and the little one-horse show. Theaters that formerly had four and five reels of pictures on their program of little one-act comedies have changed to the big four and five-part feature play and make a week's stand with it.

In the country a week's stand is a trifle too long, but in the average size town it can run at least two days and a reasonable reduction in the rental price will encourage the small theater manager to get the film for his patrons, for the exchange and the exhibitor will have to do less than one-half the shipping necessary for the four or five comedies each day. The patrons all over the territory are clamoring for the feature plays. They have tired of the little one-act laughs and want something better. It seems to be a field that might repay special cultivation. Theater affiliations among small houses for booking features and state rights pictures are effecting this purpose in several places, but it is probable that an exchange man with a touch of organizing genius might solve it and make himself strong.

GREEN STAMPS IN KANSAS CITY.

The National Freemovie Ticket Co. Inc., Chicago, Ill., opened offices in Kansas City at 15 West Tenth street. Their plan is for the merchants of Kansas City to give a stamp with each ten cent purchase. For twenty of the stamps any one of the ten cent moving picture houses in the city might consider as a ticket to their show. At the opening there were fifty-one moving picture houses in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kan., just across the river, that agreed to the plan. One hundred and fifteen of the leading merchants in the city were supplied with stamps for this work. This plan has met with a big success in the country towns and brought a big business to the merchants as well as to the theaters.

BATTING AVERAGES OF PATHE LEAGUE.

The batting averages in the Pathe League this week have been increased by all the members of the sales staff. The averages show that L. A. Sheridan, the oldest salesman with the Kansas City branch is now at the head of the list and is leading his manager, C. S. Edwards, Jr., by more than $400 worth of bookings. Mr. Edwards fell back to second place during the second week of the league, but is holding it with a lead of more than $500 worth of bookings. Mr. Edwards says that it makes no difference if he is in second place, his average is a thousand, for he has not lost a single customer since entering the league. The salesmen on the road, however, were all silent about not landing a customer or two that they thought they had cinched.

This league was formed by Mr. Sheridan, with the idea of stimulating the booking agents working for the company to greater activities. A huge bulletin was placed on the wall and the names of the six travelers of the company were posted on it and the amount of business that they had written for the week. The first week Mr. Edwards' name headed the list, H. E. Jameyson was second and Mr. Sheridan third.

F. F. NINE A BUSY MAN.

F. F. Nine, assistant of C. S. Edwards, Jr., general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, is one of the busiest film men in Kansas City. On Fridays and Saturdays he hardly has time to go to lunch. Mr. Edwards is contemplating giving him an assistant in the work, as the business is growing so large that it is hardly fair to give so much work to one man.

K. & S. FEATURE PLAY COMPANY OPEN OFFICES.

J. J. Kennedy and J. Flavius Searle have opened offices in the Ozark Building under the name of the K. & S. Feature Play Company. Mr. Kennedy is treasurer and manager and Mr. Searle is president and secretary. The company handles the state rights for feature plays. They are now handling the "Victory" pictures and three others. Mr. Kennedy recently left the city for Joplin, Mo., where he will remain several days on business.

CIVILIZING POWER OF GOOD PICTURES HELP CITY.

The Jefferson theater of Springfield, Mo., has been advertising that it is the home of refined amusement. Springfield has long been considered one of the toughest Missouri mining towns, but it is the home of one of the strongest women's civic organizations and they have been cleaning the town from top to bottom, fighting the saloons and the dirty bakeries and restaurants and vice. The better class of merchants have nobly helped them in this work and most of the picture shows there are putting on only the very best pictures. "The Ghost Breaker" was the main attraction there last week.

FILM SHOWS OCEAN TO OCEAN HIGHWAY.

A reel showing the Pike's Peak, Ocean to Ocean Highway, was secured from A. W. Henderson, secretary of the association, and was shown at the Star theater at Hannibal, Mo. The Pike's Peak route is the shortest transcontinental line and is probably the most attractive to the tourist. The highway crosses the Rocky Mountains, and at Tennessee Pass is 10,400 feet above the sea level. At no point on the road is the grade greater than 40 per cent. The picture showed a part of the highway from Colorado Springs to Salt Lake City. The people of Hannibal and vicinity were greatly interested in the Pike's Peak route, for it passes through this city. In fact the Hannibal & St. Joseph Cross State Highway forms an important link in the route and resulted in the organization of the Pike's Peak portion of the Ocean to Ocean Highway.

SHORTER MISSOURI NOTES.

The Pathe Company feels highly elated over the fact that the "Exploits of Elaine" has met with great success everywhere. The branch here has five prints of the big fourteen episode serial working, and they have had difficulty in supplying the exhibitors with just the episode that they needed at the right time. The first pictures have fourteen episodes and the company is now preparing about as many more to follow the fourteenth. This is considered nothing short of marvelous by the Pathe Company and is perhaps, their masterpiece. The branch office here placed the picture in sixty theaters in the State of Kansas. Thirty-five theaters are running it in the small territory that the Kansas City branch has in Missouri. And twenty theaters are running it in the three counties in Oklahoma that the Kansas City branch is covering. E. E. Richards, of the Rich-Flynn Amusement Company, says that it is the best drawing card that he has ever had in his houses. F. A. Brittain says that the seventh and eighth episodes brought down the house at his Glory theater, which is out on the South Side.

The Warwick theater has booked the latest Pathe production to reach Kansas City, "Queen Margaret." It is a feature play of five reels, beautifully hand-colored.

The Majestic theater at Chillicothe, Mo., is featuring the "Master Key" this week. The Majestic is one of the best of the Missouri town moving picture houses and shows the best features that have been released. Next week they will show Louis Weber and Phillip Smalley in the Paramount "False Colors."

Marguerite Clark in "The Crucible" is the offering for the week at the Jefferson theater at Springfield, Mo. Miss Clark has won a warm place in the hearts of Missouri film audiences.

G. W. Kearns, proprietor of the Opera House, Pattonsburg, Mo., has recently installed an electrically-operated "orchestra." It is the Fotoplayer, made by the Watson Piano Co., of St. Joseph, Mo.

Kling's theater, Eighteenth and Lydia, has added a Fotoplayer to the equipment for the pleasure of its patrons.

KANSAS PROFESSOR TESTIFIES TO VALUE OF SHOWS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

FREDERIC WINSHIP, of the English department of the Kansas State School of Agriculture, at Manhattan, Kan., told the college of the results of the investigation of the moving picture shows. Mr. Winship defended the moving picture theaters and the research among them was very exhaustive.

SHORTER KANSAS ITEM.

The Jitney theater, at Leavenworth, Kan., opened recently with a free show. Two reels of the "$20,000,000 Mystery," by the Thanhouser Company, was shown. The General Film Company is going to furnish the service for this theater. Four reels of pictures is its regular program.

The formal opening of the Rex theater at Hutchinson, Kan., was held last week. The Rex theater is that of the old Elite theater, that was purchased and overhauled by Fred Savage. Edith Storey, in the "Latin Quarter" (Vitagraph), was the picture used for the opening.

Mrs. A. B. Seeley and her daughter, of Abilene, Kan., were in Manhattan, Kan., last week, looking over the Wareham theater and airdome, with the intention of erecting an airdome at Abilene. Mrs. Seeley owns a moving picture theater in Abilene. The Seeleys were accompanied by the operator of their machine at Abilene.

Alterations are being made in the front of the old Palace theater building, at Great Bend, Kan., now empty, and there is a rumor that a new picture show is to go in. Clyde Moore says that there is nothing to make public about the matter and no deal of any sort has been closed up.

The Echo theater, at Great Bend, Kan., put in a new $475 Netzow mission style piano.

John Thomas, the owner of the Ruby theater, at Hutchinson, Kan., has opened it again. Fred Saunders is manager, and the theater is owned and operated by negroes.

Mr. Chris Mattison, Hutchinson, Kan., is a great advocate and staunch supporter of the serial story in pictures.

It is the concensus of opinion among exhibitors that if you want to do well on a serial you must get the serial started right, regardless of cost. It was upon this basis of reasoning that C. B. Yost, manager of the Pearl theater at Hutchinson, Kan., started his serial, "Runaway June." Mr. Yost distributed tickets over the entire city entitling the holders to free admittance to the first episode of "Runaway June."

Halstead, Kan., boasts of the youngest theater manager in the state. Although the age of Earl Bookwalter is not disclosed in any evidence available, he is obviously an efficient manager.

The Holland theater at Wichita, Kan., played "Cabiria" for seven days with great success at prices that were astonishing to the other exhibitors in the city of Wichita. The schedule for this picture was 25 and 35 cents.

Smith & Wilson will soon open the old Movie theater on the west side of Wichita under the new name of Lyric.

Arthur A. Ford has been made manager of the Marple theater at Wichita, Kan. For several months this theater has had a rather stormy career, and it was feared in film circles that its days of glory were passed.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

H. A. Beal has sold his moving picture theater at Medical Lake, Wash., to August Giles.

The Orpheum theater, at Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, has been leased to Mr. and Mrs. Zinc, of Spokane, Wash., who will operate a moving picture show.

A moving picture show has been opened in the Levens building, at Harney, Ore.

Herman Joachims, of Schleswig, Ia., recently was at Luverne, Minn., getting ready to erect a new two-story 63x135 brick theater and store building on the present site of his Union Hall. It will cost about $40,000 and will be modeled after the Orpheum theater, at Sioux Falls, S. D. Construction will start about March 1.

The Crews Amusement Company, of Walla Walla, Wash., has been incorporated in the State of Washington with a capital stock of $10,000, to do a general moving picture and amusement business. The incorporators are Clarence S. Crews, William P. Hooper and Daisy S. Hooper. This is the live concern which has been operating the Dime and Arcade theaters in Walla Walla.

St. Johns, Ore., is getting a better class of moving pictures as the result of the creation of a board of censors—the board announces.

The Lyric moving picture theater at Hibbing, Minn., has been sold to W. J. Ethier, of Keenatin.

The Idle Hour theater, at Aberdeen, S. D., now gives five changes of program a week instead of four, and has changed the admission to 5 and 10 cents.

The Princess theater, at Lake Preston, S. D., which has been operated by P. S. Larson & Brothers, has been taken over by George B. Myers, of the Star.

A. Folkers, the new owner of the Columbia theater, at Astoria, Ore., has had moving picture experience in other Oregon cities and in California.

The Gem theater, at Lidgerwood, N. D., has been sold to Fred J. Norling.

The Rex theater, at Glenwood, Minn., has been reseated and a new inclined floor installed.

The Fortine Public Amusement Company, of Fortine, Mont., has purchased the moving picture theater at that place from C. F. Kordus.

George Mack has been making arrangements to open a moving picture show at Effington, S. D.

The Hyrum Amusement Company, of Logan, Utah, has been incorporated with capital stock of $12,000. C. A. Nielsen is president, C. J. Christiansen vice-president, and Alfred Fallows secretary and treasurer.

Exhibitor and His City

Attitude of Exhibitor Latta, of Austin, Minn., on Sunday Closing Agitation Exemplifies Healthy Relationship of Picture Man and His Patron—Realizes He Must Want What His Patrons Want—Kind of Picture Man Being Developed by Modern Conditions.

By Frank H. Madison, Northwestern Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITOR F. F. Latta, of three theaters in Austin, Minn., the Cozy, Lyric and Princess, refuses to nourish a grudge on the Sunday show question.

The Sunday show issue is exceedingly prominent, nearly a whole page in a local paper being devoted to communication from readers on the question.

A petition presented to the council read: "We, the undersigned teachers and people directly connected with the education of the children in the schools * * * most earnestly and sincerely urge you to defeat said ordinance on the ground and for the reason that it will seriously hamper our work with the children of Austin and will retard their progress in education and will seriously hamper and interfere with the work of the schools of said city."

Mr. F. F. Latta announces: "While I am, perhaps, more vitally interested in this measure than any other person here, yet whether or not Sunday shows are permitted, I have faith in the fair-mindedness of our city council to act in the matter (from a moral or financial standpoint or both), and if the ordinance fails of passage I shall still be at peace with the world."

Exhibitor Latta, by his attitude toward his community's feelings about Sunday shows, finely exemplifies a condition in the picture business not often taken into account by ministerial associations, voices advocating censorship and ill-informed legislators. Not all picture men measure up to Exhibitor Latta's standard, but a big percentage of them do. No good citizen becomes an enemy of society just as soon as he opens a picture house. His close contact with the people; his responsibility and his powerful position in local politics when the people know and trust him (he can write or speak to his patrons as no editor can), all tend to make him a still better citizen.

The successful exhibitor is his community's personal friend. The nature of the business demands it and the sieve is being shaken hard to find the kind of man who is able to be a successful exhibitor. Poor farmers are driven to sandy soil; poor exhibitors are being driven off the board. There is nothing hidden about the picture business; what little evil there is in it is blatant. There is no evil that is easier to handle anywhere, and that is why so many busybodies want a hand in the work. But there is coming to the front a class of exhibitors who know that the community's good is their good, as most communities are beginning to realize the value of the picture house and the right kind of exhibitor.

NORTHWESTERN BRIEFS.

A rumor that Charles Chaplin, in "A Night Out," had been taken off the screen of the Isis theater, at Denver, Col., reached Pueblo, where the film had been booked for the Majestic. The uneasy Majestic management was assured by the General Film Company that there was nothing to it, and the advertising the film had received helped the business.

W. J. Morgan has opened an exchange in Seattle, Wash., to be known as the Union Film and Supply Company.

E. R. Redlich has been appointed manager for the Box Office Attractions Company at Seattle, Wash., to succeed A. T. Lambson, who has gone to take charge of the San Francisco office.

Difficulties of Otto N. Raths with union musicians and stage employees at his moving picture house are given by the St. Paul (Minn.) Trades and Labor Assembly as the reason for that body sending a request to Senator Moses E. Clapp at Washington that he oppose the confirmation of Raths as postmaster at St. Paul.

Ben R. Labree, formerly of Spokane, Wash., has sold his interest in his moving picture house at Seward, Alaska, to Harold N. Nuzum, also formerly of Spokane. Neil Koontz, still another Spokane native, is operating the house for Nuzum.

The organization of a Woman's Council for Hibbing, Minn., is under way. Tentative objects of such a body includes the censorship of motion pictures.

Ross F. Marsh, of Wahpeton, N. D., has assumed charge of the moving picture show which he purchased at Mapleton, Minn.

Daniel O'Connor, of Huron, S. D., has assumed charge of the Scenic theater at Miller, S. D., which he leased from N. Johnson.

An illustrated lecture on Yellowstone Park supplemented the regular photoplay bill at the Star theater in Hettinger, N. D.

The art department of the Boulder, Col., Woman's Club gave a "revue" at the Curran theater in that city. The program was made of numbers by local talent and typical Curran photoplays.

The Princess theater, at Wabasha, Minn., has installed an advertising curtain.

The Olympia theater, at Harlowton, Mont., added a Hawaiian concert company to one of its recent moving picture bills.

Joe Bonds, a Tacoma, Wash., pugilist, will become manager of a 5 cent moving picture house in that city, it is reported.

The New Grand, at Lake City, Minn., has added vaudeville twice a week to its five-reel picture show.

The opera house at Elkton, S. D., was destroyed by fire. Loss $1,200.

The City Council at St. Paul, Minn., has granted licenses to conduct moving picture theaters to W. H. Baker at 163 East Seventh street, and James Gilowski, at 18 East Seventh street.

The Imperial, one of the oldest moving picture houses in Lewiston, Mont., has closed.

A recent program at the Ansonia, in Anaconda, Mont., had in addition to the photoplays numbers by the Butte Girls' Club and the Entre Nous Club.

Robert Middlemiss has been made manager of the Isis theater at Ogden, Utah. H. E. Skinner, manager of the Alhambra Theater Company, is now devoting his time to the new Alhambra, with offices in the second floor of the new building.

E. B. Brown is now managing the opera house at Nezperce, Ida., which he purchased from Dr. E. S. Booth. Roller skating now rules, but it is announced pictures may be resumed.

Manager Kavanugh of the Grand and Foto-Play theaters, in Grand Forks, N. D., will acquire a third house in that city, having taken a ten-year lease on a two-story brick and concrete 50x140 theater, which will be erected for him at 14 North Fourth street, by J. D. Bacon. It will have a stage and will be modernly equipped. It is expected to be ready for occupancy about July 1.

O. C. Smith has leased and will operate the new 50x130 concrete moving picture theater which D. J. Riley is erecting in Dallas, Ore. It will seat 1,000.

The picture show in Adams, Minn., closed the last week in February until after Easter.

The Colonial, at Winona, Minn., had a second booking of "Neptune's Daughter."

"Cabiria" was shown at the Clemmer, in Seattle, Wash., for 10 cents.

EXHIBITOR BURR SWAN'S ORIGINAL ADVERTISING

Books Paramount—Gets Out Special Illustrated Newspaper Full of Snap and Humor.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BURR SWAN, manager of the Knights of Pythias Opera house, at Pittsfield, got out a Special Opera House Edition of the Pike County Republican, of which he is editor. The banner line (across the front page) tells the reason: "I have booked the Paramount Program for Pittsfield—the Silver Dime triumphs." As it was pure advertising and did not carry the regular volume number of his paper, it cost him a green stamp to mail each one. Four full-sized pages were devoted principally to picture promotion. The back page was an ad for "America." His nonsensical index to the paper included: "Picture of the Bottom Dropping Out of the Moving Picture Business, Page 1," and "Picture of Burr Swan Not Tooting His Own Horn, Page 3." A travesty on a scenario contest suggested as subjects to contestants; "Major Funkhouser's Chicago censor board indicting Bill Shakespeare and cutting out large sections of Venus and Adonis. Ditto and ditto dittoing Edwin Bok and dittoing Ladies' Home Journal." Swan started "The Beloved Adventurer" series March 15 and has the "Hazards of Helen" and the "Girl Detective" series on tapis.

KEWANEE WANTS CENSORSHIP.

Local censorship is being talked of in Kewanee, and it is said that City Attorney Welch has been asked to draft an ordinance for submission to the city council.

CIRCULATING A SUNDAY SHOW PETITION AT MORRISON.

Petitions are being circulated in Morrison to secure a vote on the Sunday picture show question. The question on the ballot will read: "Shall motion picture shows be permitted to operate in Morrison Sundays?" Advocates of the Sunday shows argue that Rock Falls, a neighboring city's pictures are used in the churches on Sunday.

GALESBURG WILL VOTE ON SUNDAY SHOWS.

The Sunday picture show question is included in the election notice published at Galesburg. Although it was stated that the petition was found insufficient no formal complaint had been made to that effect.

RUSHVILLE MAYOR PROHIBITS SUNDAY SHOW.

Ministers in Rushville objected to the showing of Pastor Russell's "Creation" on Sunday afternoon on the ground that it might pave the way to regular Sunday shows. Mayor Glass prohibited the film. Generally objections to this film by ministers are made on doctrinal grounds.

MOLINE CENSORSHIP REPORT.

The report of the committee which made an investigation of the moving picture houses in Moline will wait, it was announced, until a meeting of the executive committee of the Woman's Club. It is said, however, that the report will recommend that the Chicago censorship be accepted as the standard for Moline shows.

SELLING TICKETS IN ADVANCE.

Where a few years ago such a thing as an advance sale of tickets for a moving picture attraction would have been poohpoohed by amusement seekers, it is more or less of a custom now in Illinois. Dreamland, at Galena, assured itsself of a good business for "Neptune's Daughter" in this manner.

ILLINOIS SHORTER ITEMS.

Some exhibitors are so slow to get away from the circus style of advertising that one house in Clinton carries the line "Rain or Shine."

A moving picture machine has been purchased for the Cheerful Home Settlement at Quincy, and until it has been fully paid for shows will be given from 2 to 6 and from 7 to 11 Saturdays. School children will sell tickets at 10 cents each.

The News-Record, at Springfield, conducted an essay contest on "Julius Caesar" preliminary to the showing of that film at the Lyric.

The Airdome, at Clinton, owned by Noah Stivers and Clarence Thorp, is no more. It will be converted into a stable.

The Federal Theater Company, of Chicago was incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500 to do a general theater and moving picture business. The incorporators are Sam E. Pearce, Irwin Grossman and Lillian M. Hansel.

The Gem, at Lewistown, booked "From the Manger to the Cross" for March 23, with a free matinee.

Speechless banquets are the latest in Illinois. The Social Center at El Paso entertained a number of local athletes at the Clifton Hotel, but instead of postprandial oratory the guests were taken to a special picture show at the Grand opera house.

"Shore Acres" was shown one afternoon and evening at the Varietie, in Canton, and Manager Ross gave all the proceeds to the poor children of the Kelloggs school district.

From De Kalb comes a newspaper clipping to the effect that the people of that city failed to patronize "The Christian" at the Armory theater, and the second night's booking was canceled. The small crowd that did attend was delighted with this high class feature. And the Hoyburn, at Evanston, recently had the picture back again.

C. A. Cook and a Mr. Pothemus are reported to be contemplating opening a moving picture show at Fairview.

The Lyric, at Springfield, found it profitable to play a return engagement of "A Fool There Was."

West's new theater at Galesburg in announcing "The Escape," assured its patrons that its shows never would cost more than 10 cents.

"Your Girl and Mine," the suffrage film, went to the Auditorium at Galesburg, under the auspices of the Galesburg Equal Suffrage Association.

Following a banquet at the Galesburg Club for its employees, the Galesburg Union Telephone Company took them to a special moving picture show at the West theater.

The films for the Amuse-U at Carbondale recently went astray. The management made the naive announcement that the substitute program was coming from an exchange that had been working for the Amuse-U's business and that it expected something extra good for the trial service.

The new Majestic theater at Harvard, which opened March 3, seeks musical favor as "The Home of the Pipe Organ." Six reels at 5 and 10 cents, matinees daily, is the policy.

As a special attraction for children on Saturday until 5 p. m. the Evanston theater, at Evanston, had a return engagement of Mary Pickford in "Cinderella."

"Forgiven, or the Jack of Diamonds" was given as a benefit for the Lewistown band at the Gem, at Lewistown.

Frank E Leahy, who is the new manager of the Remington theater, at Kankakee, formerly was in the shoe business at La Salle.

Joseph Neumann, of Quincy, has opened a moving picture show at Augusta.

The T. R. Film Company, of Chicago, has increased its capital stock from $35,000 to $50,000.

H. B. Scott, who is running a picture show at Heyworth, has been connected with the Jarvis Carnival Company, and consequently the Saturday night bill has amateur vaudeville.

WISCONSIN STATE FILMS IN PALACE OF EDUCATION

Films Boosting State Shown at Exposition, Where Advertising Value Will Be Greatest.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

WISCONSIN is one of the few states which will not have a moving picture projecting room in its state building at the fair at San Francisco. Notwithstanding this, plans are being carried out to exploit the State's resources in film, but the shows will be given in the Palace of Education. The Wisconsin men interested in the project say the State buildings are visited principally by residents of that State.

A CERTAIN PICTURE BRINGS CENSORSHIP AGITATION.

The Woman's Club at Racine has decided to ask the mayor for a local board of censorship. It is understood that the title "Three Weeks," made conspicuous when that film was exhibited recently in Racine, is partially to blame to for the contention that the standard of photoplay shows could be heightened.

WISCONSIN BRIEFS.

"Threads of Destiny" was shown the same day at the Princess and Lyric theaters in Superior.

The Opera House at Two Rivers had a concert by the Gloe-Naidl orchestra when it showed "Judith of Bethulia."

A moving picture policy is one of the propositions under consideration in connection with the projected reopening of the Empress theater in West Water street in Milwaukee.

The Hortonville Hall association, Appleton, has decided to purchase a moving picture outfit.

G. A. Harsh has opened a new moving picture theater at Colfax.

A Saturday show at the White theater in Whitewater was given over to the Woman's Relief Corps, who added to their own special program the film, "The Battle of Shiloh," and another.

Samuel J. Huber, who has conducted the Gem theater at Portage for two and one-half years, has sold that house and entered the floral business.

The Western Theater Company, of Milwaukee, has been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are S. M. Field, J. G. Wiesen and Anna Gerboth.

The People's theater at Superior is now giving vaudeville in addition to pictures.

Irvin S. Cobb, the war correspondent, with his illustrated lecture, was at the Pabst theater in Milwaukee.

Every person who bought a ticket to the Sunday evening show of "The Master Key" at the Gem in Lena was given a patent coat hanger.

Magee's Opera House at Evansville had a special five-cent matinee of "Neptune's Daughter" for the school children.

The Star theater at Muscoda showed the Modern Woodmen of America film, "The Man Who Came Back."

Dennis Long has sold his moving picture house on State street in Racine to a Mr. Rademacher.

The Monarch Film Manufacturing Company, of Milwaukee, has an arrangement with the Wisconsin Panama-Pacific Exposition Commission to furnish 20,000 feet of pictures made in Wisconsin. A. H. Russell, manager of the company, has been at Superior, Eau Claire and other cities discussing the plan with city-boosting organizations. The Commercial Club and the Rotary Club at Superior have been contemplating having a 1,000-foot reel made, to be used for advertising purposes after the exposition ends.

The Klondyke Feature Film Company, of Milwaukee, has been granted a charter by the secretary of state at Madison to do business with a capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are H. W. Carroll, C. B. Ames and E. S. Benham.

Exchanges Showing Film

San Francisco Exhibitors Demanding View of Big Offerings Before Bookings—Larger Exchanges in City Are Preparing Show Rooms—At California Film Exchange and at World Film Corporation, Rooms Now Being Decorated Are Most Attractive.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE motion picture exhibitors of San Francisco and vicinity are no longer content to book feature productions on mere hearsay, but are commencing to demand a screen examination of practically everything before making arrangements to advertise it to their patrons. Exhibitors in the trans-Bay districts, who secure most of their features after they are run in San Francisco houses, have the advantage of inspecting these at the theaters and are enabled to judge in a way of their drawing power through the attendance. The local exhibitors are insisting on the personal inspection of films booked by them to a much greater extent than formerly, and this has resulted in many of the exchanges installing miniature theaters and projection equipment.

The Pathe Exchange installed an exhibition room shortly after entering the San Francisco field, and its new leases are shown at regular intervals. The Blinkhorn interests also fitted up an exhibition room as soon as possible after locating here and since this time some of the old-established exchanges have made improvements of this character. The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., recently completed the fitting up of a very handsome room in the basement to supplant the imperfect facilities formerly in vogue.

The California Film Exchange, 121-127 Golden Gate Avenue, is now completing the installation of what will be the largest exhibition room in the city when ready for occupancy. The room will be 17½ by 36 feet in size, and will be handsomely equipped. The operating room is metal lined and will conform in every particular with the local regulations. The World Film Corporation, also located on Golden Gate Avenue, is likewise installing an exhibition room for the convenience of patrons. This is located on the main floor of the exchange and is being finished in the same handsome style that distinguished this branch of the World Film Corporation. A Motiograph projection machine will be installed here and full precautions will be taken in regard to safety.

Realizing that there are many exhibitors throughout the country who plan to visit San Francisco during 1915, letters have been sent to all the branch managers of George Kleine Attractions asking them to have all customers in their respective territories make their headquarters at the local office during their stay here.

THE AMERICAN TO BE PICTURE HOUSE.

The American theater, located on Market street, near Seventh, is to be opened on March 14 as a high class moving picture house, by Edwin James, of Portland, Ore., who has for some time conducted the Majestic theater there with marked success. The local house enjoys the distinction of having been the first theater in the downtown district to have been rehabilated following the fire of 1906, and for a time was very popular. It has been closed for the past two years, being regarded by most theater managers as being outside the amusement district. However, it is less than a block from Grauman's Imperial, whose success has been very marked, and Mr. James is confident that he can secure a heavy patronage. A heavy advertising campaign has been commenced and several strong feature attractions have been booked, the first to be presented being the "Kreutzer Sonata," with Nance O'Neill, Theda Bara and William Shea. A six-piece orchestra and a fine organ will furnish music and a straight 10-cent policy has been adopted.

OTIS TURNER, WITH COMPANY, VISITS SAN FRANCISCO.

Otis Turner arrived in San Francisco recently from Universal City with a company of player folks to take scenes for "The Black Box," the new Universal serial. The party included Anna Little, Herbert Rawlinson, William Worthington, Laura Oakley and Frank MacQuarrie. A special permit was secured from Mayor Rolph for the taking of pictures throughout the city and some striking scenes were taken here.

KRITERION BRANCH WILL OPEN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The California Kriterion Film Company has secured a lease on quarters in the Film Exchange Building at Jones street and Golden Gate avenue, and will open for business on March 15. The preliminary arrangements for the opening of this branch were made by Mr. Hawkins, who was here recently from Los Angeles. This office will be in charge of David Bershon, formerly in charge of the Universal Exchange at Los Angeles, and for a short time manager of the Lincoln theater here.

MAILS POSTERS IN TUBES.

In order to insure the transmission of announcements and small posters in good shape the George Kleine Attractions has adopted the policy of mailing these to customers in tubes. While this method is more costly than others, the splendid condition in which they are received more than compensates for the added expense.

BRIEF SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

Sol Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has returned from a business trip to New York, where he made his usual heavy purchases.

The premier presentation of "Quo Vadis" in the Hawaiian Islands will take place at Honolulu on March 31. It was taken to the islands by Edward O'Malley.

A motor generator set has been added to the projection equipment of the theater in the Hawaiian Building at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The Sunset theater of the Southern Pacific Company, at the Exposition, has been completed and is in use. This theater seats 300, has a sloping floor and a stage, and is furnished throughout in a handsome manner.

The leading feature of the regular meeting of the Camera Club of San Francisco on March 18 will be the presentation of moving pictures of scenes in Hawaii taken by Edward H. Kemp.

Persons not authorized to do so are not allowed to take moving pictures at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, as was discovered recently by Edward W. Castle. This operator was taking pictures on Exposition ground when guards interfered and the film destroyed.

Morris L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange, Inc., plans to attend the opening of Universal City.

Davis Bros. have disposed of the Electric theater, on Church street, to Shelton & Horgan.

The Cory theater, on Union street, recently disposed of by Cory Bros., is again being conducted by these well known exhibitors.

The great rush being experienced in the installation of projection equipment at the Exposition has necessitated an addition to the sales force of Walter Preddey. Harry Davis, well known in the local trade, is filling the position of assistant.

Mrs. Borman, formerly owner of the Pioneer theater, at Fruitvale, Cal., has reopened this house and is doing her own operating.

W. E. Butler, a well known moving picaure machine man and inventor, is now with G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco.

W. G. Warren, of Tonopah, Nev., was a recent visitor in San Francisco, purchasing equipment for the Pastime theater, which he is to reopen shortly.

A new theater is to be erected at once at Woodland, Cal., by the A. D. Porter Estate, and will be operated by Harry Leland, of Sacramento, when completed. The house will have a seating capacity of 700 and will cost about $12,000.

The contest for the selection of a name for the old Diepenbrock theater at Sacramento resulted in the choosing of the name Strand, this being the suggestion of five contestants, who divided the prize money. The house opened March 1, after having been renovated throughout. A pipe organ has been installed and concerts by F. C. Bassett are features of the entertainments offered.

New Home of California Film Exchange, Inc.

The accompanying photograph shows an exterior view of the new home of the California Film Exchange, Inc., at 121-127 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, to which reference has been previously made. This exchange occupies two entire floors 37½ by 137½ feet, and is equipped with provements. A feature of this exchange that is to be found in very few others is a driveway into the lower floor where express wagons may enter and load shipments direct from the shipping department, thus doing away with all trucking and keeping the upper floor clear.

Pathescope vs. State Law

Attorney General Fellows Has Filed Demurrer Questioning Jurisdiction of Detroit Court in Case of Heyne Bazaar (Pathescope Company) Against the Fire Marshal—Claims That Though Film Is Not Celluloid Law Holds.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL Grant Fellows, representing Michigan State Fire Marshal John T. Winship and his assistants, filed a demurrer on Saturday morning, March 6, in the Detroit Circuit Court, asking that the action begun against the marshal and his employes by the Heyns Bazaar Co. (virtually the Pathescope Sales Co.) be dismissed. The Bazaar Company had started proceedings to restrain the marshal from forcing churches, business concerns and other organizations giving private exhibitions of motion pictures with the Pathescope machine, from complying strictly with the state law governing moving picture theaters. The plaintiff began the suit as Detroit representative of the Pathescope Sales Co. The Bazaar Company maintains that Pathescopes do not come under the moving picture theater regulations, because they do not require celluloid films. The Attorney-General in the demurrer questions the jurisdiction of a court in equity to try such a case on the grounds that the validity of the moving picture theater law has already been sustained by the Supreme Court, and that, therefore, it cannot be questioned.

GILLINGHAM INCREASES STOCK.

A. J. Gillingham, owner of the Empire theater, in Detroit, manager of the General Film Co., Detroit, and holder of the controlling interest of the Gillingham & Smith Theatrical Enterprises, has decided to increase the stock of the latter to $160,000, offering 50 per cent to investors in Grand Rapids, Mich., where the various enterprises are located. Mr. Gillingham has purchased the Monroe vaudette, Idle Hour theater, Idea theater and Original vaudette, operated under the United Theaters Company, and they will be included in the Gillingham & Smith Enterprises. The new Strand, which will be opened later in the year, will also be included. Headquarters of the company will be in the Orpheum theater building, with Charles H. Seaman as general manager.

FOWSER WITH UNITED FILM.

H. F. Fowser, president of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has resigned as manager of the Luna theater, 161 St. Aubin avenue, and has taken a position as special representative for the United Film Company. He will be associated with the Detroit office in the Campau building. Edward L. Ruehle has succeeded him as manager of the Luna theater. Mr. Fowser will continue as president of the Exhibitors' League. He has been doing excellent work for the organization.

THE BROADWAY OPENS OFFICES

The Broadway Feature Film Company has opened offices in the Broad-Strand Theater building on Broadway. This company is operated by Harry I. Garson and his associates, who are also to handle the Bradway-Strand theater when it opens early in April. While the date has been set for April 4, Mr. Garson says that in the event of a delay, the date will be no later than April 11. The Broadway Feature Film Company will specialize in state right productions, showing them first at their own theater. They wil handle such films as "The Christian," "Cabiria," "Sealed Orders," "The Nigger," etc. The opening attraction at the Broadway-Strand will be "The Christian." Mr. Garson says that a $30,000 pipe organ will bé installed, also that there will be a symphony orchestra of fourteen pieces.

SHORTER DETROIT ITEMS.

An arrangement has been completed whereby all of the theaters operated in Detroit by John H. Kunsky, Inc., will hereafter show features, produced by the Box Office Attraction Co.

One complete moving picture machine, including a spot light, valued at $410, was stolen from the Jewel theater, 448 Gratiot avenue, on Friday night, March 5. The outfit belongs to William F. Klatt, owner of the Jewell. He says it is a mystery to him how the thieves managed to steal the entire outfit.

The Casino theater, 28 Monroe avenue, Detroit, discontinued business March 7, and will be replaced by a "moving shooting gallery." It is interesting to note that the Casino was the first moving picture theater in the world. It was opened originally by Messrs. Caille and Kunsky, and later taken over by Mr. Kunsky.

W. H. Goodfellow, one of the pioneers in the moving picture industry, has opened an office at 79 Woodward avenue, Detroit, under the style of The National Syndicate Film Service, to purchase, sell and rent feature films, supplies, etc.

Plans are about completed by Architect Howard Crane, Dime Bank building, for a one-story moving picture theater, 120 by 128 feet in size, to be erected for Hugo Scherer at 280 East Jefferson avenue. This will be the only photoplay theatre on Jefferson avenue, from Woodward avenue to the Belle Isle bridge, a matter of three miles, on one of the city's leading thoroughfares.

Contracts have been let for the erection of a brick theater at Chene and Milwaukee avenues, Detroit, for the Monroe Theater company, of which Fred Schram is the general manager. It will be 35 by 100 feet in size, and will be completed within sixty days. Richard H. Marr is the architect.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

HARTMAN BROTHERS, of Omaha, film manufacturers and proprietors of the Omaha Film exchange, have landed the contract for making 30,000 feet of industrial and scenic films for the Iowa Panama-Pacific Exposition Commission, Frederick G. Hartman has been at Des Moines looking after the project.

The Atlantic City producing concern which is flirting with the Commercial Club of Lincoln is said to want something in the shape of a ten acre tract or a cash consideration before bringing its company to Lincoln and erecting buildings at a cost of $75,000. If the removal is in good faith the company might get the ten acre site, Commercial club men say.

Undaunted by the refusal of the Nebraska State Legislature to appropriate funds for the construction of a moving picture theater at the San Francisco fair, the Nebraska Conservation and Public Welfare Commission is going to have promotional films shown at the exposition. It has furnished the federal government 1,000 feet depicting the big Pathfinder dam project, and has made arrangements to have shown, at government buildings, educational films of the live stock, agricultural and fruit industries of the State.

The war pictures which are being shown in Nebraska under the direction of the Omaha World-Herald had their Omaha booking at the Krug theater, Fourteenth and Harney streets. The World-Herald has been booking the picture for some Nebraska houses.

March 11 was fixed as the opening date for the new Empress theater at Fremont.

M. C. Freed has added vaudeville to his moving picture show bill at Pender.

The Y. M. C. A. in Lincoln has equipped a room with a standard motion picture projection outfit. A course of six selected programs to be given on Saturdays has been outlined. Season tickets are sold for twenty-five cents. The seating capacity is 200.

The city central suffrage committee in Omaha did not add to its treasury by the showing of "Your Girl and Mine" at the American theater to the extent that had been expected. It was announced that the women came out about even.

Pictures were plentiful at the Mid-West Cement Show at Omaha. On the stage at the Auditorium, where the show was held, was projected "A Concrete Romance" and at the headquarters at the Rome Hotel pictures of the Edison plant after the fire were shown.

John Brym and Fred Kedlacek are now operating the moving picture show at Dwight, the latter having purchased the interest of James Mares.

A new moving picture show is to be opened at Alma about March 15, it is reported. R. L. Keester will be proprietor.

The Star theater at St. Paul has been re-opened by Carleson & Nelson of Dannebrog.

NOTES FROM THE SOUTHWEST

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

UNDER the auspices of the Houston Parent-Teacher Association, at Houston, Tex., a picture show was given at the Auditorium, the program made up of films depicting the school life of that city. Nearly every ward school was represented, the camera men catching something that made that school distinctive. At one it was a drill, at another a game, still another a playlet and so on. The mayor and other prominent persons appear in the pictures. The object of the show was to raise a fund for the improvement of the school grounds in Houston.

Joe C. Clemmons, proprietor of the Imperial and Electric theaters in Beaumont, Tex., has acquired a third house there, leasing for a number of years the Tivoli on Liberty avenue, which was erected about a year ago by John F. Goodhue. Clemmons will personally manage the Tivoli in connection with his other houses.

Homer W. Sibley recently gave his lecture on the production of motion pictures in connection with the show at the Gem in Little Rock, Ark.

E. M. Hulsey, who took over the Hippodrome at Waco, Tex., on March 4, had as his initial attraction Kleine's "Stop Thief." This was followed by "The Christian."

The Queen theater at Waco, Tex., recently announced that it would give away a diamond ring each night.

J. O. Taylor and J. E. Williams, who are filming the Southern National Highway, recently were at Globe and Miami, Ariz. At Miami they secured pictures of some big copper reduction plants for the travelog.

Officers of the Eighteenth Regiment, United States Infantry, stationed at Douglas, Ariz., plan the erection of a pavilion like the one they had at Texas City, which was equipped for the display of motion pictures.

The Lyric theater at Douglas, Ariz., was two years old early in March. The event was celebrated by a general overhauling of the interior.

J. C. Renfro has sold his interest in the Majestic theater at Marietta, Okla., to Harry A. Kirkpatrick.

The opera house at Montgomery, Tex., was destroyed by fire.

The Jett Wilcox building at Anahuac, Tex., has been leased for a moving picture theater.

Nordhaus Brothers & Company have let the contract for a new theater building seating 500 persons in Pine street, between Silver and Gold avenues, in Deming, N. M.

SUIT BROUGHT IN CANADA OVER ALLIANCE SERVICE

Noted Players Film Corporation, of Montreal, Brings Suit Against New York Film Makers.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Noted Players Film Company has entered suit against the Alliance Film Corporation, of New York; the Allied Features, a local firm, and the Crystal Palace and Alhambra theaters. The petitioner company claim that by an agreement they were the sole Canadian agents for the business of the respondent, the Alliance Film Corporation, but that the latter has made another contract with the Allied Features to be sole exclusive agents for Canada. One phase of the case was heard in the Superior Court last Saturday, March 6, but proceedings will be resumed on Monday, March 8. Judgment should have been rendered by the time this is published.

GEM AT BRANTFORD BURNED.

The Gem theater, Brantford, Ont., was destroyed by fire on March 4. The Gem was located in the centre of a large block, and at one stage it looked as if the whole block would be wiped out. Every available fireman, policeman and many of the soldiers and street railway men were called out to help confine the flames to the theater. The building was owned by A. C. Lyons, and was valued at $15,000. The cause was reported to be the result of an explosion of chemicals used in developing films of a large fire which had raged just opposite the theater only a few hours previously.

SAFE AT STRAND CRACKED.

The serenity of the local film trade was disturbed last week by the report that the Strand theater's safe had been rifled to the tune of about $1,300. The haul represented the earnings for Saturday and Sunday of the Strand and Moulin Rouge theaters, together with a few hundred dollars petty cash. Detectives called in on the case were of the opinion that the act was an "inside job," or committed by one familiar with the workings of the theater. The door to the office had been opened without so much as a scratch being made on it, the safe's door had yielded without violence, and the inner compartment, which to be opened requires a special key, was neatly sawed off its hinges.

MONTREAL SHORTER ITEMS.

The local Famous Players office is conducting an extensive advertising campaign in connection with "John Barleycorn." It will be released shortly under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

J. Lieberman, traveling representative of the local Picture Playhouse office, has just returned from a successful tour through the Eastern townships. He reports good conditions in St. Johns, Farnham, Granby, Magog, Sherbrooke and Megantic.

H. Y. Harwell, local manager for the Universal, claims that "The Black Box," has broken all records. In fact, the first episode is booked solid till the middle of next May. It has first run here at the Crystal Palace.

The New Grand is now staging five acts of vaudeville in addition to the regular show.

Recent features at Montreal houses were: New Grand, "Her Triumph," Paramount; Tivola, "Old Dutch," World Film; Strand, "Queen Margaret," Pathe; Imperial, "The Silent Plea," Broadway Star; Domina, "The Crucible," Paramount; Strand, "The Fairy and the Waif," World Film.

A new theater has been opened in Renfrew, Ont. It is called the Imperial, and is operated by J. MacKay. The opening night, March 1, had a Picture Playhouse subject as feature.

Films Voudou and Hoodoo

Director Plaisetti, of Coquille, Gets Unusual Atmosphere in His Picture "Carnival in Black and White"—Borrows Fighting and Dancing Blacks from New Orleans "Coop" and Lets them Loose Before Camera—Witch-Magic and Mystery.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southern Newspaper News Bureau.

AFTER its real society scene noticed last week, the Coquillo Film Company of New Orleans has now gone to the other extreme and presented authentic voudou negroes—real "hoodoo niggers"—and all in the same play, "Carnival in Black and White." They were stumped at first to get the real thing, but found what was needed in the "coop," the House of Detention. The darkies they got were quite the most savage, childish lot obtainable, the type which scarcely if ever is free from fear of voudou, witch magic that was brought from the Congo.

When Director Plaissetty made clear what characters were wanted there was some question as to whether it would be practicable to get in time a number of the type. Then some one rang up the keeper of the House of Detention and explained the need: "Twenty dark browns and blacks, men and women, fighting and dancing niggers." The keeper knew the man speaking, so he told him to come out and take his pick. He saw the fun coming and waived the formal obligation to keep his charges on routine.

The "applicants" were looked over. Aside from having to force any to take part, as was feared might be charged by some humanitarian, there was difficulty in convincing certain of the prisoners that they were not among the called. The company engaged to see that the blacks had a good time and returned to the coop. Deputies were of course sent along.

One of the scenes was laid in historic "Congo" (now Beauregard) Square, where, in ante-bellum times, the negroes used to gather for their orgies and charm making. The other was a studio set wherein the two leads, Edward Faure, who played voudou doctor, and Miss Lucy Leveque took the part of a Northern girl strayed away from her fashionable friends and, unknowingly, into the company of the voudou negroes. She, in fear of her life, had to go through the ceremonies assisting the voudou doctor. A burning caldron was in the center, from which the celebrants seemed to take live alligators and throw them back into the fire and take them again. A number of stuffed alligators were strewn about the floor, and grinning monkey heads, real monkey heads, the chief "prop" of the voudou workers, were disposed in the shadows along the walls.

New Orleans offers perhaps the best locals for this voudou work to be found on the hemisphere, barring perhaps the West Indies, where the worship first cropped out on this side of the world. It is almost if not quite a new vein for the pictures and will probably be used a good deal. The Coquille Company has now in preparation a scenario for a drama embodying this rite; some of the scenes are to be filmed in the swamps along the west shore of lake Pontchartrain; some, of course, will be studio scenes. They should be a hit, for voudouism for downright black horror can out-do insanity.

NEW PICTURE COMPANY WILL OPERATE IN NEW ORLEANS

United Photo Plays Company, Inc., Will Shortly Begin Production of Film Stories.

The United Photo Plays Co., Inc., chartered to operate moving picture exhibition houses and producing plants, announced last week at its executive offices in New Orleans that it would enter the producing field, establishing a studio in the southern city as soon as its organization is completed. Stock is now being sold and, according to P. A. Swain, recently appointed sales manager, the organization should be completed within a short time.

The United Photo Plays Co. will be New Orleans' second producing organization, the Coquille Film Co. being the first to establish a studio and its plant being already in active operation, as a closed corporation. The new company has an authorized capital of $500,000 and purposes, according to announcement, to market its product direct to exhibitors through its own exchanges.

ITEMS FROM GULF STATES.

The William Fox Film Corporation has further increased its New Orleans office force. S. T. Stephens, New Orleans manager, reports business excellent, with particularly heavy bookings by his office in the suburban houses.

O. K. Bourgeois, formerly on the road for the Consolidated, and for the past several months attached to the office staff of the United Program Film Service at New Orleans, has gone on the road for the United Program. This makes two men that the United now has traveling out of New Orleans, Maurice F. Barr having been on the road for the company for some weeks.

The Hybar Film Corporation, Louis Dolohonde, New Orleans manager, has moved its New Orleans office to 620 Whitney Central Bank Bldg.

The Gaiety theater, Ursuline and Royal streets, New Orleans, has opened under recently announced new management.

Th Esplanade theater, big suburban house, has reopened under the new management of A. Solis. The William Fox Film Corporation's "Sampson" was the curtain lifter.

Sugar's theater, Monroe, La., is boosting its box office receipts with a popularity contest for boys and girls.

Educational moving pictures are being shown at a number of out-of-the-way points in St. Tamany Parish, La., by Prof. E. S. Richardson of the Junior Extension Department of the Louisiana State University. He gets his light from his automobile, which carries the whole outfit, which he calls his "auto-motor-picture show."

The American, new New Orleans morning paper, will devote a page weekly to pictures. This information was contained in a news note under date of March 7. When the new feature will be made effective has not been announced.

"The Fight," a Brady & Shubert production, distinguished during its New York run by Anthony Comstock's protest, opened at the "Crescent," K. & E. house, New Orleans, March 14, succeeding "Tillies Punctured Romance," which had an excellent two weeks' run. Further picture booking for the "Crescent" are expected. The "Tulane," the other K. & E. house, has shown pictures at times, but the Crescent is the first New Orleans legitimate theater to take on successive picture bookings.

Charles Asbury, former owner of the Galvez Airdome at Galvez and Canal streets, New Orleans, has sold this property and is remodeling and improving the Canal airdome at Canal and Rocheblave streets. Mr. Asbury announces Easter Sunday as the date of the opening of the "Canal" under his management.

The Louisiana theater, Baton Rouge, La., operated by the Louisiana Amusement Co., was damaged to the extent of $500 by fire last week, fire originating back of the stage. This is the second recent fire in this house, which is one of the finest in the state, and the owners state that they suspect incendiarism.

New Theatre Enterprise

Group of New England Picture Magnates Launch Olympia Theaters, Inc., a $7,000,000 Amusement Company—Will Operate Large Houses in Several States—Men Who Are Behind the New Venture—Improvements and Changes That Are Planned.

By Edwin McCloskey, Boston Representative of Moving Picture World.

THE largest moving picture enterprise ever undertaken by New England men was launched last week, when the papers for a $7,000,000 corporation were filed with the Massachusetts secretary of state at Boston. This new concern will be known as the Olympic Theatres, Inc., and will operate moving picture and vaudeville houses in Boston, Cambridge, New Bedford, New Haven, Chelsea, Gloucester, Lynn and Providence.

The new company is an outgrowth of the Olympia theater, Lynn, which was owned by Ernest H. Horstmann, Frank J. Howard and Arthur E. Lord. This playhouse, which has a seating capacity of 3,200, was the first large moving picture house in the country. The corporation has taken over the Olympia theater, Lynn, Olympia theater, Gloucester, Mass.; Gordon's theater, Chelsea, Mass.; the Scollay Square Olympia and Gordon's Olympia, Boston, Mass. Two theaters, each of which will seat 2,500 persons, are in process of construction at New Haven, Conn., and New Bedford, Mass. The cost of each of these new houses will exceed $250,000. Plans have been prepared for another large house, which will be built in Cambridge, Mass. Work on this project will start within a month. All theaters operated by the new corporation will have a seating capacity of over 2,500.

The incorporators of the company are Max Shoolman, Nathan H. Gordon, Frank J. Howard, Gerald G. E. Street, Lee M. Friedman, Arthur E. Lord, Ernest H. Horstmann, Hiram E. Miller, George U. Crocker and Henry C. Atwill. There is $4,000,000 in common stock and $3,000,000 in preferred stock of the new corporation. Preferred shares will sell at $100 par and common shares will be valued at $50 par. It is planned to issue, at the present time, 18,770 preferred shares and 70,900 common shares.

The officers of the new corporation are Nathan H. Gordon, of No. 206 Winchester street, Brookline, president; Frank J. Howard, of No. 1688 Beacon street, Brookline, first vice-president; Max Shoolman, of No. 1988 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, second vice-president; Ernest H. Horstmann, of No. 42 Lexington street, Lynn, clerk and third vice-president; Arthur E. Lord, of No. 87 Lakeview avenue, Lynn, treasurer; the board of directors consists of the above named officers and the following: Gerald G. E. Street, of No. 14 Marshall street, Brookline; Lee M. Friedman, of No. 206 Bay State road, city; Hiram E. Miller, of No. 65 Atkins street, Lynn; George U. Crocker, of No. 378 Marlboro street, Boston, and Henry C. Atwill, of No. 59 Ocean avenue, Lynn.

Nathan H. Gordon, the president, has been associated with theatrical enterprises in and around Boston for many years. When he joined forces with the owners of the Olympia theater, Lynn, Gordon's Olympia on Washington street, Boston, was built. Frank J. Howard, first vice-president, is the dean of New England exhibitors, having been identified with the moving picture industry for over twenty years. He is an active member of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Max Shoolman, second vice-president, is one of the largest real estate operators in Boston. Ernest H. Horstmann, clerk and third vice-president, is president of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. He founded this organization and has been at its helm for three years. He has accomplished more for the benefit of the industry in this state than any other individual. Through his efforts and the assistance of a few associates, many bills detrimental to the business have been defeated in the Massachusetts legislature. Arthur E. Lord, treasurer, will also be general manager of the new concern. He has been identified with theatrical enterprises for a number of years. Gerald G. E. Street is an active real estate operator in Boston and has been connected with some of the largest realty enterprises in the city. George U. Crocker is a former city treasurer of Boston and is the trustee of many estates in the city. Lee M. Friedman and Hiram E. Miller are prominent attorneys and will serve in the capacity of counsel for the new concern. Henry C. Atwill is a prominent attorney of Essex County. He is also attorney general for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Prior to his election to this office, he was district attorney of Essex County, where he prosecuted many famous cases with great credit to himself.

The plans of the new company call for extensive changes and improvements in the Olympia theater, Lynn. The house will be enlarged, as the corporation has purchased two adjoining buildings, which will be razeed. Larger lavatories will be installed and new offices will be provided for the officials of the theater. A new $25,000 pipe organ will be installed, but will be concealed from view, probably beneath the stage. The lobby will be remodeled and a new front will be constructed.

H. A. GRAVES BUYS THEATER.

Mr. H. A. Graves, of Whitefield, N. H., has purchased the Globe theater at St. Johnsbury, Vt., from Carl O. Bianchi. This is a practically new house, having been opened only three months ago. It was built at a cost of $50,000 and has a seating capacity of 700 persons. Mr. Graves has beeen connected with the Graves Theater Company at Whitefield. In the new house he will use General Film Service and Famous Players features. Mr. Graves will personally manage the new house. He reports that business is remarkably good and that he has done fifty per cent. more business during Lent this year than he did last year.

NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

The Opera House at Lowell, Mass., which has been in darkness for the past month, has been reopened under the management of Allen Loew of New York City.

Norman L. Claig, a former Mutual road man and more recently manager of the New Hampshire and Vermont office of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been appointed New England manager for the Picture Playhouse Company.

Manager Samuel Bernfield, of the Pathe Exchange, Boston, was a constant visitor to the recent automobile show in Mechanics' Building, Boston. "Sam" can be seen driving to and from his office daily in a new machine which he purchased.

Toomey and Demarra, the moving picture magnates at Lawrence, Mass., are planning for extensive alterations on the Nickel theater in that city. This house, which is located at the corner of Lawrence and Essex streets, will be remodeled for a seating capacity of 2,000 persons. It is also planned to install esculators.

C. L. Beede, who is running a circuit of one-night moving picture shows at Enfield, Canaan and Quebee, all in Vermont, is preparing to enlarge his circuit. He states that Bradford, Vt., and Warner and Contoocook, N. H., will be provided with silent drama entertainments in the near future. He has had this circuit for three years and reports that business is much better this year than it has been in the past.

Stephen Richardson, of the Nickel theater at Woonsocket, R. I., has returned to his duties after a short trip to Bermuda.

The Princess theater at South Framingham, Mass., and the Orpheum theater at Gardner, Mass., which are operated by the Tri-Mount Theaters Company, are now using General Film Service.

It is thought that the Massachusetts District Police will make some provisions for the exclusion of Mechanics, Hall, Worcester, from the sweeping order issued by Chief J. H. Whitney, forbidding the renting of hall on the third floor of the building for moving picture entertainments. Deputy Chief George C. Neal, who is now acting chief of the department, has inspected the building. He was shown the unusual ease with which the building could be emptied in cases of emergency.

McCULLUM VISITS MAINE.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent M. P. W.

BARTLEY J. McCULLUM, of the Lubin Film Company, at Philadelphia, is now visiting at Portland, Me. He is well known in Portland and well liked. For many years Mr. McCullum was in charge of the Gem theater at Peaks Island, and it might be said that when he opened what is known as the Old Pavilion he was given the laugh by local theatrical men. At the first performance the gate receipts were $2.08, but Bartley had made up his mind to stick, and it was not long before he was turning them away. Under his management many noted players had an opportunity to try out during the summer months, and not a few of them have ascribed a large part of their success to his tutelage. Mr. McCullum is preparing for a cross-country tour, which will end in California, while the other members of the troupe proceed to Alaska. Mr. McCullum will then return to Philadelphia.

MANY BABY SHOWS IN MAINE.

Baby shows are in fashion in Maine theaters at the present time, it seems, the Jefferson theater, at Portland, having given one last week. The show took place immediately after the regular performance. Twelve prizes were awarded by a committee of competent judges, including two prominent lady physicians. The Jefferson has also inaugurated an amateur night for Friday night, with a large entry of contestants.

FREEPORT BUYS LOCAL FILMS.

The town of Freeport has made its debut in the moving picture business. At the annual town meeting held last week it was voted to purchase films of local scenes from Fred Mortimer, paying therefor the sum of $10, and these will be used as a sort of booster proposition. Freeport is the first town in the state of Maine to announce such a departure.

VERY INTERESTING PICTURES.

A convincing demonstration of the fascinating influence of moving pictures was given in Keith's theater, Manchester, N. H., when between 1,200 and 1,500 people were in danger from fire which broke out next door. Smoke poured into the theater in dense volumes. The house was in total darkness, a two-reel picture play being in progress. Just as the fire bells started to ring the lights came on and Manager Lorenzen stepped on to the stage and announced that there was a small fire next door, and that it would be better for the audience to file quietly out. Not more than 100 took him at his word. It was necessary for two policemen to go to the front of the house and insist that the balance of the audience get out.

MAINE ITEMS.

The Star theater, at Fairfield, has been showing "Cabiria," and as Fairfield is in reality a suburb of the city of Waterville, the management arranged for a special car to Waterville. The admission charged was 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. These are believed to be the highest prices recently paid in the state of Maine for a motion picture spectacle.

The Fairfield Opera House announces a change in nights from Wednesday to Tuesday. This house gives a five-reel show, with dancing from eight to ten, and music by an augmented orchestra.

Feeling the need of helping the poor of Sanford, Maine, Charles A. Trafton has adopted the plan of giving benefit performances. Saturday mornings the theater is opened to the hundreds of children of the town, many of whom are not able to attend shows. The charge is but two vegetables of any kind. In this way barrels of vegetables and fruit have been collected, and these have been given to the Salvation Army to distribute. Each Sunday afternoon a Sunday concert and show is given, and the entire receipts are given to the poor.

THEATER BUILDING BOOM ON FRANKLIN AVE., ST. LOUIS

Several New Amusement Ventures and Changes Now Under Way—Preparing for Summer.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE neighborhood of Franklin avenue between 10th and 18th streets is experiencing a boom in the amusement business.

The large 2,000 seat house promoted by the McKinley Amusement Company is under way at 10th and Franklin, and will open in the near future.

G. K. Dubis, proprietor of the Pathe theater, in the same block, is preparing to open an airdome just across the street from the Pathe, that will seat two thousand persons and cover fifty-eight by one hundred and forty-eight feet of space. This airdome will be unique in the fact that it cannot be seen from the street, as it occupies the space in the rear of several large stores. Large entrances, however, have been arranged for on both Franklin avenue and 11th street. Mr. Dubis will not close the Pathe for the summer months.

G. Plaikos, manager of the Marquette theater, 1807 Franklin avenue, is having plans made which will increase the seating capacity of his theater from 500 to 1,000. The plans call for the alterations to be completed by June 1.

A PLAYWRIGHT ON PICTURES.

Augustus Thomas, the playwright, during a recent visit to his native city, St. Louis, expressed himself as greatly impressed with the part moving pictures are playing in playwriting. Moving pictures, he said, have brought such a demand for action that the modern playwright must be exceedingly careful not to waste any words in his production. He believes this will be good for the drama. He spoke of the practice of billing prominent stage actors who have appeared in films by name and not announcing that the play is a moving picture play. He said he knew prominent actors, who, when appearing at some theater at $2 a seat, could see across the street from the theater their names in large letters over a 10-cent show without any indication that it was a picture show. He thinks this will cause many actors of the legitimate stage to forsake the screen plays, and for this reason he thinks that the high salaries that have been paid by film companies will be cut, and that the demand for clever scenarios will be increased.

RAILROAD FILMS LOANED TREE.

The Missouri Pacific Railroad Company have made a reel of pictures which is shown in theaters in St. Louis as an extra attraction, and free to exhibitors, which shows the different state buildings at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco. The Missouri Pacific has also another reel of travel pictures showing scenes from Pueblo, Col., to San Francisco by way of the Feather River Canon. A set of 400 slides and a lecturer, who gives an interesting travel talk to accompany the travel film, will soon be available to St. Louis exhibitors, according to Harry L. Billups, who is managing the films.

ST. LOUIS SHORTER NOTES.

A. Steinmeyer, of the Chippewa theater, 3807 South Broadway, has retired from the moving picture business. Jas. J. Barrett has assumed management of the Chippewa, and says he will run the house according to the methods of its former manager, Mr. Steinmeyer. Mr. Barrett is a newcomer in the St. Louis amusement field.

The Gravois theater, on Gravois and Jefferson avenues, passed under the management of T. H. McKean on March 6. Mr. McKean has changed the entire policy of the house when he assumed management. He replaced the former program with Paramount features, running four a week, charging ten cents for downstairs seats and five cents for balcony seats. The former price of admission had been five cents all over the house. Mr. McKean also added a four-piece orchestra. The new policy and program seem to be taking well. The opening night produced a packed house with "Such A Little Queen" as chief attraction.

F. Wehrenberg, manager of the Best theater, 3600 South Jefferson avenue, conducted an automobile contest for children. The auto was a very complete and satisfactory toy, and is large enough to tempt a high grade grammar school boy to compete. On Sunday, March 6, a coupon good for 500 votes was given to each child who attended the matinee. The crowd was so great that extra policemen were detailed to preserve order.

Geo. H. Kern, manager of the Cherokee theater, Cherokee street and Ohio avenue, will not close for the summer months, as has been the custom with this house. Mr. Kern is preparing to install an elaborate air-cooling and purifying system.

Arthur Bernaud, who recently opened the Jefferson Odeon, a new house at 2316 Easton avenue, has disposed of the theater to M. H. Rosenblatt, who has improved the appearance of the house considerably by rebuilding the front and lobby.

The Missouri Legislature at Jefferson City passed House Bill 531, "prohibiting exhibitions of prize fights or glove contests and other immoral shows by means of moving picture films, magic lanterns, etc.," by a vote of 96 to 28.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS AT UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI

Public Course of Instruction with Pictures Proves Popular—Will Be Extended.

THE scientific and other educational pictures which are being shown at the University of Cincinnati are making a pronounced hit with the public. The hours at which they are shown are arranged to make it possible for everybody to be present, eight o'clock in the evening being the usual hour. One of the most interesting of the series, which was shown last week, was one showing the mining and preparation of potash at Stassfurt, Germany. A lecture accompanied the pictures, delivered by Prof. H. A. Huston, who is now associated with the company operating the German mines. The Cincinnati section of the American Chemical Society attended this lecture in a body. Other pictures in the series, shown recently, included "Shoe Manufacturing," "Shad and Herring Fishing," "Watchmaking," and so forth, and others are announced for the future. The marked popularity of the course has established moving pictures firmly at the University as a means of education, and it is expected that in the next season the course will be even more highly organized.

OBSCURE SITE NO HINDRANCE.

The Orpheum, which, in spite of being the largest house in Cincinnati devoted to moving pictures exclusively, and of its location in Walnut Hills instead of downtown, maintains a remarkable attendance record, recently added to its drawing power and assisted the seeker after amusement in locating it, by installing at the corner of Gilbert and McMillan avenue, the intersection popularly known as "Peebles' Corner," a good-sized electric sign. This is visible from a long way in either direction, and a hand pointing the way toward the theater, a half-block distant, makes it easy for persons not familiar with the neighborhood to locate the house. This sign is the second now used by the theater, as there has for some time been a large electric sign on the front of the building.

SHOW PEST ARRESTED.

A pest who seems to have been operating in picture theaters in several Ohio cities was finally arrested last week at Gallipolis, O., in the person of one Henry Myers, of Dayton, where it seems he was arrested some time ago charged with the same offense as that which caused his arrest in Gallipolis—that is, pinching young women in photoplay houses. He also made himself a nuisance in the same way on the streets, and by peeping into houses, while the necessary darkness of the theaters served his purpose admirably. Exhibitors are exercising extreme vigilance to protect their patrons from men of this stripe, and whenever one is landed there is corresponding rejoicing.

CHURCH SHOW IN PORTSMOUTH.

The First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, O., has been furnishing educational motion-picture entertainments to its young people, and others who care to come, with great success, an average attendance of five hundred at the exhibitions being reported. Such pictures as "Through the Island Passage to Alaska," "Jaffa, the Seaport of Jerusalem, and Its Orange Groves," "In the Days of Cromwell" and others are shown. High school students are admitted free of charge, while a charge of five cents for all others is made to defray expenses. The plan was started last fall and will probably be made permanent, the approval manifested having been so hearty. The success of such experiments indicates pretty clearly that it will pay exhibitors to anticipate them by laying more stress on educational pictures at their own houses.

CHARLES REARK DEAD.

Cincinnati film men, as well as a number of exhibitors, heard with regret last week of the death of Charles Reark, the pioneer motion picture exhibitor of Sandusky, O. He started Sandusky's first house, the "Theatorium," some years ago, and had conducted it ever since with much success, although recently, since Mr. Reark became less able to attend to business, Charles Schuckhardt has been acting as manager. Mr. Reark was a ball player on the Brooklyn National League team some years ago, and was always an ardent fan after his retirement from the game.

"The Caprices of Kitty," the Bosworth photoplay by Elsie Janis herself, in which that popular stage favorite made her debut as a film actress, proved to be a powerful drawing card the first half of last week at the Strand, full houses greeting the production at every performance. The Strand, in fact, is making good with the Paramount program in splendid style, according to Manager Lipson, who bears the double responsibility of running this house and the Family theater as well with apparent ease.

Workmen's Compensation

Indiana Workmen's Compensation Act Passed—Gov. Ralston Signs Bill—Certain Classes of Employers and Employees Excepted—Provides for Voluntary Exemption After Formal Notice, but "Contributory Negligence" Can No Longer Be a Plea.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE new Indiana workmen's compensation act, signed by Gov. Ralston, and in effect Sept. 1, 1915, brings under its operation "every employer and every employe"—with several exceptions—who is not engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

The principal exceptions are casual laborers, farm or agricultural laborers, domestic servants and their employers. Even these employers and employes, by voluntary agreement, may be brought under the act. Every employer and employe, except those specified, shall come under its operation on September 1, 1915, and pay or accept compensation for personal injury or death by accident under the new system. Any employer or employe, however, may exempt himself from the act by notice in specified form. But this has to be given thirty days prior to any suit unless the person injured has not been in the employment thirty days. A copy of the notice of exemption from the law must also be filed with the state industrial board, which is also created. Either an employer or employe who has exempted himself may, by proper notice at any time, waive such exemption, and enjoy the benefit of the new law. When the employe brings himself under the operation of the act, he automatically "surrenders all other rights and remedies at common law, or otherwise, on account of injury or death."

The new law does not relieve any employer or employe from just penalty for failure to perform the requirements of any statutory law. The law provides that no compensation shall be allowed for an injury or death due to the employe's wilful misconduct, including intentional self-inflicted injury, intoxication and wilful failure or refusal to use a safety appliance, or to perform a duty required by statute.

Section 10 of the law reads: "Every employer who elects not to operate under this act shall not in any suit at law by an employe to recover damages for personal injury or death by accident be permitted to defend any such suit at law upon any one or all of the following grounds: (a) That the employe was negligent. (b) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employe. (c) That the employe had assumed the risk of injury.

FINE NEW THEATER FOR GARY.

Work on a new $40,000 theater for Gary, Ind., will begin within a short time at the northwest corner of Broadway and Seventeenth street. The building will be erected and the theater occupied by the Wolf Syndicate Company, of which V. U. Young, manager of the Orpheum theater, is a member. This is the fourth amusement place in Gary in which the syndicate is interested. It will have a seating capacity of 750. The location of the theater is on the south side of the city, which is thickly populated, but where there are few places of amusement. The management of the theater will show vaudeville, moving pictures and some tabloid musical comedies. The building will not be ready for occupancy until about September 1.

SHORTER INDIANA ITEMS.

Throwing a "sop" to charity to get around the law for breaking the Sabbath while really keeeping the most of the profits from Sunday performances was charged against the Richmond picture show managers in the Richmond Ministerial Association meeting held recently. A committee was ordered to work out some plan of procedure regarding the local situation.

A lecture on "Our Own America and Her Exposition of 1915" was given by Dr. Frederick V. Fisher, manager of the bureau of lectures of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, at the Murat theater, Indianapolis, for the Indianapolis Shriners. The lecture was accompanied by official motion pictures of the Panama Canal.

The Minuet Amusement Company, of Ft. Wayne, has been incorporated to operate theaters. The capital is $5,000 and the incorporators are Edmund H. Seelberg, A. B. Rothschild and R. M. Pollack.

The Brazil Theaters Company, Brazil, Ind., has been incorporated for $6,000 to operate opera houses. The incorporators are S. M. Grimes, A. D. Davis and R. M. Kidd.

Sam Dreyfuss has become the sole owner of the Princess theater, Terre Haute.

Chris. Winkenhoefer will open a new moving picture theater in Huntingburg, Ind.

A series of extensive improvements have just been completed at the Luna-Lite theater at Marion. The whole interior of the popular movie house has been redecorated and now presents a most attractive appearance.

Gilbert Hooton, who formerly conducted the "Owl" restaurant in Tipton, is now the proprietor of a moving picture theater in Lafayette.

Louis Hayes, proprietor of the Empress and Dreamland theaters in Mt. Vernon, has purchased the Nickelodeon in Henderson, Ky.

Shelbyville is to have another moving picture house. William Meloy will open a theater on South Harrison street in the near future.

The O. J. C. Film Company, which was recently organized in Tipton, has made arrangements to make films for the following cities: Peru, Logansport, Kokomo, Elwood and Noblesville. Paul Curry is doing the advance work and Ora Coppock, the operator of the company, takes the pictures.

Landry and Dyall, managers of the Royal theater, Odon, have leased the Lyric at Elnora and have given their initial show in that city. The Royal and Lyric are using the same film service.

A short circuit in the wiring at the Lincoln theater, Valparaiso, put an end to the show recently, and the customers were given their admission back. Harry La Tour, the manager, went to the basement and found a good sized fire started, which he smothered.

The Star theater, a new moving picture house, has opened at Avilla.

Raymond Pleak and Orla Howard, of St. Paul, have closed a deal whereby they come into possession of a lot near the traction station in that city. They will erect a building on the lot for moving picture purposes.

JACKSONVILLE THEATRICAL CLUB FORMALLY OPENED

New Club Throws Its Doors Open—Will Be Hospitable to Visiting Players.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE formal opening of the new Theatrical Club in the club quarters on Tuesday evening, March 9, was a brilliant and auspicious affair, attended by members and friends of the city, including local professional people from the motion picture studios, transient professionals and theater people.

The evening's entertainment included a program of talent selected from professional and local people.

Mr. D. J. Prince introduced the performers. "Baby" Lewis gave a dance number and followed with a recitation. The little tot was well received. Another number of the Orpheum bill was Mr. Ward of the "Will J. Ward and Girls" act, with a few selections on the piano. His work was greatly enjoyed. Miss Ethel LaRue, of the act, sang a duet with Martin Van Bergen. The number was a comedy song number and Miss LaRue made a decided impression, as did Mr. Van Bergen, who is an excellent baritone singer. Miss Hart of the "Billy and Marie Hart" act gave some vocal selections that were good.

Manager George E. Schmidt, of the Prince theater, gave a comedy character song number. His work set the audience in good humor and was encored heartily. Barwald and Barker, a team of professional dancers, gave some exhibitions of late dances and were given close attention. They are well known locally, and were well received. "Goldy" Goldstein, a local performer, did well. Mr. Fred Haynes, of the Kalem studio, gave a well received character impersonation of a French Canadian.

After the program the guests were served a course of refreshments. Music during the evening was furnished by the Orpheum orchestra. Two members of the orchestra will play each evening at the club for dancing, from 11 to 1. The band from the Sheesley carnival played in the rooms during the evening.

Among those present from the motion picture studios were Mr. Guy Coombs, Miss Anna Nillson, Mr. and Mrs. John Mackin, Mr. Jere Austin, Miss Jane K. Reed, Mr. Fred Haynes and Mr. Arthur Albertson. Managers of the picture theaters were in attendance.

The club is the result of the work of Messrs. D. J. Prince, Carl F. Rettick and Chas. A. Leach, Jr., and others. The club rooms are open to transient members of the profession, and all performers who are coming through Jacksonville are urged to make the club their headquarters while in the city. Carl F. Rettick is the manager.

STUDIO JOTTINGS.

Miss Katharine La Salle, who came down to work in "An Innocent Sinner" at the local Kalem studio, has returned to New York City. Her part was that of a country girl and she made an excellent impression here.

Miss Fania Marinoff, a well known Broadway favorite, is here for a picture at the Kalem. The picture is "The Secretary," and it is being directed by Mr. Kenean Buel. Members of the cast went to Mayport, Fla., recently, in the private yacht belonging to Mr. F. J. Marion, secretary-treasurer of the Kalem company.

Chas. Kent Owen, scenic and portrait artist at the Kalem, painted a life size portrait of Miss Alice Joyce a few weeks ago while she was working in "The Madonna," a three-reel picture. The madonna picture was recently used in a convent scene in "The Sixth Commandment," which Director Robert G. Vignola is directing, with Miss Alice Hollister and Harry Milarde.

A number of the Kalem players attended a recent masquerade dancing party at Fairfield Hall. All of them were in costume. Those who attended were Miss Jane K. Reed, in a colonial-dame make-up; Mr. Jere Austin, as a cowboy; Al Miles, in Indian costume; Jack A. Macomber, who had a good Dutch make-up; Harry Hembrow, as a tramp, and Mrs. Robert Walker in a Spanish costume, and Ray Parramore, as a tough character.

It is thought that the Lubin studio will be opened in a few days and that Director A. D. Hotaling will return from Philadelphia soon.

"Runaway June" is making many friends for the Savoy theater, and the "June" day is one of the best of the week.

Slager and Estelle, a team of comedy song entertainers, are at the Imperial. Mr. Slager was formerly a member of the Slager and Hall act and the present team is making good with their work.

Arthur Geary is appearing at the Republic theater in song numbers. He is now in his second week and he is proving a good entertainer.

WAR DEPARTMENT FINDS FILMS AID DISCIPLINE

Buys Sixty Machines and Will Give Picture Shows at Army Encampments —How Films Are Rented.

In speaking of the value of motion pictures from a standpoint of discipline and the efficiency of the commands, an officer of the Quartermaster Corps, under which branch of the service the purchase of such supplies is made, said: "When we get a large command in the field at such places as Texas City and Galveston" (at which places extensive maneuvers were held on two occasions when difficulties threatened along the Mexican border), "motion pictures will prove a great aid to discipline in keeping these men amused and contented and keeping them in camp at night. They will also be of great value in the matter of instruction. Motion pictures have been taken at the service schools of the army and there are many films showing life in the navy, target practice, etc., all of which will help in the training of our troops.

"The matter of obtaining films will be left entirely with the individual chaplains. It is the usual thing to charge a small admission fee to such entertainments; at some posts it is customary to sell little books of fifty tickets each for one dollar—sometimes the admission fee is five cents, sometimes ten cents. In this way funds will be available for the purchase or rental of suitable pictures. The chaplains will be furnished with a fund out of which they can make purchases of lantern slides for use in connection with the stereopticon features of the machines for illustrating such lectures as the chaplains or others may give. These they will be able to exchange among themselves for the benefit of all the posts."

Motion pictures in the army and navy form the most popular type of amusement and the soldiers are well pleased with the action taken by the War Department in obtaining for them the means of having their own shows right on the fort reservations. They will be all the more acceptable when the soldiers go into camp away from their home stations, especially when located at some considerable distance from a town or city which is often the case.

Prior to making a choice of the type of machine to be furnished, officials of the Quartermaster Corps made extensive investigations and had submitted to them sample machines of the various makes. These were installed on the fifth floor of the State, War and Navy Building and practical tests were made of each at intervals. The placing of so large an award has naturally attracted considerable attention among the machine men and they have been looking forward to it with no little expectancy.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

The Precision Machine Company, of New York, has been awarded a contract to supply the United States Army with sixty-six Simplex motion picture projecting machines at a price of $206 each. These machines are to be turned over to the chaplains at the different army posts and in the field, together with the full equipmen of a theater, tents, each 40 feet by 80 feet, folding chairs, and later with generating sets.

Bernard Depkin and William Fait, Jr., both of whom are exhibitors in Baltimore, Md., were visitors here last week.

Jack Levy, manager of the Philadelphia branch for the Greater New York Film Rental Company, was seen at the local office during the week.

W. R. Wilkerson, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, came to Washington from Greensboro, N. C., for the purpose of securing features and other desirable films for the several houses operated by that company.

Fears Uncensored Films

Crandall Finds Brilliant Example of Censorship Advocate Who Admits She Has No Personal Knowledge of Pictures but Hears They Are Bad—Sees Danger of Federal Censorship Unless People Are Awakened—Will Lend His Theater.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

HARRY CRANDALL, Robert Campbell and Dr. William P. Herbst appeared before one of the women's organizations of the Mount Pleasant district last week taking up with its members the subject of censorship. In speaking of the meeting Mr. Crandall stated that he was surprised to learn that those who were the most active in the discussion were those who knew the least about modern motion pictures. He informed the World correspondent that one of the ladies stated that she would very much like to attend some of the shows, but that she had always felt that they were very much of the blood and thunder variety and she had no desire of witnessing even pictured hair-raising events. Mr. Crandall gave her a list of some of the well known productions that had been shown at his theater, and she in turn was surprised at the many celebrated novels and dramas that had been filmed. All of her knowledge of the evil done by the moving picture houses was based on hearsay evidence, for she admitted that she had been inside one on but a single occasion, when a children's play was produced. Others of the party had never visited a picture theater, while those who did were in strong sympathy with the exhibitors. Messrs. Crandall, Campbell and Herbst are strongly of the opinion that they have done much to convince these women that the pictures are not nearly as bad as they are said to be.

To meet the argument advanced by the women that many of the shows, even accepting the statements of the exhibitors as to the well-known plays filmed, are not suitable for children, Mr. Crandall laid before them an offer to pay out each week the sum of $15 for the rental of such films as would appeal to children alone, to turn over his house to the organization for the hours between 9 and 11 o'clock each Saturday morning, and to give the ladies the privilege of donating the proceeds from all of the tickets, which they were to sell, to any charity that they might select. Alhough his offer was accepted, he has not as yet been called upon to pay out the $15 weekly.

Mr. Crandall further states that it is his intention to attend all such meetings in the future that may be held in Washington with a view to educating the people as to the value and the good of motion pictures. Although refusing to agree to any statement which infers that any pictures are immoral or bad, he honestly believes that national censorship is inevitable unless the exhibitors get busy and present facts to the public showing them that censorship will do more harm than good. It would be well, he said, if exhibitors in other cities would do this same thing, and, further, that the giving of a special children's exhibition each Saturday would further the cause. It would at least put a stop to the talk that nothing is done for the children along his line and when the argument is advanced that the average show is not fit for children, the answer would be ready that the Saturday shows are for their benefit, while all other shows were for grown-ups. He advocates an educational campaign along this line. In his work here he will have the co-operation of a large number of exhibitors.

KEEP FILMS IN CONDITION.

Sidney B. Lust, of the United Film Service Company, is proving to be quite an inventive genius. His latest move is to hook up his rewinding machines with an electric motor with an attachment to regulate its speed. He has found that inspection and repairs can be made in much quicker time and there is not that waste of energy required when the film is run between the cleaning pads. As a preservative of stored films, he has soaked a quantity of absorbent cotton with listerine and on top of this he has placed a number of moth balls. This serves to prevent the films from becoming brittle when allowed to stay in the safe too long, and also adds to their life because of the fact that they take up and absorb the vapor which arises from the concoction.

V. R. Whitaker is spending several weeks on the road handling "Hypocrites." This production is booked into April and will come to Washington for a week at the Columbia (legitimate) theater, beginning March 28, on a return engagement, it having been run here for a like period recently.

"Salambo" is running at the Columbia theater all of this week, it being presented there by Harry Crandall. When we consider the long run of "Hypocrites" and several other large productions, and now "Salambo," running for a week or more, it would appear as though the old cry that it is impossible to run a repeater in Washington had been exploded.

HOFHEIMER EMBARRASSED.

John A. Cutchins and C. M. Chichester have been appointed receivers of the property in this city controlled by Moses L. Hofheimer, of Richmond and Lynchburg, Va., in anciliary proceedings brought in connection with alleged financial difficulties of the defendant in the Virginia cities. A petition has been filed in the Richmond courts by several creditors to have him adjudged a bankrupt, the creditors and their claims being as follows: A. C. Houston, for contract work, $2,210; Reuben Burton, for repair work and money loaned, $253.70, and Nick C. Redford and Arthur Garrett, contractors and co-partners, trading as Redford & Garrett, for brick work on building on West Broad street, Richmond, used as a garage, $1,000. The petitioners calim that within the four months preceding the filing of the petition, while insolvent, he committed an act of bankruptcy in suffering a judgment to be rendered against him by the Law and Equity Court of Richmond in favor of W. J. Rahily and Charles L. Seyle for $1,385, with interest from May 15, 1914, and costs of $8.47; on December 30, in the same court, a judgment in favor of Joseph Bryan's executors for the sum of $534.15, with interest from December 1, 1914, and costs of $6.85; on January 16, 1915, in the same court, a judgment for $103.50 in favor of Bowles & Jones, Inc., the effect of which is to give preference to such judgment creditors, which said judgments have not been satisfied. It is further averred that he committed a further act of bankruptcy in February in admitting in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.

Mr. Hofheimer owns and conducts the Little theater, and leases and conducts the New theater, in Richmond, Va., and another house, on leased property, in Lynchburg, Va. He is the owner of the Ingleside apartments, in Washington, D. C., said to be valued at between $50,000 and $60,000, on which there are two mortgages, with principal and interest amounting to about $43,000, and it is to protect his holdings in the latter that the anciliary receivers were here appointed.

CUTEY BECOMES A LANDLORD (March 29).—Suspended from college and almost broke, Cutey is left in town to study with a tutor, while his parents go South. Becoming desperate from worrying over money matters, Cutey rents out his father's house to Mr. Harley, who announces his family consist of one daughter. It looks like easy money until the butler, who, of course, knows all about Cutey's little scheme, begins to make trouble. After securing half the rent money, the butler tells Cutey he intends taking a permanent vacation. As a consequence, Cutey has to act the part of the butler himself. Next day the Harleys move in and Cutey, acting as the butler, realizes to his horror that he has met Rose previously. She recognizes him at once, but keeps silent, and proceeds to enjoy a little fun at his expense. To get rid of his tutor, Cutey pretends to be very ill, and the tutor writes to the young man's parents to come home at once. Cutey meets with many ludicrous mishaps in trying to carry out his role as butler. He is finally caught attempting to steal some of his own clothes. Harley, greatly enraged, fires the "butler." Cutey determines to call on Rose without his disguise and confess. He selects the day on which his parents arrive. As he is supposed to be sick abed, Cutey desperately convinces Rose that the people at the door are escaped lunatics. He then quickly dons a bathrobe and a sickly smile and admits his parents. Father is all sympathy until he happens to discover some of Rose's clothing, and the girl herself, in the closet. Then there is great excitement, greatly augmented by the return of Harley. Cutey finally has to clear things up by confessing the truth of how he became a "landlord." The parents are not at all displeased on learning he and Rose are in love, and all are soon the best of friends.

THE ENEMIES (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts March 30).—On his return to his ship, Captain Waverlie brings with him his sister Minnie, a woman once beautiful, but now emaciated from the continual use of stimulants. The Captain showers every tenderness upon her, but after a week ashore at New York he returns alone, broken-hearted, and tells the steward she is dead. Irene, the ship-owner's daughter, falls in love with Captain Waverlie, but he courteously keeps his distance. She is piqued and accepts the attentions of Sargent, a prominent lawyer. In Sargent the Captain instantly recognizes the man he has long searched for. He has a dermatological operation performed, transforming his facial characteristics into those of a handsome man, and shortly afterwards is promoted to the command of a new four-masted vessel. The Captain is filled with a fierce joy at the realization of the power invested in him. In accordance with his plans, Waverlie engages a couple of heavy-fisted brutes for mates, then has "Glasgow Mike" shanghai a wild crew of roustabouts aboard his ship. The Captain double-crosses "Glasgow"—against whom he has an old grudge—by having him shanghaied in turn, together with Sargent, the lawyer. Once at sea, the two men are treated to tastes of the rope's end and the first mate's fists. Blaming Sargent for their predicament, "Glasgow" hurls a marlinspike at him, but it misses and Sargent kills the fellow, for which he is put in irons. After enduring every variety of abuse, Sargent receives a fatal hurt at the mate's hands. Then the Captain reveals his identity and, in a terrible denunciation, reminds Sargent of how he had wrecked his sister's life, after which he leaves the miserable man alone with three pictures—Irene, Waverlie and Minnie, the woman for whose death he is responsible. That night the moonlight reveals to the Captain that his enemy is dead.

A FORTUNE HUNTER (March 31).—When Rupert's uncle tells him he must quit his writing and offers him a real job in his tannery, the young man rises in his wrath and dramatically leaves his uncle's home, saying that he will go forth to the big city and carve out his fortune with his pen. After many hardships and cold rebuffs from the cruel publishers and editors he begins to despair, especially when he has to give his landlady his watch in lieu of rent money. By a most peculiar accident, one of his rejected stories falls into the hands of I. S. Skinnem, a get-rich-quick schemer, and Rupert, on the strength of his flowery style and phraseology, secures a good job with him as an "ad" writer. He gets along very well and, although he feels he is "crucifying" his art, has sense enough to know he is making his bread and butter. He realizes there is some crooked work going on, but keeps his mouth shut, and all goes well, until one morning he arrives at the office to find the place has been raided and cleaned out by the authorities. Then he goes into the depths of despondency for fair. While all looks blackest, the landlady shows him a personal in the newspaper to the effect that his uncle has died, leaving Rupert his heir, and the lawyers want to get hold of him as soon as possible. Rupert is filled with joy and starts for home in great anticipation. He meets the lawyers and, after the necessary red tape, the papers are turned over to him. He goes through them eagerly and finds that the comfortable fortune of $50,000 is well invested—in the "Mexican Rubber Plant Company," for which Rupert had worked and which had gone to the bad. Weakly dropping into a chair, poor Rupert slowly tears the worthless stock certificates into bits. Wending his way back to the tannery he applies for the job he had despised.

LIFTING THE BAN OF COVENTRY (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—March 27).—Worth Stuyvesant, the only son of a wealthy widow, receives an appointment to West Point. His mother, and sweetheart, Mary Putnam, object to his becoming a soldier, but he is stubborn and enters the Academy. Mary attends many of the "hops" and attracts the attention of Cadet David Hanks, who falls in love with her, but she still favors Worth. Hanks insults his successful rival and they have a fist fight, in which Worth comes out victorious. Completing the course at the Academy, he is assigned to the 39th Infantry at Fort Clark, Texas, with a rank of lieutenant. Before he leaves for duty he importunes Mary to marry him, but she refuses under a year. After joining his regiment at Fort Clark, his mother and sweetheart bombard him with letters asking him to resign, but he refuses.

Mary finally writes that he will either have to give up the service or her. Worth's pride is hurt and he commences to drink. His conduct is reported to his commanding officer, who sends him to Del Rio, a sub-post, for sixty days' tour of duty. Life at Del Rio is dull and in looking for amusement, Worth wanders into a dance hall, where he meets Lola Montez, an adventuress. He becomes a frequent visitor to the dance hall, always being seen in the company of Lola. One day she plies him with drinks and when he is in a dazed condition, she enlists the assistance of two of her cronies and marries her soldier lover. When Worth finally realizes his position, he determines to make the best of it and fits up a home for his wife, who renounces her old life and becomes a model helpmate. The state of affairs is reported to headquarters at Fort Clark and at a meeting of officers, it is decided to send Worth to coventry and keep him at Del Rio so long as he remains in Texas.

Six years elapse, during which time a daughter is born, whom they name Helen. During his assignment at Del Rio, Worth has had no social intercourse with the rest of the regiment, but the entire command being ordered to Fort Blake, Mich., and Worth coming in direct personal contact with his fellow-officers, the full force of the ban of coventry is made apparent. The ostracism even includes the children and little Helen, too young to understand, is heartbroken. The situation becomes extreme and Hanks, who was also assigned to the 39th and who became a warm personal friend of Worth's, tries to have the ban raised, but it voted down. The worry affects Lola, and she is taken sick and dies. Worth takes Helen to his mother, who consents to receive her, and the child becomes a great favorite, not only with Mrs. Stuyvesant, but with Mary Putnam. Worth is ordered to the Philippines and in a fight with the Phillipinos is mortally wounded, his last words being, "Tell mother and Mary I have at last lifted the ban of coventry."

KALEM.

POISON (Special—Two Parts—March 29—Produced in co-operation with "The Ladies' World," and Professor Lewis B. Allyn, of Westfield, Mass.).—Jack Webb, son of a manufacturer of adulterated foods, enters his father's business. The conditions obtaining in the factory fill the boy with horror. From Mary Hart, one of the employees, Jack learns that the workers are underpaid. Later, Mary's mother becomes seriously ill following a meal in which Webb products figure.

A representative of the Ladies' World informs Jack of the great work being conducted by Professor Lewis B. Allyn, of Westfield, Mass. The young man visits Westfield and obtains a mass of facts from the great champion in the fight against adulterated foods. Armed with these facts, Jack confronts his father. The latter laughs at his son as an impractical theorist and boasts of his ability to buy a place for his products in the Westfield Book of Pure Foods.

Webb visits Professor Allyn and attempts to bribe the latter into endorsing his products. Allyn destroys the check, informs Webb that his foods will be endorsed without cost when they come up to the Westfield standard, and orders the man from his office. Disgruntled, the manufacturer returns home.

In the Webb mansion, the manufacturer's six-year-old daughter breaks into the jam closet and partakes of some of her father's coal-tar-dyed jam. Two hours later, Webb sends for a doctor. Only emergency methods save his daughter's life. The crisis is barely past when the man receives word that his factory is burning down. But a light has dawned upon Webb and the news has no effect upon him. Realizing the menace which lies in products such as his, Webb announces his intention of erecting a factory where foods of the highest quality only shall be manufactured.

HAM IN THE HAREM (March 30).—In taking up the bootblack profession in the Orient, Ham and Bud overlook one thing—the natives do not wear shoes. While discussing ways and means of obtaining the next meal, they see Fatima, the Sultan's favorite, passing. They follow Fatima. Disguised as messenger boys, the adventurers succeeded in entering the Sultan's palace. By knocking a guard over the head, Ham and Bud are able to make their way into the harem. The two are in the midst of teaching the Sultan's wives the tango, fox-trot and maxixe, when the ruler and a number of guards enter and make the adventurers prisoners.

The Sultan informs Ham and Bud that their one chance to escape beheading is to amuse him. They are given ten minutes in which to do this. For nine minutes Ham and Bud vainly strive to interest their captor. Then, they start an imaginary poker game. The sultan promptly becomes interested and demands to be taught the game. Ham and Bud gladly take him in hand. But the Sultan finds that learning to play poker is mighty expensive. Before long Ham has won all the money and Fatima as well. The Sultan sends for Abdul El Cohen, his money-lender, but the latter refuses to advance any more cash. In punishment, the Sultan knocks the money-lender over the head and dumps him into a chute leading to the river. The Sultan tries to serve Ham and Bud the same way, but they get him first and send him after Abdul El Cohen. The adventurers go back to the harem, only to learn that Fatima has eloped with her lover. Heartbroken, the two return to the chute room, bid the fond world sad farewell and dive headlong down the chute.

THE WRITING ON THE WALL (Episode No. 10 of the Girl Detective Series—March 31).—Who stabbed Webster, multi-millionaire? The Girl Detective and her assistant, Warrington, endeavor to solve the mystery. They learn that the would-be murderer had made the attack while concealed behind the portieres hanging in front of the millionaire's library windows. The letters F. O. B. A. burnt in the handle of the knife, afford the first clue. The sleuths discover that Webster had received a missive signed by the "For Our Brothers Association," a few days previous to the assault. This letter ordered him to divide his wealth with his fellow men.

The night after the Girl Detective consents to handle this case, Webster awakens to find a man in his room. He shoots at the intruder, but the latter escapes. When the lights are turned on a message, warning Webster to obey the letter he had received, is found scrawled on the wall. Alarmed, the millionaire prepares to flee the city. At his request, the Girl Detective and Warrington accompany him. As the three are speeding away in Webster's auto, it is overhauled by another machine containing a number of armed men. The millionaire and the detectives are made prisoners and taken to the rendezvous of the F. O. B. A.

Webster is ordered to sign a document in which he agrees to turn over the major part of his fortune to the organization. In the dispute which follows, the Girl Detective makes her escape. She returns shortly with a force of policemen and the desperadoes are captured just as the ringleader is about to slay Webster. The Girl Detective shoots the would-be murderer in time to save the millionaire's life.

A LUCKY LOSER (March 31).—Smith has a difficult job in getting away to the club to spend the evening and some hard earned money with the boys. The phone rings and wifey is immediately suspicious. She demands an explanation and one is given her. Smith's friend has just fallen out of a tenth story window and he wants to see Smith at once. Mrs. Smith ecquiesces at first, but then refuses to let him go. He is just as insistent and when his back is turned, she takes his money from the pocket of the suit he is about to put on. At the club, Smith drops the empty wallet and Jenks, an unscrupulous waiter, picks it up.

Jenks discovers that there is no money in the wallet and hands it back to Smith pretending that the owner has just dropped it. When it comes his turn to pay, Smith discovers his loss, and immediately accuses Jenks of the theft. The police take the waiter out as Smith leaves for home to replenish the wallet. As he is at the safe, he hears his wife, and leaving the door ajar, rushes into a closet. Mrs. Smith notes the open door and thinking there are burglars in the house, calls in the police. Half suffocated, Smith drops out of the closet into the arms of a minion of the law.

Explanations are in order and all laugh but Smith, who is more than a little peeved. As he is telling Mrs. Smith what's what and who's who and what not, a policeman enters and informs him that he is entitled to the reward offered for the capture of Jenks, a noted crook.

THE PRIZE BABY (March 20).—This picture has been substituted in place of "The Wayville Slumber," originally scheduled to be on the same reel with "On the Road to Reno," a synopsis of which story appeared on page 1656 of the issue dated March 13. Information was received too late for correction to be made in the Licensed Calendar and Licensed Release Dates published in March 13 number. Exhibitors will please observe this change in making up their programs. The story of "The Prize Baby" follow.

The Blood & Gore Company has a tragic end in Kettleville. The stranded actors endeavor to beat their board bill by lowering themselves from an upstairs window of the hotel by the light of the moon, and after being shot at a few times by the proprietor, make their getaway. After traveling weary miles over the rails, on foot, they lie down to rest for the night in an old corn field. The next day brings them to a town, where they learn that a "Better Baby" show is going to be held that afternoon. The grand prize to be given is $100. They at once resolve to win the prize. The fat boy of the company proposes to wear a baby's costume that he uses in the show. They all think it a good idea and dress him up. They get an old cart and wheel him to the show. He is awarded the first prize on account of his wonderful development and causes much amusement. All goes well until one of the infants is taken ill with smallpox and the whole place is quarantined. They undertake to vaccinate the big baby but he objects and a free-for-all fight is started. The police are summoned and the Big Baby is wheeled away and locked up. Thus leaving the Blood & Gore Company again stranded.

PATSY BOLIVAR SERIES NO. 14.—Patsy Married and Settled (March 29).—Four years have passed since Patsy's marriage. He has been blessed with twins, and has become a prosperous berry farmer. Sykesy's marriage has been an unhappy one, and his inability to earn a living have drawn him and Tilly further away from each other. When the landlord comes to collect his rent or evict them, Sykesy decides to secure some kind of employment, and strangely enough secures it from his old enemy Patsy, who, in pity for Sykesy's ill luck, magnanimously forgets the past. We see him at work packing berries for his old enemy, while the latter is among the berry rows with his happy wife and twins. We also see that while happiness is deep, so are his troubles as the father of two bouncing girls who demand much more attention than his tiny wife can give them. Then a time comes when the stork is again expected and the care of the children devolves entirely on their father and grandfather, a task which they approach bravely and, be it said, successfully, the once irrascible Mr. Bolivar having become gentle as a woman in his love for his grandchildren. But Patsy's idea that ill luck has left him forever is turned to despair, when he is presented one early morning with triplets. But they are his very own, their little mother is well, and he is satisfied.

MONKEY BUSINESS (March 30).—When Gerald returns from an African trip he brings a young monkey which he has captured and tamed, intending to present it as a pet to his fiancee, Geraldine. Obliged to stop in New York a few days on business, Gerald tries to smuggle the monkey into a hotel but Jocko creates excitement. Gerald decides to ship the monkey to Geraldine immediately. The crate containing Jocko arrives in Geraldine's town in due time and on the same day. Geraldine receives a letter from Gerald saying he is sending her a pet and beseeching her to "take good care of the poor little thing." He also says that he "shot its mother." He neglects to state that the pet is a monkey. That's one cause of th mix-up that follows.

Fhile the box containing Jocko reposes in the baggage room and the baggageman is away on his lunch hour, a very large, fat colored lady with a very small black pickaninny falls asleep while waiting for the up train. The black baby wanders away to explore. It's not long before the pickaninny is in the monkey crate and the monkey is free. Then many things happen. The pickaninny is delivered to Geraldine, the monkey wanders where no monkey has ever wandered before and soon the old town is in a turmoil. Gerald arrives and is caught in the vortex, as it were. Of course, things are finally straightened out, but no one would have thought that one monkey and one pickaninny could have caused such a furore.

THE UNMARRIED HUSBAND (Special—Two Parts—March 31).—John Loyal, a hard-working bookkeeper, adopts Elsie, a five-year-old orphan. About this time John receives notice that he has come into a substantial inheritance. His employer, Scruggs is a close-fisted man and becomes covetous of John's newly acquired wealth. Scruggs' household expenses have been greatly increased by the sudden arrival of his niece, Nell Wharton, a stranded musical comedy queen, and the greedy old man sees a scheme to effect a marriage between John and Nell, and in time secure, through Nell, a large portion of John's money.

John, realizing the need of a mother for Elsie, ultimately falls a victim to Scruggs' plan and weds Nell. Having been accustomed to widely different environments, and possessing temperaments of marked contrast, Nell and John find themselves soon drifting into unhappiness. John, still the plodding bookkeeper, maintains his simple ideals and mingles with his plain-living neighbors as of old. Nell chooses her companions from among the Bohemian set, and little Elsie soon begins to bear the ill effects of the marital discontent. Scruggs is the ultimate recipient of many checks made out in favor of Nell, through his agreement with Nell to share alike all money she can wheedle out of John. At the same time, Nell, becoming desperate because of the restraints imposed through her simple mode of living, accepts the attentions of Hill, her former theatrical manager. Hill arranges a banquet for Nell's benefit at which he plans for her to meet her former theatrical associates and yield to his wishes to renew her former contract as an actress. Nell, in attending the banquet, leaves Elsie unwell at home. At the banquet, she soon agrees to comply with Hill's wishes and leave with him the following day.

Meanwhile John has returned home from night-work to discover Elsie growing rapidly worse. He has previously suspected Nell's growing intimacy with Hill, and now finds the note urging Nell to attend the banquet. In a rage he journeys to the fashionable cafe where the banquet is in progress, and in sternly forcing Nell to accompany him home, he knocks down Hill, who heightens the sensational scene by trying to oppose John in taking Nell away. John scores Nell severely after he has led her to the bedside of the sick child. Nell, in rage and humiliation, locks herself in her room. Meanwhile the enraged Hill, armed, enters the house with the intention of shooting John. Before he can fire, Elsie, who has heard the sound of the conflict, rushes into the hallway in time to receive the bullet intended for John. Hill is arrested while John hurries medical aid to the child. During the long weeks while Elsie is nursed to convalescence, Nell has ample time in which to regret and seek forgiveness. She confesses everything that led to her marriage with John, but pleads so earnestly to be allowed the privilege of proving herself a real wife and mother that John forgives. Soon John's old-time friends gather at his house, as formerly, and both he and Nell find the happiness that has been denied them through selfishness and misunderstanding.

THE WHITE MASH Special—Three Parts—April 1).—A synopsis of this picture was published on page 898 of February 6th issue.

IN THE BACKGROUND (April 2).—Carlo Estrada, a simple Italian who has come to America, toils at the heaviest kind of labor in order that his nineteen year old boy, Pietro, may become a famous violinist. Pietro, at the studio of his teacher, Signor Falco, meets Mrs. Ford Dayton, her daughter Lucy, and Richard Neville, a gallant, who is in love with Lucy. Mrs. Dayton asks Pietro to play at her musicale and Falco writes him a note advising that he shall keep his father in the background as the roughness of the old man might ruin the young artist's social chances. Estrada from his savings gives the boy money to rent a dress suit and Pietro intentionally leaves the note from Falco on the table. Estrada is deeply hurt, but resolves to keep in the background. A year passes and Lucy and Pietro are in love. Neville being jealous endeavors to humiliate Pietro at Lucy's birthday party. The old man has crept under the window of the mansion to hear his boy play and entering the house declares himself as the father. The society friends turn coldly from Pietro, all but one—the girl is true blue.

MOTHER OF PEARL (April 3).—John Diggs, scientist, is so deeply immersed in himself and his work that his wife, Pearl, is in despair. Then the mother of Pearl arrives. She is a grim, determined exponent of modern matrimony and with the aid of a dummy which she pounds unmercifully, she instructs Pearl how to care for an indifferent husband. She leaves, after a visit which has been a siege of horror for John, and then Pearl starts to follow out her instructions for curing her husband.

John seems to appear more and more indifferent. Pearl, in despair, forces him to accompany her to a social gathering where the eminent lecturer, Swenson, is to talk on "Italian Sharks I Have Known." As Swenson delivers his lecture in the tastily decorated drawing room, John in the audience, sits with an immense book on each side of him, utterly oblivious to the lecture and to the others in the audience, but absorbed in a new chemical test he is working out. He mixes the wrong sort of chemicals in his test tube, a great puff of smoke results, and the room is thrown into a panic. All except John, who sits in profound thought while the others scramble wildly for safety, wondering what his mistake could have been. Then the fire department, the police and ambulance surgeons arrive, and in the general crush, John is badly injured.

As he sits at home, propped in a rolling chair, Pearl hopes that his enforced idleness will permit him to give her some of his attention. But John continues to ponder over his books. Pearl, playing her last card, angrily packs up to leave the house. John, realizing at last how utterly indifferent he has been to her, pleads with her to stay, following her about the house in the rolling chair. He catches her just as she reaches the front door. She yields to his pleadings and agrees to give him one more chance. The next time the mother of Pearl calls, she is greeted with kisses by John, who, true to his promise, is now stopping work with the factory whistles.

MA'S GIRLS (Special—Two Parts—March 29).—Ma and Dad, with their two daughters, live in a cottage in a small western town. The sheriff is a friend of the family and a frequent visitor. Tom, the gambler, has tried to force his attention on Madge and Rose. The gambler plays cards in a bar-room with an assayer, and breaks him. Thereupon the assayer decides to end his life, but the gambler advances him some money, and the assayer signs an I. O. U. for the amount. Dad owns a small mine in the hills, and the assayer, who is out walking, sees Dad working in the mine. The assayer approaches, finds a valuable piece of quartz, and hurries off to assay it. Soon afterward, Dad also finds that the ore is rich, and goes to town to have it assayed.

Madge and Rose ride to town on horseback, and as they are about to enter a store, the gambler approaches and tries to force his attentions on Rose. The sheriff sees the gambler's actions, and warns him about insulting the girls in the future. The assayer upon his return, finds a note from the gambler that if he can tip him to some rich mine and keep the owner in the dark, he will cancel the I. O. U. he holds against him. Dad enters with his sample of ore. He is told by the assayer that it is worthless. When Dad leaves, the assayer looks up the gambler, tips him off to Dad's rich mine, and both visit Dad's mine. In the meantime, Dad has assayed the sample of ore at home, and when the gambler calls and tries to buy the mine, Dad refuses to sell it.

The gambler sees Madge and Rose riding home on horseback, and attacks Madge. Rose hears Madge's screams, rides back, throws her lariat over the gambler, and drags him by her horse across the ford. The following day the gambler visits a camp of renegades, and induces them to capture the two girls, and bring them to camp. Ma, becoming alarmed at their absence, mounts a horse and goes in search of them. She notifies the sheriff, who forms a posse, and led by Ma they start after the renegades. Ma kills the gambler in a running fight, after which Ma and the posse find the girls safe. The sheriff marries Rose, while Ma keeps Madge for herself.

THE LEGAL LIGHT (March 30).—Carrie Simpkins, a lady lawyer, arrives in a small western town and begins the practice of law. Pete, Jake and Jerry, three cowboys, fall in love with her, but do not progress. Smithers, the pioneer town lawyer happens by and sees the sign, "Carrie Simpkins, Lawyer," and decides to pay her a visit, which he does, and he also falls in love with her.

Pete, Jake and Jerry all hit upon the same plan unbeknown to each other, which will help their chances with Carrie. They scheme to rob the town grocery store at night, and leave something behind that will convict them of the crime. That night two professional crooks, who have arrived in town that day, rob the grocery store. Pete arrives on the scene and discovers the robbery and leaves his spurs behind as evidence that he did it. Jerry arrives, sneaks into the store and leaves his six-shooter behind as evidence that he is the culprit. Then Jake makes his way into the store and leaves his revolver behind as evidence that he performed the deed.

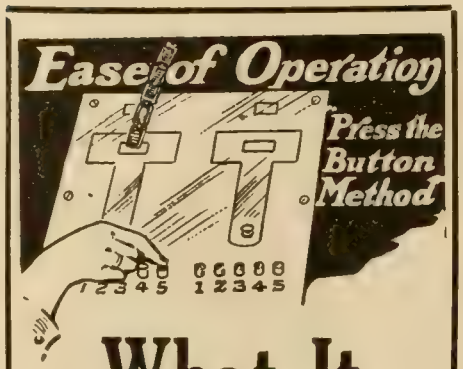
The storekeper opens his establishment next morning and calls the sheriff. That officer places Pete, Jake and Jerry under arrest with their guns and spurs as evidence against them. In the meantime, Smithers, the town lawyer, has been ardently pressing his lovesuit with Carrie Simpkins with the result that they get married. The three cowpunchers in court ask for Carrie to defend them and the Sheriff goes for her. He returns with Smithers, who smilingly tells the three boys that he has just married Carrie but would be pleased to defend them himself. This is too much for the boys to stand, and they fall back and collapse while Smithers looks on and laughs.

ASHES OF GOLD (March 31).—David Valley, a manufacturer, has a love for gold that amounts to a passion. Despite the fact that he possesses great wealth, he longs for more money. His passion for gold becomes an hallucination and he visits a brain specialist, who tells him that only complete isolation and rest will cure him of his passion. David and Dr. Stern repair to the Island of Rest, where David is recovering his health.

He meets Susan Moore, the beautiful young daughter of John Moore, a pensioned soldier. With the tones of the flute she charms the birds on the island, and also charms David. Susan's father meets death in an accident, and this fact unbalances Susan's mind. David, in watching over the girl, forgets his own illness. He takes her again to the trysting place, and plays soft notes on the flute, which brings her again to peace and understanding and true love.

PERILS OF THE JUNGLE (March 27).—Matt Dalton, a civil engineer, and his assistant, George Leighton, engage in Government survey work in Africa. Mrs. Dalton and her beautiful sister, Annette, accompany them. Leighton fears the home in the African jungle will not be sufficient protection against wild beasts and hostile savages and he installs a switchboard in the tree-house. A circle of dynamite mines are planted at vantage points encircling the abode, and they are connected by wires to the switchboard. George and Annette love each other and plight their troth.

While at survey work, a leopard springs on George, who has a narrow escape from death. Rose Dalton, alone in the tree-house, is attacked by natives. The chief covets the white woman and climbs the ladder before Rose can remove it. She is afraid to touch the switchboard. Annette, a hundred yards away, clambers into a tree, and with a shot from her trusty rifle she fells the native chief, who stands over the unconscious Rose. Then with keen aim, the bullets from her rifle strike the buttons of the switchboard, explode various mines, dealing death to many of the savages and frightening the others away. When Matt and George arrive on the scene the women fall into the men's arms for their nerves have collapsed after their experiences.



What It Stands For

The Automatic taken as the latest type of Ticket Selling Machine embodies all the most useful points and actually performs far more efficiently than human hands.

With the improved motor drive it is perfect in every detail and considered by experts the most wonderful Ticket Selling Machine in the world.

It Stands for Absolute Accuracy, Simplicity and Speed

The time will surely come when the Automatic will be as much a feature of every Theater as the Box Office Itself.

It marks the beginning of the New Box Office management for Quick Service and Accurate Records. It accomplishes the work of several employees, and leaves no doubt as to correct total.

Although the Automatic has achieved a rapid success, it is the ambition of the Company to have every Theater equipped the Automatic Way throughout the world.

SAVED FROM THE VAMPIRE (March 15).—Susan Sims is loved by Jonas Jazbo; but a He Vampire from the city, with a weakness for chickens, lures Susan away with a promise to elope with her in an hour if she brings her own lunch. Jonas observes what is happening and makes a desperate leap onto the moving automobile, but is thrown off. Rushing into the house, he arouses Susan's father. The old fellow is of little service, and Jonas departs alone for the city, where he tracks the vampire to his lair and rescues Susan.

AFTER THE STORM (Special—Two Parts—March 16).—Day after day Mary Cooper, the Quaker maid, waited in vain for Elmer Hilton to return and marry her as he had promised on that afternoon when the storm forced them to seek shelter in the deserted hut. She did not know that her lover was desperately ill. When he regained consciousness and urged his mother to bring Mary to him, it was too late; the stern Nathan Cooper had turned his daughter out of the house, and she was lost to sight. Unable to forget her, Hilton sought to temper the misfortunes of others. On his rounds with Dr. Gray, he visited the day nursery and was strangely drawn to one of the children. Eventually he adopted the lad, not knowing it was his own son. Then Nathan Cooper repented and advertised for Mary; with new hope she came to claim her child and was referred to Hilton. After years of separation and suffering the two met again and were happy at last.

HIS DESPERATE DEED (March 18).—Overjoyed on hearing that the inspectors had passed his cattle, the young rancher rode over to tell the girl about his good luck, and learned that her brother's cattle had been condemned. That night riders descended upon his corrals and drove off the cattle. But he had no time to follow them, for his mother was dangerously ill, and he must get a doctor at once.

As he plodded along the trail the mail carrier came galloping down the gulch. At pistol point he forced the man to give up his horse. The posse, aroused by the postmaster, came to his house to take him. The girl was there; her brother came seeking her, and she denounced him as the cattle thief. On her evidence her lover went free.

SEEKERS AFTER ROMANCE (March 19).—When the little restaurant waitress overheard the strange conversation of the two men she served, the temptation to break the routine of her humdrum life was too strong to be resisted. Hence the disguise in which she turned up at the construction camp and boldly interviewing Jack Benson, demanded a job. Meanwhile, in the city, Benson's brother had shown his letter to all the girls; and Mildred, "one of the nicest girls I know," was coming. Believing her love for Jack hopeless, Cleo went away. Benson found her asleep in the woods, her beautiful hair tumbled about her. Back at camp, Bill Wright, Benson's assistant, was enthusiastically kissing Mildred; and when Jack led the blushing Cleo in he had an inspiration: "Let's make a double wedding!"

WHEN THE TIDE TURNED (March 20).—Out of work, and unable to buy proper food for his sick wife, Mordaunt is desperate when the landlord calls a second time for the rent. "I'll get the money!" he declares, and goes to his old college friend, whom he has been reluctant to ask for help. Circumstances make it necessary that the friend should send him to his office, where he helps himself, by permission, to the money he needs. As the landlord, satisfied, is leaving the premises, he is halted by a policeman who arrests Mordaunt for murder. His friend's father has been found dead in the office. Suddenly a door opens and a man enters—the doctor, who has come to visit the sick woman. And outside he hears the honking of an automobile—his friend has come with good news. It is all a dream, born of anxious thoughts.

THE MAID OF ROMANCE (March 22).—Among all her suitors there is none who loves her; they are all after her money. So she leaves the little country town and, in the city, takes a post as governess to the youngest child of a newly rich widow, whose son has a position of trust in a business office. The young man falls in love with her, but dares not ask her to marry him because he is unworthy. He has been taking money from his employer's safe. Discovered, he is threatened with exposure unless he makes restitution—which he is unable to do. The girl learns the facts and reimburses his employer. Discovering what she has done, he comes to thank her, and is told that the governess has been discharged for carelessness. But he finds her again.

GOING OVER BIG

Kriterion has not only been hitting the high mark for those exchanges which are serving it, but also for the exhibitor. Any number of complimentary things are being said about Kriterion pictures.

The Good News Is Spreading Fast

Additional theatres are being put on by the exchanges each day. Every theatre which takes Kriterion Service is another argument why Kriterion pictures compose the service that is eventually going to be used by you.

There is naturally a reason why Kriterion is making such splendid headway.

Kriterion is not only built for today and tomorrow, but also for the months and years to come. One week's pictures are as good as the next. The best pictures were not made only for the first week. Those were splendid, the next week's were just as good. But better are coming.

There has been honesty back of the Kriterion statements. Big things were said about Kriterion Service. But everything that was said was done. Every promise made was kept. With such policy back of them Kriterion Pictures naturally must be successful.

Answer that impulse that has been prompting you to investigate Kriterion Service. Get in touch with the nearest exchange, or write us direct and we will send your inquiry to the proper office as fast as Uncle Sam can carry it.

The Quest

The Lost House

Book NOW

I didn't think they'd blow up a real steamship to do it!

THOUGH I knew that when the American Film Manufacturing Company started to make a distinctive creation, as its first contribution to Mutual Master-Pictures, actors and directors would stop at nothing.

Still—think of it—a real ship that has just steamed out to Santa Cruz Island—leaping into the air in flaming bits and then gurgling and bubbling to the bottom of the Pacific ocean before your eyes. There is no scenery about it, no canvass, no red fire,—just stern, vivid reality.

All this is just one scene in The Quest—which will be the first Mutual Master-Picture shown. There is an hour and a quarter more of it—all just as thrilling. Though some of the thrills come from your sympathy for one of the loveliest women you ever looked at, as you follow her from her South Sea island home and continue through all sorts of adventures in rich New York society.

But see the picture! Any day after March 22nd, at the theatre that shows Mutual Master-Pictures. Remember the name, THE QUEST—An American Distinctive Creation.

You see I'm keeping my promise to tell you the most interesting inside story of picture making you ever read.

There's Richard Harding Davis for instance

HE wrote us the second Mutual Master-Picture (first appearance March 25th) This one is called The Lost House. The Majestic Motion Picture Corporation made the film—it was not chosen because it was written by Mr. Davis. On the other hand, the fact that its author is one of the highest paid writers in the world shows that the Majestic Company stops at nothing to give you a wonderful show.

For more than an hour I sat gripping the arms of my chair so hard that my fingers were cramped—so intense was the interest.

Scene followed thrilling scene with a rapidity of incident and smashing climax that kept me on the edge of the seat from the minute the lights went out till I found myself after they came on an hour later.

Yet I suppose I've seen more moving pictures than most folks these ten years gone—and am as nearly screen-hardened as a man with red blood can ever get.

Yes—you want to see THE LOST HOUSE.

And you'll want your friends to see it.

So keep a good lookout for the posters and the newspaper notices. For many theatres only show a feature film one day.

Up to now the features good enough to hold a house the first day, and fill it fuller the second, have been mighty few

By the way, when you've seen The Quest and The Lost House—write me what you think of them. For what you think is more important than what I think.

Next week—there will be two more to tell you about here. I haven't seen them yet—and I can hardly wait. Meantime, to be certain you get them soon, just say to your nearest theatre owner,

"I want to see

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Special Two Parts—March 23).—With her dying breath their mother commended his weak brother to his care. So, as soon as he won success in the West, he sent for Jack. The boy fell under the bad influence of the ranch foreman and a halfbreed cowpuncher, but even in his wildness there was something of good, for it was in the Last Chance saloon that he met Carlotta, the extraordinary woman who owned the place. On the day that Joe became sheriff, Jack resented the foreman's insult to Carlotta. A few hours afterward the foreman was found on a lonely trail, shot through the heart. Joe had to arrest his brother, whose pistol and hat were found on the scene of the crime. Carlotta refused to believe the evidence and, visiting the spot, picked up a trail which led into the desert. Presently she came upon an exhausted man—the halfbreed, who, after being discharged by the foreman, had killed him in a drunken fit and fled. To obtain Jack's pistol he had given in exchange his fine Mexican sombrero, which Carlotta had desired for a curio, and had taken Jack's hat for good measure. Carlotta, returning with him, arrived in time to prevent the infuriated cowboys from lynching the man she loved.

THE LOVE TRANSCENDENT March 25).—John Gage loves Ruth West, but she marries his friend, Charles Grey. The young couple are apparently happy; a child is born to them. Suddenly Ruth discovers that her husband has been systematically robbing his employer. Threatened with imprisonment unless he refunds the money he has stolen, Grey is at his wits' end. Ruth appeals to her erstwhile lover for aid. John Gage has been despondent in his loneliness, and has been saved from suicide by a prospector with whom he has struck up a friendship. He welcomes an opportunity to help Ruth. Returning home with the money, she finds her husband dead by his own hand. With her child she goes back to join John.

A STOP-OFF IN NEW MEXICO (March 26).—The inquisitive tourist disturbs the slumbers of a "bad man" who is taking his siesta near the railroad station. Fleeing for his life, the tourist soon creates a sensation in a sleepy town, and provides plenty of excitement for the other passengers before the limited train pulls out. Meanwhile, his wife is in "a state of mind" over his disappearance; and when he returns she is so thankful that she readily forgives his escapade.

A HOT-FOOT ROMANCE (March 26).—A tramp steals Smith's shoes off the back porch and evades capture. Smith and the policeman chase a reputable citizen who, on his way to be married, is carrying his shoes because his feet hurt him. Things get so hot that the bridal party leaves the house and is whisked away in an automobile. The car behaves so strangely that they abandon it and perform the ceremony in the open road, running at top speed from the pursuers, who finally catch the tramp asleep in the automobile.

A FOOTHILL PROBLEM (March 27).—Unable longer to stand her brother's brutality, the girl runs away with a stranger. He, too, proves to be a brute; and at the first opportunity she deserts him—on the trail, where he camps for the night. Wandering, she reaches a lone prospector's cabin and is given shelter after telling her story. The man is a sharp contrast to the others; she clings to him when, in the morning, the stranger discovers where she is, and later when her brother also finds her. Daunted by the prospector, the stranger departs and meets the girl's brother, whom he tricks into believing that the prospector is the guilty man. At the cabin the brother leans the true state of affairs, and goes after the blackguard. A desperate running fight between them culminates in the death of both, and the girl is free.

MINA.

A BARBER-OUS AFFAIR (April 8).—Harry is the proud owner of a barber shop, he also has in his employment a pretty manicurist, who takes the eye of all the gentlemen who come in to be shaved. On one occasion objecting to the manner in which Georgie shows his affections for this manicurist, Harry becomes angry and requests him, by the point of his boot to leave his shop. Great is the fall thereof, but Georgie's heart is gladdened when the manicurist decides to throw in her fate with him, and together they plan a rival shop.

The new establishment is placed almost directly opposite Harry's flourishing emporium, but strange to say Harry is no longer busy, as the new shop takes away all his trade. The cause of this is soon evident: he notices that his new rival uses only women barbers, and because of their attractiveness all the men in town frequent the new shop. Although from all outward appearances things look bright and cheery in the new place, it is altogether different within and bedlam prevails. The women barbers insist on being coquettish and the men do not object in the slightest, in fact they prefer it to being shaved, but Georgie has different ideas on the subject and a fight follows. The fun starts, however, when Harry and his assistant, dressed as women and with revenge in their hearts, gain employment in their rival's shop. Their methods of shaving and hair cutting closely resemble those of a sheep clipper, but no objections are made until Harry loses his wig, thereby disclosing his identity. A general riot follows from which Harry and his assistant with the lady barbers and manicurist issue triumphant, leaving Georgie determined that he will never again pin his faith or his hopes for financial success on a woman.

CURIOSITY (March 29).—"If yew cum a lone to thee third bench from thee fontan yew will find sum one to chear your loneliness." This note, received by the girl, is shown to her aunt. Her aunt drops the note and it is found by her uncle. He straightway becomes jealous and goes to the third bench to wait. Meanwhile a lunatic has escaped from an asylum. The aunt is warned. She goes for a walk and accidentally picks out the third bench. The uncle, her husband, is waiting for her and accuses her. She explains, but he is not satisfied. She goes away and he waits. A stranger takes the bench and is accused of being the mysterious man. He takes the uncle for the lunatic and thinks it is the stranger. They hold one another. Guards come and try to arrest the uncle. He fights them off and escapes. The girl comes to meet the stranger and they plan to elope. The real lunatic is caught, explanations are made and the uncle and aunt give thier consent to the girl's marriage.

THE MAN IN MOTLEY (March 30).—Smith of the D. P. W. was a jester. He was fitted by Fate to play the fool. Smith loved Ruth Devreux, a rose from old England. When she had come to India he had entered the lists for her hand but she loved Captain Howard, an army officer. Howard proposed to Ruth and she bade him wait for his answer till the night of the Rajah's ball. When Smith decided to attend, Howard persuaded him to go dressed as Romeo, because, he said, Ruth was going as Juliet. Smith found he was the only one present in costume. But he furnished the absurdity for which he was famous, and all laughed. But natives tried to abduct Ruth and beat back Howard. Smith appeared and they fled, thinking he was the devil. Ruth fainted and Smith, the splendid fool, persuaded Howard never to let her know that Smith had really saved her. Ruth told Howard she loved him as her hero.

THE FABLE OF THE DEMAND THAT MUST BE SUPPLIED, by George Ade (March 31).—Harvey was just an everyday fellow. The parents of Alice approved the match. No wonder she moped. Her love affair was about as romantic as a boiled dinner. She sent Harvey his release and waited for a regular young Lochinvar. The discarded lover and the father of romantic Alice determined to give her a sure-enough love affair. Alice's brother, Ed, and her cute little cousin were drawn into the conspiracy. Alice discovered that Harvey was loved by another. A—ha! When the hard-hearted parents turned against Harvey, Alice became a genuine persecuted heroine. Gosh! It was thrilling. To make it a cinch, they locked Alice up at home. The beautiful lady imprisoned in the tower succeeded in sending a message to her true lover. The dream of her life came true. Could anything be more romantic than a midnight escape?

COUNTESS VESCHI'S JEWELS (Special—Two Parts—April 2).—Alfred Tisdale, after having been given a position by Mr. Soper, a friend of his father's, is invited frequently to visit at the Soper home. There he meets Ruth Ridgebury, a niece of the Sopers, and falls in love with her. The Sopers finally go to their winter home and Tisdale is invited to a week end. On the train he meets a man named Rawdin, also on the way to the Sopers. Their suit cases become mixed. A thief steals Tisdale's suitcase, which Rawdin thinks is his. Tisdale discovers the mistake after he reached the Soper home. The clothes fit him, however, and he wears them. Finding a black mask in the suit case he suspects Rawdin of being a thief, and decides to keep his eye on him.

That night Tisdale wakes to hear thieves leaving the house with the family silverware. He rushes downstairs just as there is an explosion in the library. The safe has been blown, and the jewels of the Countess Veschi, a guest, stolen. Soper and other guests rush into the library. They suspect Tisdale. The mask in his suit case confirms their suspicions. He is locked in his room to await the police. Ruth, who believes him innocent, throws him a rope from the ground and he escapes through the window. She takes him off in her car, the others in pursuit. They have a smashup but are unhurt. They take refuge in a barn where they find the thieves. Tisdale grapples with them. The others who are close behind overpower the two rogues and hurry them back to the house. Ruth and Tisdale had overheard the thieves talking and learned that the butler was at the bottom of the conspiracy and had the jewels of the countess. He is confronted and confesses.

Tisdale, puzzled, turns to Rawdin, whom he had suspected of being the thief, and asks him why he carried the mask. Rawdin laughs and produces an invitation to a ball where the men were to wear black masks. Tisdale joins in the laugh at his expense, then turns to Ruth, who had stood by him, and takes her in his arms.

IGOMAR OF THE HILLS (April 3).—The bandit leader is lying wounded in his cabin on the mountain when his confederates bring in a girl whom they have kidnapped while she was on her way to join her father after a trip East. The two ruffians leave her in the cabin, in a room next to the one occupied by the bandit leader. When he gets up for a drink, she hears him and pushes in to see what is making the noise. She finds him exhausted on the bed and she goes and gets the water for him. Her kindness wins his heart and his plight rouses her pity. She gives him a Bible to read and he determines to set her free. As the two steal out toward freedom, they are discovered by the rest of the band. But the bandit chief holds them with his gun and the girl escapes.

KILLED AGAINST ORDERS (Special—Three Parts—March 29).—Odanah Durand and her father are in their beautiful home admiring Durand's fine collection of ivories, when Bully Harris is admitted. Odanah greets him coldly, apparently displeased at his appearance. Durand greets him cordially, and after a whispered conversation, Bully leaves. Odanah attends a ball at the residence of Mrs. Rice, and as the snap on a diamond bracelet which her father has given her has broken, she tells the maid to put the bracelet in the dresser drawer with other jewels. Subsequently, the maid finds the drawer open, and a general alarm is given. The district attorney, Wallace Maynard, whom Odanah meets at the ball, calls the police. At her home, later in the evening, Odanah sees her father enter through a window and immediately he hands her the jewels stolen at the Rice home. She hides them in her gown and when the police search, they find nothing.

Odanah loves Maynard, and she tells her father that she can never marry a decent man while he continues to be a thief. Durand, a master criminal, who is idolized by the gang, goes to them and tells them that he is through. They plead with him and he consents to assist in robbing the home of a millionaire that evening. The police are tipped off, and Odanah, to save her father, hurries to the marked residence to warn him. The owner of the place is killed by one of the robbers, and Durand, who did not fire the shot, is caught while trying to save Odanah, who has entered the house to save him. At the trial, Maynard, whose political future rests on whether the master criminal is convicted, tricks Odanah into offering condemning evidence, and her father is sentenced to life imprisonment.

Odanah then becomes a hardened criminal herself, realizing that the man she loved, has tricked her. At the head of the gang her father was once the leader of, she carries through a scheme, whereby she extorts $5,000 from a wealthy dry goods merchant, against whom she threatens to bring action for $20,000 for false arrest for shoplifting. Odanah pities the detective who caught her in the store, and who is discharged because of the case, and places an envelope containing money under the door of his flat.

She meets Maynard in the shoplifting case, and scorns him. She asks him why he doesn't investigate the case, and he tells her he loves her. She gives him no encouragement, whatever. Finally, she tells him he may call upon her on one condition, viz., that he effect her father's release from prison. He is influenced wholly by his love for her and gets a pardon from the Governor for Durand, who returns home. Odanah has loved Maynard all through her terrible ordeal, and gladly receives him into her life. Although she is looked upon with contempt by her erstwhile friends and acquaintances, Odanah is happy in the realization of the fact that her beloved father has been freed and the object of her love returned to her.

MUSIC IN FLATS (March 30).—As the entrancing strains of "Love Me and the World Is Mine" are wafted up the air shaft to the flat occupied by a superannuated spinster she is seized by a desire to see and if possible, fall in love with the owner of the beautiful voice. It is a vocal teacher who is doing the warbling and the maid sends the janitor down with a note, inviting the singer, whoever he is, to come upstairs. In a flat on the same floor is an artist whose husband has forbidden her to employ male models, out of jealousy.

Into the flat of the vocalist walks a boob who wants his voice cultivated. The janitor hands him the maid's note as he is in the act of "singing" the same song which a few minutes before charmed her in the flat above. Up goes the boob and safe outside the door sings to his heart's content, and also to hers. The occupants of the same floor oppose vigorously such a desecration of the serenity which always characterized their quiet flat, and throw boots, rubbers and everything that they can lay their hands on. The boob is put to rout and falls into the flat where the unhappy artist is waiting for a man. Her husband has gone out and she fears nothing. One look at the boob is enough to convince her that he is just the style she has been looking for, and she hastily directs him to get behind a screen and change his attire. He does, first his trousers and then his coat and shirt, cominb over the top of the screen. He is now a Roman soldier. As he strikes a characteristic pose, the artist hears her husband coming up the stairs, and the model is rushed into the clothes closet. A set of furs in which pepper has been placed to keep away moths, is the only company Mr. Boob has in the closet. Just as he sneezes, the artist's husband looks toward the door and is immediately suspicious. He gets a revolver and begins firing at the door. The smoke of the shots comes through the keyhole and dangerously near the boob's head. The irate hubby plunges a sword through the door and after much tugging to get the sword out again, the door is pulled down and the boob falls out. He is chased around and he smashes a vase on hubby's head. Hubby, in turn, smashes one on his head. The old maid rushes in and throwing her arms about the boob, tries to protect him.

He takes a look at her, then pushes her away, directs the man with the shotgun to hand it to the artist's husband, whom he asks to shoot him. The husband takes the gun and shoots. Mr. Boob reaches to the floor for a bouquet which had fallen when the vase broke, places it on his breast, calmly lies down and dies.

THE BOSTON TEA PARTY (A dramatic adaptation of the memorable historical incident of Colonial Times—Special—Two Parts—April 2).—Ethan Ward tells Barbara, his sweetheart, that he is trying to foment a rebellion among the colonists. At a gathering of the colonists for the purpose of a free discussion on the subject of taxation without representation, Sam Fleet, a Tory, in league with the British soldiers, stationed in and about Boston, slips in and after he has learned the plans of the colonists, hurries to Captain Crewe of the British and tells him young Ethan Ward is at the head of the plot. Barbara is attending the Governor's ball when Fleet enters to impart his knowledge to Captain Crewe. She does some eavesdropping and, on a pretext that she is ill, leaves the Governor's mansion and hurries off to warn Ethan that Captain Crewe's men will be in search of him shortly. She stops in a wayside tavern while repairs are being made to the carriage and sees Sam Fleet, intoxicated, seated at a table asleep. With assistance, she carries him to the carriage and takes him to Ethan's farm a prisoner. She changes clothes with Ethan and when the soldiers are nearing the house she rides away on horseback with the soldiers in hot pursuit. In the meantime, Ethan, attired in Barbara's raiment, leaves the farm with the colored servant in the carriage.

The soldiers meet the carriage and what they see inside does not excite their suspicions. Barbara outwits them, hiding under a bridge as they go galloping by in pursuit. Ethan hurries to the place set for the meeting and soon the colonists have arrayed themselves as Indians. In this garb, they board the "Monmouth" at dock in Boston Harbor, laden with tea upon which a British tax has been laid, and dump the chests of tea into the water. The alarm is given to Captain Crewe, but when soldiers get to the ship the "Indians" have left. Ethan and Barbara then take the opportunity of discussing colonial affairs together.

THE GOLDEN SPIDER (March 19).—John Rock, a human spider whose comfortable income allows him to ride about in a motor car to look for victims, foolish girls who are attracted by his promises of pleasure, while driving about has trouble with his car. His motor stops before the home of Joan, a whole souled girl, living with her younger sister, Millie. Joan at once recognizes Rock, having seen his picture in the paper. She tells Millie how Rock snares innocent girls and ruins them. Left alone, Millie flirts and innocently accepts an invitation to go riding with him.

That night Joan finds Millie gone and as the hours pass and she does not return, Joan connects her absence with the visionary face of John Rock. She goes to his home, where Rock explains that Millie had met her death in an accident. Realizing that Millie like the other innocent girls had been a victim of the "Spider," Joan attacks Rock with all her strength. The latter calls the police and later, on a trumped up charge, has Joan sent up the river for ten years.

Two years of prison fare and misery hasten a deadly desire for vengeance in Joan's heart and one day Joan was freed. As if guided by an unseen hand she visits a notion shop and then calls on John Rock, who has become a nervous wreck through drink and dissipation. Rock is so horrified at seeing Joan and the knife that he falls over dead.

Then Joan went forth into the twilight knowing that Justice had righted the wrong done her sister and herself.

MARY'S DUKE (Three Parts—March 22).—With all her millions and her education at a finishing school, Mame McGuire cannot forget that she is the Soap King's daughter, and that her mother is ordinary and ambitious. When Mame finds a card to the exclusive Van Duysen mask ball, she cannot resist the temptation to go. She goes as Pierette and it chances that young Teddy Van Duysen dresses as Pierrot, and thinking, of course, that the shy little Pierrette is someone he knows, dances with her the entire evening. But she refuses to tell him her name and he is so charmed with her that he proposes they exchange rings, so that when they next meet they may recognize each other.

After a minute's hesitation, she agrees, and the exchange is made. The maskers are to unmask at midnight and Mame, knowing that her golden hour is over, slips away and home before the unmasking. Teddy searches the rest of the evening for his little Pierrette, but is unable to locate her.

Her mother has been negotiating with the International Matrimonial Bureau in order that Her Mamie shall marry a title, and she receives word that a Duke has been secured and will be forwarded if desired. Mame agrees listlessly to any of her mother's plans and the Duke sets out to arrive on the night of the dinner. Mrs. McGuire sends her invitations to a dinner given in honor of the Duke broadcast. She even includes the Van Duysens, who are furious when they discover an invitation to the "upstart soap people's dinner." Enough accept to satisfy Mrs. McGuire, however, and the Duke telephones that he has arrived and will be there at eight-thirty. She finds she will have one empty place at the table. Desperately she asks her secretary, Miss Swift, what to do, and Swift suggests her telephoning to the fashionable clubs in town in hopes of securing some man to fill in. Mrs. McGuire acts at once and gets the ultra-exclusive Colossus Club on the wire. As she is telephoning, Teddy Van Duysen and two of his chums chance to enter and, overhearing the attendant struggling to understand her, take the wire. They are overcome with amusement at the idea of one of their number appearing at the McGuire dinner, but Teddy, always ready for a prank, decides it would be a lark to go, and tells his friend to say that he has a poor friend named Jones who will fill in for, as Teddy remarks, "it will be fun to see how they do it! I bet they pass soap around with the desert."

Mrs. McGuire has told her footman that the Duke is distinguished looking and to bring him in at once, so when Teddy arrives and the footman asks his name, he hesitates, laughingly, and they conclude he is the Duke and before he can correct the error, have sweepingly announced him to the assemblage as "His Grace," the "Duke D'Enfetti.

The bonafide Duke meanwhile arrives and is unceremoniously refused admission. Sputtering with indignation, he encounters a policeman, who drags him to the police court, where, after much humiliation, the magistrate sends for an interpreter and learns the little man's true identity. Followed by the policeman, the Duke returns to the McGuire's to have the impostor arrested. The dinner meanwhile has concluded, and Teddy is hoping to get a word with Mame, but he is so surrounded by fawning women that he cannot escape. It is then than the police and the much dishevelled Duke D'Enfetti arrive. He is denounced and gracefully admits he is the "poor young man named Jones." Mrs. McGuire demands his arrest, but Mame intercedes. She lays her hand on Teddy's sleeve and at that moment Teddy sees his ring on her hand and she sees hers on his. He is rescued by his friends and confesses to his father, who tells him he should marry and settle down. It is just the advice he wants with the memory of Mame's face in his heart, but he determines to win her as a poor young man, rather than as a Van Duysen and sends her a humble bunch of flowers and a note, asking her to meet him in the park.

She wears the flowers, discarding the Duke's roses, and slips out of the house, despite the engagement to drive with the Duke and her mother, and meets Teddy. It is then that all is explained, and he asks her to marry him. "Will you?" he asks, "knowing I have nothing but myself to offer." "Try me and see," she whispers. Her mother and the Duke, driving through the park in search of her, see them, but they escape in a taxi and elope. When Mrs. McGuire learns that her daughter has married Teddy Van Duysen she collapses with joy, but the Van Duysen household is buried in gloom. However, Teddy brings Mame home and wins them over one by one. All ends well save for the Duke, who resignedly searches for a job as chauffeur, not daring to return to Sunny "It."

PLAYING WITH FIRE (Two Parts—March 29).—Mr. Roberts, a wealthy mine owner, is proud of his only son and heir. Marja, a gypsy queen, is stoned out of her camp with her child. Fearing death she places her child on Mr. Roberts' steps. Mr. Roberts finds the little waif and decides to keep her. Years later, Bruce, Mr. Roberts' son, returns from college. Marja immediately falls in love with him. While attending a ball one evening Bruce is introduced to Cora, a bewitching beauty. Cora leads him on. Later Cora tires of Bruce, but he is desperate and decides to see her. Refused entrance, he forces his way through a window. Meanwhile, a burglar enters and demands Cora's money. They struggle and Cora is killed. The burglar makes his escape. Bruce hears the shot and comes to Cora's aid, but too late. Bruce is accused of the murder.

Marja hears that Bruce is accused of the murder and, leaving him as she does, admits that she killed Cora through jealousy. The burglar attends the trial and when he hears Marja admit that she killed the woman, decides to give himself up. While on the way to the police station he is struck by an automobile, writes his confession and dies. Marja is released and returns home to find Bruce waiting with arms outstretched to embrace her.

THE LAW OF LOVE (April 2).—Ada Meade, objecting to her father marrying a second time, leaves home to make her own living. Her uncle, a rich miner, sends to her father $20,000 for Ada in order to avoid the inheritance tax. The father, fearing for his daughter's welfare, engages Graves to find her. Ada secures employment as stenographer in Graves's office through an old friend. The father sends Ada's photograph to Graves. She receives the photograph and changes it, placing another girl's photo in the mailer.

Meanwhile Graves' partner, Hastings, has become smitten with Ada, thinking, perhaps, he could use her as one of his tools in some deal. Ada despises him, however. He sees the photograph which Ada has changed on Graves' desk and, knowing the owner of the photograph, connives with her to pretend that she is the original of the photograph in order to get the $20,000. Graves, who plays the stocks, is losing heavily when the clerk from the broker's office appears and demands more money. Hastings and the adventuress arrive to claim the $20,000. Ada tells Graves she is an imposter, but Graves says she is the owner of the photograph and is just about to open the safe and give them the money when Ada tells him it is in the outer office.

She rushes out, fills an envelope with paper, gives it to Graves, who gives the package of paper to the conspirators. Ada's father, who has received a telegram saying that his daughter had been found, goes to Graves' office and to his utter amazement, finds that the young woman is not his daughter. The broker's clerk calls for more money. Ada gives him the $20,000, which is hers, and he leaves. Ada's father upbraids Graves and gives him one hour to find her, with the alternative of going to jail. The broker's clerk returns and tells Graves that he has won with the $20,000 margin furnished by Ada. Graves calls Ada. She tells him she is Meade's daughter. Meade then comes in and there is a happy reunion.

UNCLE JOHN (Two Parts—March 8).—Jimmy Moore, age eight, earned enough money by selling newspapers for supper for Alice and Pudge, who were waiting for him in the tenement. It was a bitter cold day. The father hadn't shown up for more than a week and the three children were trying to keep the little home together.

Old John Waldron, many times a millionaire, never had any patience with charity and settlement work. When Horace, his only son, took it up with the fortune left him by his mother, the Old Man was disgusted.

The discussions between father and son on charity and how the old man is getting more penurious every day get more and more acrimonious, until finally one day, Waldron ordered his son out of the office. Horace, with the impetuosity of youth, left home and settled down in a modest room to help the poor. Some days before, Horace obtained permission from his father to collect rents of one of his East Side tenements.

He thought a great deal about Helen, the girl across the hall, who is endowed with the gift of an artist. She was poor, so he sent a friend to buy some of her pictures which Horace took off his hands. Horace offered, by letter, to buy the tenement from his father. The Old Man tore up the letter in a rage, and then made up his mind that he would go to see this tenement which was causing so much trouble.

As he entered, any one who saw him would have concluded that he lived there. He climbed the rickety stairs and looked all about him; nothing seemed very remarkable. On his way down, he didn't see the broken step, and he landed in the hall before the little Moores' door, with a badly sprained ankle, saving himself from breaking his neck only by hanging on to the banister. The three little Moores heard the fall, came out and found the old man. They supported him into their rooms, and after they made him as comfortable as possible, they held a consultation. Here was a stranger within their gates; he surely needed a little liniment for that ankle, and he looked as though a little food wouldn't hurt him. Alice emptied the coffee pot of its pennies and Jimmy went out to get the food. Waldron tried to hear what the conspiracy was all about, but couldn't quite get it. Jimmy returned with a small package of tea, an orange and a bottle of vile smelling liniment. Jimmy treated Waldron's ankle and Alice served the tea and the orange. Waldron admired their generosity, and was astonished to learn upon inquiry that they were not to have any supper that night as they had spent all their pennies. At that moment in walked two officials of the "Gerry Society." "To what do I owe this unwarranted intrusion?" said Waldron. "You should be prosecuted for disturbing my family, I am their uncle." That night, Waldron lay upon the rickety couch and pondered many things. He concluded that it might not be such a bad thing to stay a few days with the children, completely hidden from the cares of business and study a little sociology, himself. Little Pudge asked the old man to stay with them a few days. He agrees when he is permitted to pay his board in advance. Telling the children what a good cook he is he tells Jimmy to get a quantity of eatables. The little folks put an apron on him and Jimmy goes across the hall and got Helen to see the fun.

Helen entered into the fun; she tested Uncle John's cooking and pretended it made her sick; and Uncle John threatened her with a big spoon and got so excited that he let the toast burn and was made, by Pudge, to make some more, though he tried to beg off. Just at this time Horace Waldron sat in his rooms looking at the pictures which he had bought from Helen, by proxy.

But, is he looked, always a vision came of her as he saw her first, sitting cross-legged, wrapped in her big coat, eating crackers and milk and reading a book. And the more Horace thought about it, the more he became convinced that a few painting lessons would help him in his work among the poor. He got his courage up and went to see Helen about it. The door was open and he went timidly in. Helen came back from the Moores to find him standing in admiration before her easel. After a good deal of hemming and hawing, the matter was arranged and Horace went to work at it, though he was always trying to draw pictures of Helen, who scolded him and tore up the pictures. But his entree was established, and he came regularly.

John Waldron was too big a man to drop out of sight for a week unnoticed. And one evening he read in the paper an account of his disappearance. He laughed. A knock came on the door and Waldron ducked into the inner room. It was Jenks, the collector. Alice was a few cents shy and wanted Jenks to come back for it. "No," said Jenks, "the old skinflint who owns the building would fire me if he thought I would trust anyone for fifteen cents. I'll pay it myself." Waldron, of course, heard it and was inclined to be angry at first and then he laughed, for he knew Jenks was right. And again listening through the same door, he heard Horace tell Helen that his father had disappeared and that while he had parted with him in anger, he was very dear to him and that he would never be happy until he found him. For a certainty, John Waldron was getting humanized. And that evening, Pudge had too much jam and the resultant "tummyache." Waldron was very worried about her and started out for the doctor.

An incoming "drunk" lit a cigarette in the hall and threw the blazing match into a pile of rubbish. When Waldron and the doctor got back, smoke poured in volumes from the entrance. He and the doctor plunged into the house, the doctor to come staggering out in a moment, blinded by the smoke. Waldron kept on, rushed to the room and burst in the door. The children had fallen asleep when Pudge's ache stopped and were just awakening and groping in the smoke. Waldron wrapped clothes about their heads and sent Jimmy and Alice down the stairs. He picked up Pudge and started to follow, but the stairs fell, blocking the door. He then went out of the window to the fire escape and down to the floor below. The escape on the floor below was hopelessly blocked with the boxes and refuse that the East Sider usually keeps there. As he stood for a moment irresolute, Horace and Helen, who had come to the scene, saw him.

"Oh! It is Uncle John," said Helen.

"It is my father!" said Horace, and he plunged into the building. He got them just in time and fought his way down the blazing stairs with his double burden. A week later "Uncle John" sat in the big library before the fire. Behind him, at the window, stood Horace and Helen, very close together, looking at two pictures which seemed to interest Helen greatly. In bounded Alice and Jimmy, well dressed and with schoolbooks in their hands, and Pudge trailing along behind. They swarmed all over Uncle John, until the observing Pudge directed their attention to Horace and Helen. Uncle John had to turn clear around in his chair.

Horace was holding Helen very tight and whispering to her. Uncle John pretended that it was a great breach of etiquette to look, and he turned their heads about for them, but they broke away and ran to Helen, who took them into her arms. And then, somehow, the picture got blurred until all you could see was Uncle John as he sat looking into the fire and smiling.

THE SUPREME IMPULSE (March 29).—Ann Donnelson waiting for the arrival of her sweetheart, picks up a newspaper and reads an article showing the number of divorces and questioning whether matrimony is a failure. Earl arrives, and Ann shows him the story. He is impressed. They go to have dinner with married friends. The husband is late and they go to dinner without him. The wife is very angry and when husband finally arrives there is a bitter quarrel in which words and more tangible things fly. It ends by the wife putting on her hat and coat and "going home to mother."

Taking Ann home, they discuss the matrimonial situation and evolve a plan. They are both very happy as sweethearts. They hear so much about the sorrows of the married that they think it foolhardy to chance it. They will be sweethearts all their lives, he to live his life and she to live her's. Like many other couples they decide that they will not restrict each other's liberties. Other men may call on Ann, and Earl can enjoy the society of other girls, according to their agreement. The next afternoon, Earl sees Ann walking with another fellow, John Dearborn, whom he knows to be a formidable rival. He is jealous, notwithstanding his agreement.

Several days later Ann perceives Earl about to enter a moving picture show with a girl whom Earl had been "sweet on" before she eclipsed her. When he calls that evening she is cold and distant but refuses to tell him what is the matter. Earl, somewhat peeved over having seen her with John Dearborn, is not over sweet and his stay is short and disagreeable.

The following afternoon Ann and another girl, sitting at the table, sees Earl and a strange girl enter. He does not see her and Ann's jealousy rises to the boiling point. Furious, she goes to his table, and, much to his astonishment, reproaches him for his "horridness." He reminds her that this was their agreement, but logic means nothing to Ann's feminine feelings. There is a lively oral combat on the spot, Earl's girl companion runs away fearing for her hair. Ann goes out crying and Earl tries vainly to induce Ann's companion to intercede for him with Ann. That evening Earl calls. His card is refused. He pushes past the servant and enters the sitting room where Ann is sitting, her tears dropping damply on the presents he has given her and which she has contemplated sending back to him. Recriminations follow and then comes the bliss of reconciliation.

Ann's widowed chum is the mother of a little girl. The mother is taken ill and Ann nurses her with Earl aiding in the evening. Both, very fond of the little girl, attend it affectionately. One evening later Earl calls on a married couple. The husband hasn't come home yet and Earl is treated to a demonstration of what married life may be. When husband enters the wife rushes to kiss him, the baby toddles to his lap, while wife runs for his slippers and house coat. Earl goes home later to a cold, lonely apartment, can't find his slippers and feels forlorn and unloved generally. There comes to him a vision of the happy home he has just left and a longing possesses him. Before him comes the vision of Ann and himself and between them the sweetest baby boys. Their faces are together in happiness.

Ann is a visitor to the same happy household the next evening. She sees a variation of the same joy of fatherhood and motherhood and fondles the little boy, longing for one of her own. Returning to her home there appears at her bedside a vision of the dear unborn baby which stretches out to her its appealing arms. Impulsively she reaches for it, to press the darling to her, but it fades into nothingness and she clasps the thin air.

Ann's sister is dying. In her last moments she asks Ann and Earl to cherish and care for her orphaned baby. The cold fallacies of platonicism vanish in the vision of the dream child, their own flesh and blood, who is to be a little playmate of the orphaned one. Slowly the dream child draws their hands together and there they stand in consciousness of the cosmic call. Into each other's arms they creep impulsively.

THE CITY OF TERRIBLE NIGHT (Two Parts—April 2).—Jack, a wealthy bachelor, has become blase and craves some unusual excitement. Upon the suggestion of his friend, Jones, he leaves home in the midst of a social function and sallies forth into the highways and byways of the meaner section of the great city. At a cheap dance hall he protects a young and beautiful girl who, by her refined and quiet ways, has aroused the enmity of the other females present, and by so doing, involves himself in a fist fight, in which he comes out victorious. He escorts the young girl home, which is resented by her father. The latter is an exiled foreign nobleman, earning a precarious living for himself and Olga, for that is the young lady's name.

Jack tries to reason with the father, but that only arouses the further ire of the old man, who attempts to thrash Jack with his walking stick. Jack takes it from him, breakes it over his knee, and departs. This incident is seen by a passing policeman, who at the termination of the fracas, stops and questions the young man. Jack makes light of the incident, gives the officer his card and a cigar and starts for home. Upon thinking the matter over he determines to return to the little shop, and make the old man listen to him.

Rudolph, Olga's father, receives a letter threatening his life for the part he has played in a revolution in his native country. Jack arrived at the shop, just in itme to to intercept the writer of the letter who a moment before had consummated his threat by stabbing Rudolph to death. There is a fight during which Jack gives the assassin a terrific blow on the head. The latter escapes, but Jack is arrested and accused of the crime. He is handcuffed and led to the station house, but on the way he knocks over the arresting officer, and escapes to the house of his friend, Jones. The latter not only relieves him of his manacles but supplies him with a disguise enabling him to reach his own house undetected. Nevertheless detectives discover his hiding place, and he and his faithful valet are arrested and thrown in jail. In the interim the real assassin, delirious from the blow Jack gave him, is arrested by a policeman who thinks him drunk. He is placed in the same cell with Jack's valet and the latter, listening to the man's delirious babbling, discovers him to be the murderer. Jack is released and later he and Olga are married.

LOVE, FIREWORKS AND THE JANITOR (April 3).—Young Griggs, private secretary to I. Gottawad, a millionaire clubman, gets a day off and, taking a volume of love sonnets from his employer's library, strolls leisurely to a nearby city park. Mrs. Clymer, who has social aspirations and a pretty daughter, seeks to entrap Griggs. Finding a card which the secretary has dropped from the book bearing the name Gottawad she mistakes the young man for the millionaire. An introduction is contrived and Mrs. Clymer obtains Griggs' promise to call on them the following evening to dinner. Griggs finds he has fallen in love with the girl and looks forward to the following evening with many pleasant anticipations. Mrs. Clymer looking up Gottawad in the social blue book finds him to be a most desirable catch and, with the idea of making it appear that they are better off than they really are, borrows the best house furnishings of her apartment house neighbors. A finishing touch being needed, she also impresses Mike, the janitor, to play the butler, having found for him a butler's oufit, a relic of a neighbor's former prosperity. Mike also finds a bunch of fireworks, roman candles, sky rockets and the like and promises that with these he will give their guests a regular send-off.

The evening of the dinner arrives and Griggs hies himself to the abode of his newly-found friends. Mike, however, attired in his butler's outfit, must show it to his sweetheart, Lizzie, the cook next door and consequently is not at his post of duty when Griggs calls. Griggs enters after rapping for some time at the opened door and seats himself in the parlor. Then, to his dismay, he finds he has arrived without his dress suit waistcoat. Hearing some one coming he dashes for the nearest concealment, a library adjoining the parlor. Here his retreat to the outer hall is entirely cut off and, to his dismay and bewilderment, he hears the family go through a dress rehearsal for his reception.

The hour drags by and Griggs fails to appear. Mike slips out to Casey's for a drink. The janitor picks up a roman candle, which was to have been part of the evening's entertainment and accidentally ignites it in the fire-place. The next moment the library is a scene of carnage and explosion. Mother and daughter dash for the hall, narrowly escaping a sky rocket which smashes through the French windows and lands at the feet of Mike and Lizzie.

Both armed with pails of water rush into the apartment house. Griggs, who is now on fire, lands in the hall and the flames are quenched by other tenants. Gottawad puts in an appearance at this moment, demanding explanation of a note sent him and meant for Griggs concerning the dinner. Mother finds she has made a mistake and surveys the ruins of the apartment in horror. But, in spite of it all, Griggs makes good with the girl.

BIG "U."

THE LOVE OF MARY WEST (March 30).—A wealthy stock broker of thirty-five, David Warren, lives alone in his beautiful city home with his only child, a girl of five. He is wholly absorbed with the baby and when she dies suddenly from a fall, he is prostrated with grief. One day, about a month after the death of his child, haunted by her face, he leaves the office and walks down the crowded street. A little child, running after its mother, collides with him. Looking down, he seems to see his own baby, and pushes the child aside, almost roughly. Mary West, a widow of thirty, poorly but neatly dressed, passes just in time to see the incident.

She is attracted by David's sorrowful face, but thinks he dislikes children. He crosses the street, staring ahead, but sees nothing. Just before he reaches the opposite curb, an auto comes swiftly around the corner. Mary, just behind him, sees his danger and springing forward, pushes him out of the way in time, both falling as the car dashes by. David helps her up and, putting the woman into a taxi, takes her home. When they arrive, he asks to call the next day. She consents to go for a ride with him.

During the next two months their friendship ripens into love, but, fearing David's supposed dislike for children, she hides from him the fact that she has a baby girl of four. One day while walking in the park he asks her to marry him. She refuses, believing it would mean giving up her child. She goes home that night to sit by her baby, and dreams of what a marriage to David Warren would mean. The next evening she goes out to deliver a hat and, after putting "Ruthie," her baby, to bed, asks the old woman next door to attend the little girl if she cries. The old woman accidentally drops a lighted match, which sets fire to the carpet. Without noticing it she then goes back into her own room.

In the meantime, David, after a sleepless night, determines to again see Mary. He arrives in his car and finds the house in flames. The old woman tells him of the baby left asleep in Mary's room, and he rushes in to get the child. Mary, as she nears the house, sees it in flames and, nervous and weary, falls fainting near David's car. David's chauffeur picks her up and puts her in the car, just as Dave, carrying Ruthie, staggers from the tenement, and over to the car. Mary revives to see Dave petting and caressing her child. She tells him that it was because of her child that she refused to marry him, but when he explains that he wants them both, she consents to become his wife.

THE CAMEO RING (Two Parts—April 1).—Mary Phillips lives with her mother in a small town. She gives a party for her school-girl friend, Clara Melbourne, and introduces to her John Brown and Charles Bowers, both of whom are in love with Mary. Clara is attracted to John, largely because of his wealth. Bowers goes away on a business trip, and in his absence Mary marries John Brown, her mother fostering the match.

Two years elapse, during which time a baby girl is born to them. Mary and Charles have carried on a friendly correspondence during this time, and when he comes to town she lunches with him. Clara sees them together, and, still embittered because of Mary's winning John, she writes an anonymous letter to the latter insinuating that Mary is unfaithful to him. In a waste basket John finds the torn fragments of a letter Mary had written to Charles but had never sent. He pieces these together, pasting them on the glass of a picture frame. The letter is affectionate in its terms and John immediately jumps to the conclusion that Mary is untrue to him, and he leaves her.

Several years elapse, during which time Mary supports her child by taking in sewing. John has meantime gone to a distant city, where he has grubbed a comfortable fortune as a money lender. Mary borrows money from an old man in her home town to enable Helen, her daughter, now a girl in her teens, to go to the city, where a position awaits her. As the weeks go by, Mary is unable to pay back the loan, and Helen borrows money on her salary from the loan agency of which her father is the proprietor. Being pressed to pay back this second loan, Helen calls upon the agency to apply for an extension of time. She meets her father, who recognizes her through a cameo ring which he had given his wife years before, and which Helen offers as security on the loan. Through their daughter father and mother are later reunited.

THE MAID OF THE MIST (April 1).—Ray, a young novelist, sets out for the mountains in search of local color. His father, a stern old millionaire, has warned him in his will not to marry until he is twenty-five years old. Pauline is a young maid and Ray falls in love with her. She has another lover in the hills who becomes jealous. Getting notice from the city that he must return at once, Ray determines to marry the maid, but to keep the wedding a secret. The girl receives no mail because her mountain lover is the postmaster. Ray likewise receives no mail.

Shortly after this, the girl and her father move to a distant mining region. Ray, meanwhile, has journeyed back to the mountains, but can find no trace of his wife. He publishes his book, "The Maid of the Mist," with an original picture of the maid of his heart on the fly leaf. A baby has been born to the girl and her father swears vengeance on the man. A party of tourists in the hills leave a copy of the novel which the old man finds and, going to the city, learns of Ray's address from the publisher and hunts him up. He forces him to accompany him to the mountains. Ray shows the marriage certificate and is glad to claim his little family.

A LESSON FROM THE FAR EAST (Two Parts—April 4).—Inside the American mission house in the far East, Hobart Ross, a missionary, is bidding farewell to the few Chinese Christians of his mission. A long looked for vacation has come to him at last, and he is on his way back to his native land. Meanwhile, in his bachelor lodgings, Wee Sin, daughter of Ross's landlord, is laying out the American missionary's clothes in readiness for his departure. She stops before a framed picture of the American. She quickly slips it underneath the folds of her long sleeve, and passes into the next room.

In the Ross home in the country, we find Hobart's father married a second time to a young wife. Hobart comes home to find his father comfortably happy while his wife drags out a lonesome and dreary existence. The inevitable happens. Fanny Ross falls desperately in love with her stepson. Innocently taking this worship as a part of the delightful freedom of his vacation, Hobart unconsciously encourages the affection. Holiday season comes around and with it the visit of Fanny's younger sister, Ann, an orphan, whom Hobart's father is putting through a seminary. Ann meets Hobart and listens to his stories of the wonderful Orient. Love springs up over night between the two.

A run into town on a visit to an old college chum, brings Hobart in contact with the Bohemian life of an artist's studio. He joins in spirit the party given in his honor and on taking leave, laughingly warns his chum of the evils that lie in the path of artists. This warning follows Hobart's discovery that his friend, Nelson, is living with his model. Nevertheless, Hobart invites him out to visit him, and Nelson comes.

Several events of a serious nature take place before Nelson makes his visit to the Ross estate; first, Mrs. Ross has openly professed her infatuation for Hobart and has been firmly rebuked by him; second, an innocent flirtation between Hobart and Ann has resulted in provoking two additional complications; jealousy in Fanny against her sister and a realization in Hobart himself that he has overstepped his rights in allowing Ann to believe him free of obligations assumed in China to love her or accept her devotion. His attitude is made more plain when he gives back to her the handkerchief she had in coquetry allowed him to possess.

Matters are only made worse by Fanny's jealous efforts to keep Hobart's attention confined to herself by putting Nelson and Ann in each other's company. A harmless incident serves to bring things to a disastrous head. Ann is paired off with Nelson who takes her off skating, while Fanny connives in their absence to place herself in Hobart's room to compromise him if possible and to win him for herself by hook or crook. Fanny fails so it will appear before the eyes of Hobart is the guilty one.

Meanwhile, fascinated by talks of Bohemia, Ann has persuaded Nelson to stop at a road house for a taste of Bohemian adventure. They indulge in a table d'hote supper, including wine, and send home a note saying that they have stopped off at a farm house for a bite and will be home early. The wine has evil effects, the girl's limitations are quite suddenly reached and she is rendered helpless for the time being. Alarmed and frightened, Nelson engages a room where he can restore the girl to herself by rest and treatment which the bar-keeper administers.

At home, Hobart has already decided to leave. Waiting, however, for Ann's return, he receives the note sent by Nelson and from descriptions given him by the messenger, at once suspects his friend of double dealing and the worst. He orders his car and starts out to look for Ann. In the interval, Ann has come to her senses and, believing herself disgraced for life, has broken down and refused to go home. Nelson promises to satisfy her by marriage. Hobart arrives and questions the bar-keeper who gives him the lie. Hobart is about to turn away when he spies the lad who brought him the message. The bar-keeper is knocked out of the way just as Nelson is escorting the girl down.

A vision of the deserted model waiting in the studio for the artist, fades into a marriage ceremony between Nelson and Ann supervised by the now thoroughly disgusted and cynical Hobart. He reaches his room later to find a small envelope waiting for him. He tears open the letter to read the following broken English: "Honorable Beloved: The day comes nearer when I can no more disobey my honorable father. I must take a husband of his choice unless you return. Wee Sin."

A vision of Wee Sin bowing before her father and accompanied by a suitor is all that is then needed to decide Hobart. In a twinkling he has seized his grip and starts packing like mad. The final scene shows Wee Sin in Hobart's arms.

THE "MASTER MODEL"

Messrs. Harring & Blumenthal, Brooklyn, New York, write:

"As long as we can buy STANDARD machines, they are the machines we will use. Are at present using five STANDARDS."

The strongest recommendations are repeat orders. Once you use the STANDARD it will always be the STANDARD. Perfect projecting qualities, durability, ease of operation, small upkeep—these are some of the reasons why.

TOO MANY BACHELORS (March 21).—Bachelor Moses is a devil in his own home town. Abe is another such devil. Both love Peggy, but she scorns both. They bother her very much, and in order to get rid of Moses she decides to elope. Moses finds her climbing down a ladder out of her bedroom window and, after being hit in the eye with her suitcase, pulls the ladder from beneath her feet, leaving her hanging in midair. Abe, meanwhile, has summoned two railroad tramps to his assistance, determined to capture Peggy. He instructs the tramps to get her "dead or alive." The tramps throw a bag over Moses' head while Abe and another old bachelor attempt to abduct Peggy. They tumble from the roof of the house.

The tramps, meanwhile, put Moses into a wagon and drive off with him. Later both tramps fall off the wagon from too many ice creams. Peggy finally escapes. Meanwhile Moses and Abe fight for possesion of a wagon. The wagon goes over a cliff. Abe and Moses hang to the side of the cliff fighting for a foothold and kicking each other unmercifully. Finally Abe is kicked off into the crowd below. A moment later Moses slips and comes tumbling after. Both make a fearful splash in the mud. The old man then mixes in and a free-for-all fight in the mud takes place between the love-mad bachelors.

A CHANGE IN LOVERS (March 28).—Father's time piece was out of order so he gave it to daughter to take to the watchmaker. Daughter, however, entrusted it to her sweetheart, who lost it. His rival found it, but father, though he didn't know the rival, certainly was not mistaken about his watch, and attempted to get it.

To this the rival objected and gave father a black eye. Soon after the sweetheart and the rival both were pinched. The Judge turned out to be father. His black eye did not deter him from recognizing the fellow who gave it to him and he promptly put him in the dungeon.

The rival was husky, however, and cut loose by breaking through a stone wall. Slumbering cops, a sledge hammer, the Judge's sore optic and the girl and sweetheart were a few of the things that caused all persons concerned to run around in circles.

HEARTS AND FLAMES (Two Parts—March 31).—Daughter liked the plumber, but father couldn't see the pipe twister as a husband for his only child. When he made a visit, father was rude and requested him to leave. He came back, but had to stand outside in the cold and talk to his sweetheart through the second story window. He was not there long as daughter plugged up the sink with some of her own blonde hair. The sink overflowed, and father was forced to holler for the plumber.

Of course the plumber who responded was daughter's sweetheart. All would have gone well had he not gotten the pipes mixed up and connected the gas pipe to the water pipe and vice a versa. Meanwhile father had guests to dinner. They got water when they wanted gas and gas when they wanted water. Finally, someone who failed to realize that gas and matches were uncongenial, caused an unexpected explosion. Fire departments, life nets, thrills, police, excitement and a canvas net in which a fat man got stuck, come on in rapid succession. The plumber saves the family, but himself falls into the cellar where there's five feet of cold water.

LAEMMLE.

HIS LAST TRICK (March 8).—James Mordon, a reformed cracksman, is in the employ of Henry Penrose, as chauffeur. The latter receives a letter from a probation officer informing him of his employees having served time in prison.

He decides to discharge the young man but is persuaded by his wife to give him a chance. Alma, his wife, has had a previous love affair with Herbert Manning, an unscrupulous fellow, who lives by his wits. She writes him asking him to destroy all of her letters and in reply he writes her that he is in need of money and makes an appointment with her at 10 o'clock that night. When they meet words lead to an argument and a struggle ensues. James Mordon, the chauffeur, sees them and goes to her assistance. He learns what the dispute is about and decides that he will steal his mistress' letters from her former sweetheart, who has failed to keep his agreement.

He breaks into the latter's apartment and is caught. In endeavoring to get away he is shot and killed. The next morning Mrs. Penrose reads the note the chauffeur has left her, in which he told her that he was going to commit his last robbery and secure the letters. At the same time, the husband reads of the killing of Mordon, the newspaper account veiling the tragedy as a mystery.

THE PINCH (April 4).—Spider Dale, a crook, while passing a factory sees Anne, one of the girls employed there, insulted by a foreman. He assists her out of her difficulty and wins her friendship. A moment later he sees approaching Officer Weldon, plain clothesman, and instinctively beats a hasty retreat. Officer Weldon is in love with the little factory girl, who has been protected from insult by Spider Dale, and he is at this time coming to meet her. Later Weldon receives orders from his chief to round up Spider Dale's gang, including Spider Dale himself, who is much wanted.

Spider Dale and his fellow crooks plan and execute a raid upon a safe. Weldon and his men besiege the gang's headquarters, but the crooks escape. Spider is wounded in the arm. He stops for a moment in the doorway of a cheap apartment house and to his surprise, meets Anne. She sees that he is wounded and, without asking questions, invites him up to her room in order that she may dress his wounds. Before pursuing the chase further, Officer Weldon decides to call upon his sweetheart. She conceals Spider. Weldon enters and is not long in discovering blood stains. He questions the girl, but she refuses to answer. He leaves, but returns later with an officer. This time they catch Spider and the girl together. Weldon would have allowed Spider to escape when he hears his sweetheart's story, but the one great obstacle is, that with the reward offered for Dale, he and the girl had planned to be married. The arrival of his fellow officers cuts short his thoughts and he is obliged to turn the crook over for arrest.

Anne realizes her sweetheart's position in the matter and forgives him. They are happily married and, upon Spider's release, Weldon hunts him out and invites him home to supper.

POWERS.

LOVE OF THE PARENT (April 3).—In a remote Western ranch country, Joe Saunders, a bad man, credited with holding up many stage coaches and robbing them of their bullion, lives in a crude log cabin with his baby daughter, Billy. Without food or money, Saunders takes to the road to rob the Overland stage. Sheriff O'Neil and his young daughter, Nan, living in the same territory, are suddenly summoned by the frantic passengers of the Overland stage, who inform Sheriff O'Neil of a holdup that has just taken place. The sheriff takes to the road to search for the outlaw.

Returning to his cabin, Saunders buries the bullion and mask under the blankets of his bunk and takes to the wilds, stopping at a water hole to satisfy his thirsty horse. Looking back along the creek bed, he sees the graceful form of the Sheriff's daughter. They meet, and fall in love. Sheriff O'Neil in search of the outlaw, is shot. The outlaw returns meanwhile to his cabin.

Nan is told by a passing range rider of the death of her father, and over his dead body swears vengeance on the murderer. A wedding is planned between the outlaw and Nan, and for the first time the Sheriff's daughter enters the cabin of the outlaw and there sees Saunder's motherless child. Saunder's baby daughter brings from their hiding place the bags of gold dust and her father's holdup mask, and places them in the lap of the Sheriff's daughter. Nan then realizes that she is about to marry her father's murderer.

Taking the outlaw's rifle, she levels it upon the door of the cabin through which the outlaw enters and there, face to face, accuses her husband of murdering her father. Saunders confesses, with the barrel of the rifle pressed against his breast, but, suddenly detracting Nan's attention, grabs the gun as she fires. The bullet enters the logs of the cabin. With a desperate laugh and dare devil manner, the outlaw makes his getaway. Rushing to his horse, saddled and bridled, he is in the act of mounting, when the door of his cabin opens. Levelling her rifle, Nan fires and her father's murderer falls dead from his horse. Thereafter Nan devotes her life to the upbringing of the outlaw's motherless child.

NESTOR.

IN A JACKPOT (March 30).—Mr. Newlywed cannot resist a trip to the club even the night following his marriage and comes home in the small hours of the morning, after promising wife to be there at twelve. As he comes in the cuckoo clock strikes two and he vainly cuckoos ten times to fool wife, but falls over a chair and spoils it all. In the morning wife lays the law down to him and makes him promise not to go to the club. During the day she receives notice of her mother's sudden illness and leaves.

As hubby has promised not to go to the club he brings the club to him and they are having a lovely time. The city detectives have been watching the Lovejoy apartments in which Newlyweds live and have found that a gang of gamblers are carrying on their "services" every night. They resolve on a raid this night and surround the house. Wife returns unexpectedly and hubby spies her when she first comes near the house. A wild scene follows his attempts to get his friends away before her arrival.

In the confusion of the getaway they are taken for real gamblers by the police and exciting chases follow, ending by Newlywed's friends being taken to court. Wife comes in to find hubby with a rag about his head and awfully sick. She gives him the simple old remedies of mother's time, such as hot water and mustard plaster which he is forced to take.

His friends are arraigned before the judge and plead not guilty. They tell the judge to phone their friend Mr. Newlywed, who will vouch for them. He phones the house and wife answers the phone and indignantly tells the police that hubby has been very sick and certainly has not been playing cards. The story closes by the friends finally getting off and wife, after reading the riot act to hubby, agrees to let him go to the club occasionally.

HIS ONLY PANTS (April 2).—The artist is having a hard struggle to make ends meet in the city. His chum rallies him and tells him his time will come. They hear of a big reception to be given at the Brownlee mansion to which all artists are to be invited. Miss Brownlee will then pick out one of them to paint her picture. The two friends go to the ball. They seek a secluded corner and watch the scene with woe-begone faces. Miss Brownlee, who has a silent dislike for the artists with their funny dress and whiskers, also seeks quiet and comes upon the two. They are having a nice time when they are again interrupted.

Next morning the artist receives a note from Miss Brownlee saying she has chosen him to paint her picture and will be at his studio at 10. The studio is in a mess and they begin to clean up. His clothes are dirty, so he sends them to a tailor with orders to have them in 30 minutes. Meanwhile he puts on a tablecloth for trousers. Miss Brownlee arrives and the artist is in a quandary, his pants are gone, and, hastily sending for them, he finds the shop closed. Miss Brownlee and her chum come in and the artist tries to make the best of things by saying he always paints in his queer costume.

Many amusing incidents follow his attempt to paint and keep his "trousers" up at the same time, which are ended by the arrival of his chum. He drags the chum in another room and makes him change clothes with him and wear the tablecloth. The ladies propose lunch, which is eagerly accepted as he has spent his last money in renting a suit for the reception at her house. They leave his chum in a hungry, disconsolate heap in the other room. Miss Brownlee's friend, who has taken a secret liking to the artist's chum, returns to the studio and when she gets no response to her knocks, goes in. She sees an object flitting away and follows it. The chum, fearful of being discovered, takes to the fire escape. Several amusing incidents occur when he is spied by the cop on the beat. Things, however, are finally straightened out and the artist at last begins to see prosperity for his chum and himself.

THE OAK LAWN HANDICAP (Two Parts—April 3).—Owner John Deering buys Liberty Belle, a mare of fine breeding and speed, but looked upon as a cripple and an outlaw, for none of the jockeys can be tempted to mount her. One day a strange fat little fellow, one "Pudge" Hill, drifts into the Deering stable and proves that he can handle the notorious Liberty Belle to her owner's satisfaction; in fact, he seems to exert an uncanny charm over the outlaw. He is at once entrenched forever in Owner Deering's estimation. His work is to put Liberty Belle through her daily paces, while acting in the capacity of Deering's stable boy.

Liberty Belle is entered in the celebrated Oaklawn Handicap, a classic event, and it is then that scheming rival forces set to work to ruin

Liberty Belle's almost certain chance of winning the laurels. Ed Hovey, a scheming bookmaker, wins to his side with money, "Shang" Baker, who has a personal grievance against Owner Deering as well as against Liberty Belle, for whom he was formerly trainer. They bribe Jeff Ellis, the blacksmith, to put crooked shoes on Liberty Belle.

Their scheme is discovered by "Pudge" and the discomfited tricksters determine to get him out of the way. The day of the race arrives and Nick Wells is to ride Liberty Belle. The schemers abduct Jockey Wells at the last moment and panic reigns in Deering's headquarters as the time for the start draws nearer and nearer. Meanwhile, a humble instrument works for their deliverance. "Limpy" Joe, once a successful jockey, but now a crippled hanger-on at the race track, is roughly handled by Ed Hovey. He obtains his revenge and saves the day for Deering and Liberty Bell by releasing the captive jockey, who arrives at the track in time to win the race. The schemers are baffled and ruled from the track. "Limpy" Joe is established for life in the good graces of John Deering.

GOLD SEAL.

THE DUCHESS (Three Parts—March 30).—Nora Delaney, known as the Duchess of Ballyhinch, lives with her father, Squire Delaney. She has a cousin, Dennis Delaney, who, with his mother, are their only wealthy relatives. Dennis Delany has a great deal of trouble with his tenants, who are led in their opposition to him by Maloney. Dennis pays his pretty cousin a visit at her father's home and a delightful love affair develops. Back at home with his mother is Katherine Cazalet, his fiancee, to whom he has been betrothed since early childhood.

While Dennis is visiting the Squire and his daughter, a letter arrives from the former's mother inviting him to bring his pretty cousin back with him. Squire Delaney is more than delighted that his daughter shall have a touch of high society and accordingly sees her off in company with Dennis. Nora learns that Katherine is the fiancee of the man she has learned to love and her love gradually turns to hatred. Katherine Cazalet has only contempt for Nora. Dennis one evening wanders far out into the country to be alone with his thoughts. It happens that Nora also despondently seeks the solitude of nature. Dennis is followed by Maloney who plans to kill the man he considers a tyrant and his oppressor.

A rain storm comes up and Nora seeks shelter in a deserted cabin. Maloney fires at Dennis but misses him and Dennis returns the shot. The two engage in a death struggle. Nora has heard the shots and rushes out of the cabin, grabs a bar from the delapidated gate and, slipping up behind Maloney, deals him a heavy blow over the head. She finds that Dennis is seriously wounded and drags him back to the cabin, where she nurses him through the night. With morning, she hails a passing wagon and has the driver transport Dennis home. She then wanders back to the stately mansion alone.

Throughout the night all have been considerably alarmed because of the strange disappearance of the couple. Nora finally comes in, weary and worn, and endeavors to tell her story. Katherine is brutal in her rebuffs. Later Dennis arrives and is cared for. Squire Delaney, unable to bear the absence of his daughter, later arrives at the mansion. Nora nurses Dennis through his illness, which is the result of Maloney's attack, and later they plight their troth. Dennis has been freed by Katherine who gives herself over to Sir Brandrum Boileau, who has for many years been asking her hand.

DOGGONE IT (March 20).—Frank, a ne'er-do-well, receives a letter from his fiance's father advising him to cut out an imaginary fast life or be left penniless according to the terms of his father's will. That evening the girl asks him to get her a dog. On the way home he picks up a stray canine and carries it to his room. The girl's half-witted brother, who has studied burglary by mail, breaks into Frank's room, and is caught, first by the dog and then by Frank. In exchange for his freedom he agrees to pry open Frank's father's safe. He is captured by the father—but not before the son has found a clause in the will granting him unconditional rights to the estate.

JOURNEY'S END (March 27).—Harry stole Charlie's girl, when they were children. After forty years enmity increases, though both have become ministers. Harry utterly refuses to let his daughter, Polly, marry Paul, Charlie's son. And Charlie is just as bitterly opposed to becoming the father-in-law of Harry's daughter. The young folks elope and wire their parents they are married. They send the message a bit prematurely, however, as the Justice of the Peace has refused to marry them over night, and meanwhile the marriage license blows out of the window of the boy's room into the hands of a thief. The thief is arrested and the license restored the next morning to the distraught couple. By the time the fathers reach the court the ceremony is over.

RELIANCE.

THE GAME OF THRILLS (March 22).—Jack Morris, a young engineer, complains to Graves and Belden, bachelor pals of his, that there is no excitement or romance in New York, and that he has decided to sail in a few days to South America. The two friends conspire with an actress, Loretta Blair, to give Morris an adventure. The girl goes to his rooms at the hotel, representing herself to be a Russian woman seeking to evade the secret police of her country. She implores his aid. Graves and Belden, disguised as Russians, enter the apartment and bind and gag Morris and Loretta. They then take their victims to a deserted house and, after locking them in, depart, satisfied, to their club. A tramp accidentally sets fire to the house, and when Belden and Graves return to release their prisoners they find the building in flames. They try frantically to break in through the fire lines, believing that they are the murderers of Morris and Loretta. Then, through the smoke, they see the supposed victims coming toward them. Morris tells the conspirators about their narrow escape and that they have been watching the fire from a distance. And then Belden and Graves are forgiven their serious little joke, because Morris has found his romance at last right in New York.

THE FORGED TESTAMENT (Two Parts—March 21).—Mawby, an unscrupulous adventurer, beguiles a rich widow into marrying him. Very soon she discovers his real character. He constantly badgers her for money, which he loses at cards, and one night he wrests her purse from her, falling in a semi-drunken stupor on the couch. Mrs. Halloway, feeling a heart attack coming on—she has an incurable heart trouble—and fearing that Mawby will get possession of her estate, sits down at once and writes a will, leaving everything she owns to her daughter. Madeline, who is away at school. Suspicious, however, lest Mawby be feigning drunk to put her off her guard, she hides the will in the front of her dress. Then she writes a letter to her lawyer, asking him to come the next day for the will. Feeling faint, and gasping for breath, she staggers to the porch and falls on a divan. From there she sees Mawby pocket the letter to the lawyer, and taking the will out of her dress puts it in a secret compartment of a locket she is wearing. Her death occurs that night. After the funeral, Mawby helps himself to Mrs. Halloway's jewels. The locket, however, appearing to be of small value, he tosses it over to Madeline. Pressed for money and fearing that if the missing will is found he will be penniless, Mawby tries to inveigle Madeline into marrying him. Failing in this, he contrives to have her lured to a lonely roadhouse, coming along just in time to save her reputation, if she will promise to marry him. Realizing that he is at the bottom of her predicament, the girl indignantly refuses, and is marched to jail by the police, who have raided the inn. Mawby seeks to clinch matters by wiring The Evening Statesman the details of her arrest. The city editor assigns Muriel Manning to the story. Muriel and Madeline discover in one another old friends, and Madeline confides everything to the young reporter. While they are talking

THE "GREASER" (March 23).—Miriam is the daughter of a rancher and lives alone with him on the ranch. Miguel, a Mexican "hand," is a little better than the average of ranch hands, although to Miriam and her father he is only a "greaser." Miriam, however, is kind to him on occasions and he dares to dream of her. Miriam never knows of it, however, although her father catches him kissing a rose she has dropped and kicks him for his presumption. One day comes a young man, Clifton, to the ranch, returning from a hunting trip through the nearby hills. He is hurt nearby, and, being found by Miriam, is cared for at the ranch. On his recovery, he is loath to go, having fallen in love with Miriam, much to the jealousy of Miguel, who plans revenge on his successful rival.

During a trip to town, Clifton gets into trouble and kills a man quite accidentally and flees. Miguel has been a witness to the affair and delights in the lynching party's pursuit of Clifton. However, he witnesses the meeting between the girl and her sweetheart, and determines to save him for her. He trades clothes with Clifton and allows the posse to see him. Pursuing the fleeing Miguel, they call on him to halt. Miguel, disobeying, is shot for Clifton and Clifton is saved to the girl who loves him. The girl and Clifton, on seeing Miguel brought back dead, realize the sacrifice he has made for both of them.

BEAUTY.

THE FIRST STONE (March 30)—The Rev. Arthur Johnson has one son, Ernest, who has chummed up with a fast set. His father disowns him and drives him from home for his disgraceful behavior. Mary Carr has been deceived and deserted and previous to her child being born was taken into a "home."

Five years later she has become a great favorite and the Rev. Arthur, who is a patron of the home, recommends her as housekeeper to his friend Steel, a widower with one child, Bobby. Steel gradually falls in love with the quiet little motherly woman, who takes such care of his home and little son. Mary reciprocates, but cannot make up her mind to tell him of her past. The Rev. Arthur discovers the growing affection and tells her she must leave before the damage is done, as Steel would never forgive her if he knew her past. Mary slips away with her little daughter at night, leaving a note asking Steel to forgive her for her seeming ingratitude.

The Rev. Arthur is called to the death of his erring son, though before he dies confesses that he has married the girl six years before, but growing tired of her had deserted her and told her their marriage was only a fake. He gives his father a photo and asks him to find her and tell her the truth. On looking at the photo he recognizes it as that of Mary Carr. He hurries back to Steel to find that Mary has disappeared. They find her and everything is explained, and Steel and Mary are made happy in their new relationship.

AMERICAN.

IN THE SUNLIGHT (Two Parts—March 29).—A slave to the drug habit. Dr. Arthur Abbott leaves a fair country practice for the fame of the city career about the same time that Frank Stead, a young city physician of the slums, longing for the sunlight and open air comes to the village. In the city Dr. Abbott soon forgets his wife and child in the country and becomes infatuated with an adventuress named Olga Abbott's old office being well known, Dr. Stead takes it and he and Helen, Dr. Abbott's wife, are thrown much together. They both realize that their companionship is growing into love, but Helen's marriage is ever a barrier between them.

Meanwhile Dr. Abbott, because of his habit, is losing what practice he had and having spent all his money, his temptress no longer cares for him. During a quarrel between the pair, Olga is stricken with heart disease and dies. To the doctor's drug crazed brain, it appears that he will be accused of her murder, so he flees the city on a freight train. An accident occurs and Dr. Abbott is erroneously reported to have died in a hospital. When this news reached the farm, young Dr. Stead declares his love for Helen, who, thinking she is free to marry, accepts. Dr. Abbott's injuries prove slight and he is soon released from the hospital and turns to his old drug habit. Wandering back to his old home he arrives on the day before the time set for the wedding. On approaching the house he sees his wife in her lover's arms. In rage he attempts to attack Frank, but his body and mind, weakened by the continual use of drugs, gives way and he drops dead. Later Frank and Helen are married.

REFORMATION (March 31)—After escaping from attempted burglary, Jimmie is traced by the detectives to the home of his sister, a suspected shoplifter, and breaking in they find the suspect concealed in a box couch. Arrested, Jimmie advises his sister to move to another sister, and begin life anew. Molly follows her brother's advice and secures a situation in a laundry, joins the local church and by nursing among the poor earns the praise of all except her neighbors, who are suspicious because she does not mingle in their society. Her brother escapes from prison and Molly on her way from work reads a news item that the convict is believed to be in the vicinity. She also discovers that she is shadowed by detectives and upon reaching her home prepares to do all she can to shield her brother in case he comes. And knowing of the presence of the detective, Jimmie is admitted by the back door, but, unfortunately, getting between the lamp and window his shadow is thrown on the shade, to the view of the waiting detective. Molly realizes the harm that has been done and blows out the light and to the detective's inquiries denies the presence of her brother in the house. Forcing himself into the room the detective is attacked in the darkness and in a desperate struggle overpowered by Jimmie. Molly entering with a lamp pleads with her brother to spare the policeman, arguing that come what may the law will find him some day and he will only have a bigger penalty to pay. Her arguments prevail, Jimmie consents to be arrested and is returned to prison to serve the remaining six months of his sentence. His term served, Molly and Jim resolve to lead Christian lives and their reformation is complete.

JOE HARKIN'S WARD (March 19).—Lawson, a young widower, has a daughter about four years old. He was prospecting in the gold field with Joe Harkins, a young man about twenty-two. Lawson meets with an accident that results in his death, leaving his little girl all alone in the world. Joe Harkins, not knowing what else to do with the little one, takes her to live with him. Joe, having no experience with children, knows little of their needs and cares. However, he gets the little one prepared for bed.

A few years elapse and Joe's shack is transformed into a cozy little home under the care of his ward, who has now become his housekeeper. Joe learns to love the little one very much and afterwards when Joe strikes it rich sends her East to a school to be educated, moving himself to the city where he can enjoy life, as he is still a young man. His ward after six years at school returns to live with Joe in the city. She is now a very beautiful young lady of about twenty years. Joe, although very happy at her return, and still loving her dearly, realizes that it would be improper to have this young girl living at his house, as he is still a bachelor, and he tells her so. She, however, has fallen deeply in love with him, and when Joe tells her the reason they must part, her womanly love predominates and she suggests that they get married, an assertion which brings Joe to the realization that he loves his ward, not as a child any more, but as a woman and a sweetheart.

THE SKINFLINT (March 20).—An old man living a peculiarly strange life was called "The Skinflint." Even the sound of playing children's voices grates on his harsh old soul. He is amply equipped with money, but withholds it from the needy even though they be his own children. He denies aid to his struggling young son, and he turns his distressed daughter from him when she tells him of her invalid husband and poverty-stricken children.

But he experiences a revulsion of feeling towards mankind when he sees in a vision what kind of a man he might have been. The vision isn't too good to be true, but he determines and so it is that he goes back to the son and daughter, gives them the help they need. Then he buys a spacious mansion and there he gathers his now loved ones around him.

KOMIC.

MIXED VALUES (March 28).—Emily, a servant in the Lewis household, gets a note from Jimmie, her sweetheart, in which he explains a week's absence. (He claims to have been visiting his sick grandmother.) In reality Jimmie has been in jail for the length of time mentioned. Upon his release, Jimmie gets a job in the office of Henry Van Dyke, a lawyer, and sweetheart of Alice Lewis, the young lady of the house in which Emily is employed.

Henry Van Dyke has ordered a ring for Alice and he sends Jimmie to the jewelry store to get it. Upon seeing a bargain in rings at the jewelry store, Jimmie decides to buy one for Emily, and for the sum of one dollar and a half he secures a ring very much like the one for which Henry paid one hundred dollars. Jimmie and Henry find a sympathetic subject in discussing their approaching engagements, and in their excitement they get the rings mixed up, so that Jimmie, upon proposing to Emily, gives her the valuable one, and Henry in turn presents Alice with the cheap ring.

Alice soon discovers the cheapness of the ring, and sends word to Henry that their engagement is off, no explanation necessary, considering the cheap trick he has played upon her. Henry does not understand and proceeds to drown his sorrows. The jeweler has misplaced a valuable ring and thinks it has been stolen. Jimmie was the last customer to look at the tray which contained the missing one. The jeweler notifies the police, who recognize the description of Jimmie, he having been recently released from jail. Jimmie is arrested, and Emily is heart-broken, thinking her lover a thief.

Henry has become disgracefully intoxicated and finds himself in jail with Jimmie. The two men console one another. Emily begs the jeweler not to make a charge against Jimmie, and it happens that at this time the jeweler finds the missing ring in the bottom of the showcase. He and Emily rush to the police station to save Jimmie. Alice has heard from Henry and arrives at the station to bail him out. The jeweler, upon seeing the ring, which is held as evidence against Jimmie, recognizes it as the one which Henry purchased. It is then that Jimmie and Henry realize that they have mixed the rings, and their troubles are at an end.

THANHOUSER.

LITTLE BOBBY (March 14). Bob, a little boy of six years of age, lives with his father, a cobbler, who wants to buy a home. Bob hears his father's plans and is interested; his love for him is so great that he decides to set aside his toys and help his father buy a home. He tires of his blocks, and he decides to go out and earn money. He leaves his sister, who is deeply interested in her book, and wanders away. He meets with many incidents and in the course of his wanderings finds a valuable case of jewels for which there has been offered a reward of $2,000. His parents, returning, find him gone, and start a search for him. In the evening they discover him on the main street marching with the flag bearer of the Salvation Army, happy in his innocence. The money he receives for the finding of the jewels buys the cottage which was the choice of his father and mother.

THE STOLEN JEWELS (March 21)—William Jameson engages Bryce, a detective, to investigate several mysterious robberies which have occurred in one of his stores. Suspicion is thrown by Guy Manse, the manager, upon Jack Kent, a young clerk, whose duty is to open and close the safe, and with Manse's help the detective manages to entrap the clerk and secure evidence against him. Kent is sent to jail. Mary Ball, his sweetheart, alone believes in his innocence. Also, she is conscious that Manse covets her. She watches the manager closely, and one day sees him drop a pawn ticket. Quickly she notes the number and name of the pawnbroker. The manager recovers the ticket without knowing that he has betrayed himself. Mary locates the stolen jewels and puts the detective upon the right track. Kent is absolved and the manager punished.

THE DUEL IN THE DARK (Two Parts—March 23).—John Gregory, district attorney of a large city, institutes a vigorous campaign against lawbreakers of all descriptions, particularly clairvoyants and like characters, who prey upon the weakness of the ignorant. The secret head of this worthless class is Sardo, a hypnotist, known for his great powers. In spite of pressure brought from persons of great influence, the district attorney and his chief assistant, Ralph Morris, continue the work, with the result that many prisoners are brought to trial and receive the punishment they deserve. Opportunity favors Sardo, however, for Mrs Gregory, the wife of the district attorney, narrowly escapes injury in an automobile accident and is brought to Sardo's home to recover from the shock. By the exercise of his powers, he cures her of a headache and also learns that she is the wife of his enemy and resolves to take advantage of it.

Florence, the district attorney's daughter, looks with favor upon the suit of Morris, and the latter's efforts are finally crowned with success. Their happiness, however, is marred by the peculiar actions of the girl's mother and, in fact, by the advance information in regard to police raids are given to those whom it is intended to affect. Circumstances compel Morris to suspect the district attorney. In spite of the fact that he has a great personal feeling for him and that he is the father of the girl he is going to marry, conclusive evidence is brought to Morris and he feels that he must choose between his love for Florence and his duty as an officer of the city. He decides upon the latter course and in a strong scene accuses the district attorney of neglectful duty and compels him to sign his resignation.

Florence, becoming concerned over her mother's peculiar actions, finally succeeds in getting a confession from her mother, who reveals the fact that Sardo, by the use of his hypnotic powers, compelled her to spy upon her husband and reveal to him the information which has defeated the district attorney in all his plans. The mother promises to have nothing more to do with Sardo, but the man's will power is too great for her and she goes once more to his home. Florence follows and a great scene takes place—the hypnotist and the daughter striving to control Mrs. Gregory. The will power of the daughter and the natural affection which the mother possesses for her is too great even for Sardo, and his control over Mrs. Gregory is broken. The district attorney's innocence is proven, and Sardo is sent to prison.

Morris apologizes to the district attorney for misjudging him, and receives forgiveness, as well as from Florence.

JEALOUSY (March 26).—Arthur Compton is apt to drink too much sometimes but Ruth, his young wife, is forbearing with him, hoping that gradually he may overcome the habit. One evening he goes to the club, under the influence of a glass too many, he expatiates to John, his friend, about George, his rival before marriage, and how he won the girl who now is his wife. Returning home, he drops into a chair in the library and dozes off. In a dream it seems to him that he has found George and his wife in the house together. The husband and the lover quarrel. Compton kills his rival. He is arrested and is on the point of leaving his wife and his home forever, when he wakes up. The dream makes him realize what actually might happen if he continues to let his bad habit get the better of him. He promises Ruth that he will let the drink alone.

THE SPIRIT OF UPLIFT (March 28).—Whitey, Blinky and Muggs were gunmen. Blinky got shot in a fight with cops. Whitey discovers Blinky has a blind father that craves for the return of his son and the letter Blinky had in his pocket said that the $25,000 he had would keep him in comfort. Whitey wants Muggs to impersonate the dead Blinky to the blind father, get the cash and make a getaway. The idea appeals to Muggs and he goes to Blinky's home and is accepted as the son, until he meets May, who has been so kind to the old man. Then the woman's influence begins its work and Muggs doesn't intend to put over the double cross. Whitey fights with Muggs because the game is delayed and Muggs disarms him after a raw reference to May's influence. Whitey intends to get Muggs, but in robbing a store for a new "stick" he runs afoul of a cop that closes the chapter. Muggs, Mrs. Gordon, nor May never knew, and Muggs' past was dead.

THE MAGNET OF DESTRUCTION (Two Parts—March 30)—Arthur Grennell, the son of a wealthy manufacturer, is one of the leaders in his class at college. Hilton, an old scientist, interested in the welfare of the poor, visits the college with his daughter, Mignon, and delivers a lecture to the students. Mignon meets Arthur Grennell, and later a strong attachment grows up between them.

Lyell, the head of an organization whose avowed object is to injure the rich members of society, tries to interest the old scientist in his cause, and finally succeeds in convincing him that the only way to secure justice from the rich for the weak is to adopt stern and cruel methods. Hilton joints the society, and later Arthur, not knowing the real aim of the organization, joints it, thinking it to be merely for charitable purposes. Arthur later learns to his surprise that the organization is one that hands out sentence of death to its enemies, and that same evening he is commanded to execute this sentence to an enemy. He refuses, and escapes. Lyell becomes manager of an out-of-town factory, and takes Hilton and his daughter, Mignon, with him to the little town.

At the foundry where Lyell and Hilton are employed is a great magnet which lifts several tons of heavy iron from barges in the river and deposits them in the factory yard. Lyell, who is employed to handle this magnet, learns that a number of wealthy men, among them Arthur and his father, are to visit the foundry, and he plans to drop the iron rails upon the visitors. The plan would have been successful had it not been for Mignon who sees Lyell, and jumps into the little car and stops the machinery in a fierce struggle with Lyell. Hilton, upon learning the mean character of Lyell, and the evil nature of the organization, willingly leaves it, while Arthur wins the girl.

TRICKED (Two Parts—March 25).—Tom and Sid Hart are brothers. Sid marries a wealthy woman who starts him in the real estate business. He aims to rise in society. Tom remains home and supports his aged mother. Sid Hart is ashamed of his poor relations. He grudgingly allows his mother five dollars a week. The mother falls sick through the heat of the great city. Tom makes a plea to his brother, asking him to raise the allowance as he is out of work and they need the money. Sid's wife answers the letter, refusing the request. Tom desperately raises his brother's check from five to five hundred dollars. He sends his mother away to the country under the doctor's advice and then calls upon his brother, telling him what he has done. The brother angrily telephones to the police and has Tom arrested.

The argument is heard by Edna Boxley, Sid Heart's stenographer. The girl and Tom Hart are sweethearts, but have hidden the fact from Sid, who does not know they are even acquainted. Sid Hart is a roue. He has a private apartment where he entertains his lady friends, unknown to his wife. He has hinted at various times that Edna, who is poor, might share these apartments if she so wishes. He shows her the key to the apartment, which he has placed in Edna's desk so that his wife will not find it. Edna plans to trick Sid. She leaves the office. Sid finds a note from her stating that she has accepted his proposition and has gone to the flat to look over it, requesting him to meet her there. Edna goes to the apartments and phones Sid's wife to come there at once. Sid, in the meantime, is following her. Edna forces Sid to telephone the police exonerating his brother. She informs him that his wife is on her way to the flat and that if he does not do as she commands she will expose his double life to his wife. Sid Hart telephones the police that he has made a mistake about the check. The wife arrives while Edna is secreted behind some curtains. The wife goes to examine the rooms and Edna leaves to join Tom, while Sid is forced to explain to his wife that he has furnished the flat as a present to her on her forthcoming birthday.

IN THE SWITCH TOWER (Two Parts—March 24).—Bill Wharton, his own worst enemy, because of his heavy drinking, has descended from being the best engineer on the division to a wiper. In a bar-room fight one of the railroad men is killed, and Bill is arrested and sentenced to three years at hard labor in the State prison. Bill's son, Joel, who has left Bill when he was a mere boy, has risen rapidly in the railroad circles and is now division superintendent. Bill, realizing the disgrace to his son, should he learn of his penitentiary sentence, prevails upon his old friend, Robt. Hall, to write and tell Joel that he passed away suddenly. Hall, much against his will, does as requested.

The three years pass, Bill is freed, and, unable to resist going back to his old home, appears, one morning, hungry and tired, at the Hall kitchen door. He is kindly received by them and invited in. The same day, Hall receives a letter from Joel, stating that his work will bring him to his old home and he will avail himself of the opportunity to call upon Hall. Hall shows the letter to Bill. When Joe comes to see Hall, Bill stands outside, sadly, realizing that he is shut out from welcoming his son.

Joel goes the next morning to inspect the yards. He is pleased with the way things look and is telling the yard superintendent so when he glances off and sees Alden, the assistant yard superintendent, drinking from a whiskey flask. He has Alden sent to him and tells him the company has no more use for him. Alden, in a drunken temper, swears vengeance, and that night goes to the Junction switch tower and, after overpowering the old towerman, throws the lever that will cause a collision between the eastbound flier and the special on which are Joel and his wife. Bill, who has started for the Junction, in order to watch Joel's special pass, sees that the switch is thrown and, realizing that something is wrong, hurries to the switch tower. There a fierce struggle takes place between Alden and Bill, in which Alden stabs Bill. Bill is barely able to throw the lever before he passes out, thus preventing the collision.

KAY BEE.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Two Parts—March 26).—Jeremiah Stokes, a close-fisted farmer, is supporting his aged brother, David. David is a war veteran and is unable to do any hard work on the farm owing to his feebleness. His selfish brother and wife make life miserable for him and degrade him and insult him at every opportunity. They make him eat at "second table" and take the refuse of what is left from the first, and, as a consequence, he has difficulty in getting enough to eat.

Employed in the same household is Amanda, a little "slavie," and who is also mistreated and occasionally beaten by the high-tempered Mr. Stokes. She manages to smuggle food to David in his attic bedroom, and the two, old age and girlish innocence, become inseparable companions. David has never applied for a pension, but now determines to do so. He writes to a Washington pension attorney, who, in answer, tells David that he will accept the case, but must have a cash retaining fee of $35. David does not have the money, but "Slavie" Amanda learning of the matter, advances the money to David out of her savings. The grateful old man promises to split fifty-fifty with her all the money collected from the Government for his back pension and interest.

Jeremiah sends David to the poor farm. Amanda is heartbroken at the loss of her old friend and neighbors are indignant. At the poor farm David is sun struck and falls seriously ill. A drought ruins Stokes crops and he is unable to meet his mortgage. It is foreclosed and the place advertised sold by the sheriff to satisfy the mortgage. The pension attorney comes to the farm to find David. Jeremiah refuses to tell the attorney where David is. As the attorney is leaving Amanda sees him and, suspecting that it has something to do with the pension, buttonholes the lawyer and promises to take him to David. She steals Jeremiah's buckboard and team and drives the attorney to the poor house and there they find David and the attorney turns over to him the back pension.

KRITERION SERVICE.

(The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program during the week of Monday, Mar 15, to Saturday, March 20, inclusive).

THE STEP BROTHERS (Santa Barbara—Two Parts).—On learning that his son, Richard, has got himself heavily into debt and is leading a reckless life, Richard Bedloe, Sr., disinnerits him and makes his will over in favor of his step son. A cabaret dancer is induced by her husband to apply for a position as maid in the Bedloe household and act as his accomplice in a robbery which he contemplates making there. She secures the position and is surprised to meet Richard there, having met him several times at the cabaret where she was formerly employed.

Late that night her husband enters the house and, with her assistance, succeeds in getting at the safe. Mr. Bedloe, Sr., hearing a sound, comes down to see what is wrong and is shot down by the robber, who makes his escape. His step-son, awakened by the shot, seizes his rifle and, seeing a slinking figure on the lawn, takes a shot at him, but misses. He then enters the room where his step-father lies dead. The entire household has now been aroused and all rush into the room where the tragedy has taken place. Richard, seeing the rifle in his brother's hand, immediately concludes that he has shot his stepfather in order to get the money left him in the changed will, and when the police arrive, the step-son is arrested on suspicion.

The next day the maid resigns her position and returns to her husband, who roughly orders her out. Filled with anger, she hunts up Billy and relates to him the truth about the robbery and murder. She then returns to her husband and cajoles him into accompanying her to the restaurant where she used to work, where she has told Billy to wait. While her husband is carrying on a flirtation with a cabaret singer, Billy phones for the police, who arrive and take the real criminal away. Billy then hastens to the prison with his mother and his step-brother's sweetheart and has his brother released from the crime.

A DEVILISH DREAM (Thistle).—Fritz and his wife have one of their daily arguments and Fritz retires to his room. His wife's parting words are to the effect that unless he ceases his dissipations, the old Nick himself will get him.

Fritz laughs at the prophecy, but is no sooner in bed than wonders begin. He is transported to the lower regions, where he meets not only the Prince of Darkness, but has the honor to be introduced to all the little Princes, with the result that his visit is marked by several unpleasant adventures. Overcome at last, by the persistency of their attentions, he makes an attempt to escape. Old Nick and his pet imp follow him through the air and back to the city. Finally, however, Fritz manages to evade them.

Awakening in his room, he is again tempted to imbibe, but the vision that appears in the bottle works a complete reformation.

STEVE'S STEADFAST STEED (C. K.).—Lucille, daughter of the owner of the Worst Luck Mine, is in love with Stalwart Steve and endeavors to persuade her father to give his consent to their engagement. Father, however, is inclined to believe that his daughter is intended to raise the family socially, and looks to the day when he can take her abroad and have her introduced among the nobility.

The advent of Reginald Percival Scrubbs seems like a Heaven-sent blessing to father, especially as Archie immediately becomes enamored of Lucille, when he sees the pile of nuggets the Worst Luck Mine yields daily. Steve gains Archie's hatred and through his influence, father sends Steve into the desert to hunt for new mines and confines Lucille to her room in punishment for ever having loved such a common person as Steve. Archie presses his suit without avail until he learns from Lucille's lips of the oath she has made never to marry anyone while Steve lives.

Archie then sets out to find Steve. He locates him in Undertaker's Gulch, thirty miles from water and treacherously steals his Thermos bottle, leaving him without any means of getting supplies. Going back to Lucille, he tells her Steve is dead, and shows her the bottle as proof. Steve, however, bethinks himself of a way out of his danger: He pins a message for help on his noble burro and sends it back to the mine for aid.

Lucille gets the message, takes the family hose, connects it to the hydrant and sets out through thirty miles of cactus to take the life-giving water to her sweetheart. Placing the nozzle in the dying miner's mouth, she returns home again to turn on the water.

Meanwhile, Archie has discovered the hose and is about to cut the line. Lucille arrives in time and a struggle ensues. Father, while the fight is raging, finds that Archie held five aces on him the night before and joins the fray, taking sides this time with Lucille. Archie is discomfitted. Lucille turns on the water and Stalwart Steve, thirty miles away in the desert, is revived and returns home to receive Lucille as his bride.

BILLY'S WATERLOO (Santa Barbara).—Everything is going along smoothly until Billy comes along and steals Jack's girl, Betty. Jack is filled with jealousy, but resolves he will show Billy up in his real light: that of a fickle flirt. He induces his sister, a pretty actress, to come to help him out, and she cheerfully agrees to carry out his plans. Billy meets the actress through a flirtation and, not knowing she is Jack's sister, soon falls a victim to her charms.

That night at a ball Betty is entirely neglected while Billy dances with the actress and apparently forgets Betty's existence. Sadly Betty walks out into the garden and there she finds Jack sitting all alone in a dejected attitude. She approaches him timidly and soon everything is forgiven.

Meanwhile, the actress has taken Billy out for a stroll in the garden and has him completely fascinated. He endeavors to kiss her, whereupon she gives him a resounding slap which sends him splashing into a nearby fountain, to the great delight of Jack and Betty, who arrive on the scene. Jack then introduces Betty to his sister, and all three have a good laugh on Billy.

WHEN THE FIDDLER CAME TO BIG HORN (Kriterion—Two Parts).—Jim, a mendicant fiddler, who has tired of accepting the grudging alms of a big city, goes to the West. On his arrival in Big Horn, he asks permission of Mark Lewis, a gambler, to play in a saloon which is frequentel by Lewis and most of the stockmen of the adjacent country. Lewis, who is in a surly mood, refuses the permission and, upon being again approached on the subject, throws Jim violently from the saloon. Dick Asher, who is the big-hearted foreman of the cattle ranch, has just arrived in town and, seeing the fiddler, asks him to play for him and his boys. Jim's music is a treat for the simple cowboys, and they press him to enter the saloon and drink with them. In the saloon, Ben Day, the youthful owner of the ranch, hears him play and directs that he be brought to the ranch. Dick Asher is very much in love with Day's sister, Jessie, as is also Lewis.

Lewis orders his henchman, Pedro, to steal Dick's knife, skin a cow with it and hide it in a semi-conspicuous place, so the blame would be cast on Dick. This is done, and Ben orders Dick away. Jessie, who believes in Dick's innocence, follows him. When she has almost reached the camp shared by Dick and Jim, she is intercepted by Mark Lewis and a party of rustlers. Jim, seeing this from a distance, tells Dick. Jim goes for assistance, while Dick starts out for the rustlers. The rustlers are brought to bay in some rocks. Lewis, now desperate, uses the girl as a shield as he holds the cowboys at bay. Dick, made furious at his sweetheart's plight, starts forward. Lewis takes careful aim, and, just as he shoots, Jim steps in front of Dick and takes the shot meant for his friend. Later, Dick ropes Lewis from behind, and Pedro, who has been fatally wounded, confesses that it was he and not Dick who was the thief. Dick is exonerated and at last the three of them are seen by the side of the poor fiddler, who had given up his life so that his friend might live.

SYD THE ATHLETE (Alhambra).—Jones, a little insignificant man, is jealous of his wife, whom he imagines is infatuated with the boarder, Syd Brown, who is a big, athletic-looking fellow. He finds Syd helping his wife with the family wash and flies into a rage, so decides to move into another neighborhood and, taking a "to let" sign, he tacks it to his house. Just then he receives a telegram from his employer advising him to go to a nearby town on business, and after scolding his wife, Jones leaves. The boarder's wife writes him a letter that she will arrive in town next day. This letter has been left in the Jones' letter box by a mistake of the postman's and Mrs. Jones, noticing it, throws the letter out of the window to Syd. This is observed by Jones, who has returned for some money and, believing his wife is sending love letters to Syd, he leaves in despair, resolving to end his life.

Syd meets his wife the next day and when she sees the "to let" sign on the Jones' house, she persuades him to rent it. This is done and Mrs. Jones takes a room with a neighbor. Syd and his wife then take possession and make themselves at home. They are about to retire, when Jones, who has changed his mind about committing suicide and has taken to drink instead, returns and, finding Syd's clothing all about the place, gets suspicious. He breaks down the bedroom door and finds Syd sitting up in bed, while his wife, thinking there are burglars, has covered up her face with the sheet. Jones takes a couple of shots at Syd and chases him all over the house, until Syd takes refuge in a clothes closet. The neighbors gather in front of the house.

A couple of melancholy undertakers, who have found business slack, happen along and, upon inquiring about the disturbance, are told that there is a murder being enacted inside. This pleases them immensely, and they dash inside and encourage Jones in his good work. Jones decides that his wife shall witness the murder. He goes up to the bedroom and drags the woman out of bed, with her head still covered. Meanwhile Brown tries to escape but is prevented by the undertakers, who see a job in sight. Jones drags the woman into the dining room and commands that the cover be removed from her head so that she may witness the murder of her lover. Just as he is about to shoot Syd, he sees the woman is not his wife and the next moment Mrs. Jones comes in and explains the situation. All shake hands, much to the disgust of the disappointed undertakers.

CY'S TRIUMPH (Punchinello).—Cy is the village runt. He is fondly attached to Mary, the village Belle. This attachment Ethel, Cy's sister, views with approval. But Spud, the bully, picks on Cy who is too small to retaliate. One day, after Cy has been particularly maltreated by Spud, and in consequence, has fallen into Mary's bad graces, Ethel, knowing that pity is akin to love, gets Cy to pretend he is sick, puts him in an invalid chair and begs Mary to come and comfort him. Mary does this, but is spied by Spud, who learns that Cy is faking illness and is really in the best of health. He crawls into Cy's room, ties him in the invalid's chair and rolls him out of the house, sending him off on a mad career down hill. The chair, with the helpless Cy, crashes into a tramp, who is more or less banged up, and Cy, freed at last, takes pity on him and takes him to his house for treatment. There Ethel conceives another scheme to make Cy a hero. At a party she intends giving, Cy is to sing. At a prearranged signal the tramp beforehand placed on a ladder outside of the window, is to enter, cover the marrymakers with a gun and apparently told them up Cy is to come heroically to the rescue. The party comes off; so does the hold-up, and Cy, without any difficulty, after all the men, including Spud, have rushed from the room, overpowers the tramp and throws him out, whereupon Mary naturally falls into Cy's arms, proudly calling him "My hero!"

THE ROMANCE OF AN ACTRESS (Alhambra—Two Parts).—Tom Blair, a violinist, falls in love with Lola Monroe, the leading lady of the dramatic company playing at the theater where Tom leads the orchestra. James, an eccentric actor, is discharged, and, to get even, smashes the glass fire alarm back of the stage and summons the whole fire department, resulting in the show breaking up in the midst of a tensely dramatic scene. Tom rushes up to the stage and tries to reassure the audience, who leave the theater panic-stricken. Seeing Lola has fainted, he goes to her and succeeds in reviving her.

Cleve, the manager of the show, gets a telegram asking him to come to New York and star Lola in a big production. On learning this, Tom joins the company in the capacity of an actor, as he dreads being separated from Lola. He is rehearsed and makes good in his part. Cleve, who is in love with Lola, becomes jealous of Tom and plans to put him out of the way. He goes to the property room and fills the "prop" revolver with genuine bullets. His action, however, is observed by James and when Cleve sees him he warns him to keep his mouth shut, and promises to give him an engagement in his New York production. During the action of the play, Tom is shot and falls to the ground. At first neither actors nor audience realize that it is anything but a bit of clever acting, but on his failure to arise, the curtain is lowered and the audience dismissed. Tom is found to be badly wounded and sent to a hospital. Here, Lola calls to say goodbye and departs to fill her starring engagement.

Tom's letters to Lola are all intercepted by Cleve, and she believes that he has forgotten her. Meanwhile James has made several calls on the manager and demanded "hush" money, threatening to reveal Cleve unless he complies. Tom leaves the hospital and immediately comes to the city. He is unable to make a livelihood by playing the violin, owing to an injury to his arm resulting from the shooting, so applies for a position as "extra man" at a theater. It happens to be in the same play that Lola is starring in and the two meet on the stage and are overjoyed at seeing one another again. Suddenly, a shot is heard, and they rush to see what has happened. James again called on Cleve for money but the enraged manager refused to give him any, and in anger shot him. James, badly wounded, tells those about him that the same man who tried to kill Tom had shot him, and, pointing at the manager, collapses. Cleve is taken away by the police and hurried to prison. Lola and Tom are married and live happily. They have a son and, to the delight of his proud parents, he gives every promise of becoming a great violinist.

A SPANISH MADONNA (Monty—Two Parts.) Bob has a bitter quarrel with his father, who disapproves of his son's ambition to become a painter and accuses him of having taken some money which really was appropriated by Billy, Bob's older brother, so, in a heated moment, despite his mother's entreaties, Bob leaves home. Later, he exchanges clothes with a tramp he meets. The tramp is killed in an accident. Bob's parents are led to believe that their son was the victim and mourn him accordingly.

Bob secures work as a watchman on a dock at night and works at his painting in the afternoons. Meanwhile, Billy has got himself still further in debt and takes a large sum of money from his father and leaves for parts unknown. At an exhibition where Bob's best painting is on view, a girl becomes interested in him and persuades her father to purchase the picture. Bob later advertises for a model and the girl applies for the position, but does not reveal her identity to Bob. Under her influence, he does his best work and by the time the picture is finished, Bob has fallen in love and proposes to the "model." The girl, however, holds him off, she has a desire to help him further with his art and later reveal her identity to him in a manner which she believes will be more pleasing.

Meanwhile Billy has become despondent and is on the verge of self-destruction, but is prevented by Bob, while on his watchman duty on the dock. The brothers recognize each other and Bob induces his brother to go home. The girl has sent a check and order for personal delivery of the painting and Bob starts to deliver the picture to the unknown purchaser. While waiting in the elegant drawing-room, the portieres are parted and before him stands the girl—his model. The next moment they are in each other's arms, and in the midst of their supreme happiness the aged parents are led to the same door by Billy, where, between the fathers, old time friendship is recalled and renewed and all are made happy.

A VOICE FROM THE SEA (Paragon—Two Parts).—Walter Hanford advertises for a companion for his invalid mother. Arnold Roberts, an adventurer, sees the advertisement and, being slightly acquainted with Walter, asks that the position be given a friend of his who is in need of work. Walter goes and Belle Thorne, an accomplice of Arnold's is given the position.

Later, when Arnold plans to enter Walter's home and secure the Hanford jewels, he tells Belle that he will require her assistance. Belle, however, has fallen in love with Walter and refuses to aid in the robbery. Arnold then threatens to tell Walter that Belle was his mistress unless she obeys him. Rather than have this happen, Belle admits Arnold into the home at the appointed time.

Walter discovers Arnold at the robbery, while Belle watches outside. A struggle follows, during which the mask is torn from Arnold's face. He recognizes Arnold just before he receives a blow which knocks him senseless and Arnold escapes with the jewels. Out side, he tells Belle that Walter has been killed, and she flees with him. Walter recovers, but, to save Belle, gives a different account of the robbery to the newspapers, stating that Belle came to his aid, but was carried away by his assailants. Meanwhile, Arnold and Belle, to escape from recognition, go to the seashore, steal a boat, change their clothes and land at a point on the coast, where they allow themselves to be rescued and tell their rescuer that they are the sole survivors of a shipwreck.

Old Ben, their rescuer, takes them to his home and accepts their story. Later, however, a copy of the newspaper giving an account of the robbery falls into his hands. Belle's picture identifies her, and he immediately writes to Walter that both Belle and Arnold are in the village with him. Walter comes to the village but does not make his presence known. Instead, he shadows Belle and Arnold and overhears enough of Belle's talk with Arnold, when she refuses to marry him, to know that she has been forced into the course she follows. Arnold threatens Belle who leaves him. Walter, hiding behind the rocks on the cliff, calls to Arnold and accuses him of the murder. Frightened as Walter appears and, believing him to be a ghost of his victim, Arnold backs over the edge of the cliff and falls into the sea below.

Walter returns to Old Ben's cottage, where he finds Belle, who has gone to Old Ben to make a confession and ask his aid. He and Belle are reunited and together return to the city to Walter's mother.

LOVE'S TRIBUNAL (Trump—Two Parts).—Roger Bramwell, a weak young man, gets mixed up with a set of crooks, and, being hounded by Archer Ambrose, a black-leg, steals some currency which has been entrusted to Carrol Forrester, a law clerk in the office of John Brand. Ambrose's wife, learning of the fleecing of Roger, seeks Evelyn Bramwell, the boy's older sister, and tells her. Evelyn is unwilling to believe evil of her brother, but the excited arrival of Carrol, with whom Evelyn is in love and his demands for Roger's whereabouts, convinces her, so she and Mrs. Ambrose tell where the boy is and Carrol sets out to rescue him and the money.

Meanwhile in Ambrose's apartment in a city hotel, Roger has again been fleeced by Ambrose and a pal of his, Dorran. He leaves in despair and flees from town, knowing that he is a thief, and liable at any moment to suffer arrest and disgrace. Ambrose will not divide with Dorran his ill-gotten spoils, whereupon Dorran, in a passion of anger, strangles him, using a muffler given to Carrol Forrester by Evelyn, which Roger has left in the crook's apartment. Forrester, seeking Roger, arrives shortly after Dorran has killed Ambrose; the result is that Dorran so manipulates affairs that Forrester is arrested for the murder of Ambrose, is tried, convicted and sentenced, the strongest bit of evidence being the muffler which was found about the murdered man's throat and which Evelyn testifies as being Forrester's.

Several years pass. Brand has become governor and seeks Evelyn in marriage, but she is true to the memory of Forrester, whom she believes innocent. Dorran is sent up for wire-tapping and becomes Forrester's cellmate, although the latter does not recognize him nor has he ever known about his being the real cause of his (Forrester's) innocent suffering. In despair of ever gaining his freedom, Forrester listens to Dorran's plans of escape. The two finally make a getaway, but Dorran is shot. Forrester, unwilling to desert him, leads him quite unknowingly, to Evelyn's house. The governor has again sought her hand in marriage, when the visitors are announced. She goes into the room where the two are waiting, followed by the governor and recognition takes place. Evelyn pleads with the governor to pardon Forrester, but he refuses to do so, citing his duty. At last, she offers to marry him if he gives Forrester his freedom, whereupon Brand writes out a pardon, but in the end, he will not hold her to her bargain. Dorran, weak and dying in his final delirium, confesses his part in the murder, thus Forrester is cleared and he and Evelyn are again reunited.

BROKEN VOWS (Two Parts—Trump).—Colonel Rawson and Major Graham are well pleased when their children, Mary Rawson and George Graham, become engaged. While Mary realizes that George loves her dearly, still she is not quite sure of her own feelings, and when Walter Thorndyke, Captain, U. S. A., home from a campaign in the Philippines, comes to visit George, Mary, first moved to sympathy by his weakened condition and later to admiration of the calling he represents, almost unconsciously falls under the sway of the young captain. Mutual interest soon ripens into love, and on an occasion when Mary and Walter are out riding and Mary is thrown from her horse, Walter forgets himself so far as to caress the half-conscious girl with lover-like fervor. Full awakening of their love and their treacherous behavior dawns upon them and Walter decides to leave. He tells George of his decision to go away, and he is at first reluctant to let his friend leave, but, as he insists, he allows him to cut short his visit, and bids him say goodbye to Mary. For the last time, the lovers are left alone and the girl, who has been reading Paolo and Francesca, is moved by the tragic poem and with the coming of Thorndyke, abandons herself to him.

While George is in his den, thinking of Mary and the approaching wedding day, Mary comes to him and confesses her love for Walter, appealing to George to set her free. George, learning that his best friend has betrayed his trust, determines to kill him but Mary pleads for his life. Walter has had a struggle with himself and at last summoned up sufficient courage to tell George of his love for Mary and arrives at the den shortly after Mary. George bides the girl, listens to Walter's confession, brands him as a traitor, then exacts a promise from him to marry and guard Mary. Mary is brought forth, George places her hand in Walter's and bids them go, forgiving Mary but ever relentless to his friend.

The Minusa Guarantee • • •

¶ The other day we saw a statement which becomes more important and impressive as one thinks about it. The only valuable guarantee is the one that is wholly unnecessary. Everyone readily calls to mind firms and products of such established reputation and standing that their mere name is sufficient guarantee--to ask them for a guarantee would be asking them to "Gild Refined Gold." Such firms never sell guarantees, and never offer so to do.

¶ Yet the business world is full of the Claque and Clamor of concerns whose loudest argument is a "Guarantee." They do not seem to see that the very offer of a "Guarantee" is a confession that their names and reputations are not sufficient alone to secure the buyer's confidence. For this reason a "Guarantee" is a warning to the buyer--the "stronger" the guarantee, the greater the necessity for it, and the louder the warning.

¶ The makers of the MINUSA Gold Fibre Screen know a "Guarantee" would be unnecessary--we sell motion picture screens, not promises. Every one of the thousands of Gold Fibre Screens built by the "Anderson Method" during the past eight years have made good in actual use. This, we know, makes guarantee on future Gold Fibre Screens unnecessary. A thousand copper riveted guarantees would not make a screen right if it were not properly designed, built, and the process perfected.

¶ We will agree to show a satisfied user of a Gold Fibre Screen built by the "Anderson Method" within an hour's ride from you. After all, isn't that the most satisfactory reference in the world?

BILLY CONVINCING FATHER (Santa Barbara).—Father wishes Fanny to marry a rich old banker, but she prefers Billy, a handsome young doctor, of whom father disapproves. Billy calls on Fanny and when the choleric father interrupts, Fanny pretends illness. Scoffing at Billy's medical knowledge, father telephones for the reliable old family doctor. When the old physician calls, he agrees to help the lovers and Fanny is quickly cured (?). Pleased with her rapid recovery, father remarks that when he can be convinced that Billy is as good a doctor as the family physician, he will consent to his marriage to Fanny.

The old doctor suggests to Billy that father be made ill through "mental suggestion." Fanny has a conference with the kitchen staff. Father has been feeling unusually trim and athletic, but when his servants ask him whether he is sick and suggest calling a doctor, their comments soon take effect and he imagines he is really sick. The old doctor is summoned and tells father nothing is wrong with him, but gives him a powder, which really makes father pretty sick for a short time. Father angrily orders the "old-fool doctor put out" and a regular doctor called in. Here is Billy's chance. He goes to his laboratory and mixes a wonderful "convincer pill," composed mainly of cheese, as large as a golf ball. He runs an electric vibrator down father's back and then forces the "pill" down his throat. By this time the effects of the powder has worn out, and father feels himself again. Father is now thoroughly convinced of Billy's wonderful skill and readily consents to his marrying Fanny.

THE GREATER POWER (Two Parts—Santa Barbara).—A young medical man who has made a specialty of aphasia cases breaks down from overwork. He is ordered on a vacation which he takes in a small fishing village, where the malady he has treated in others overtakes him.

He is rescued from a perilous position by the daughter of the light-house keeper. She and her father take the unconscious man to the shelter of the light house. Here he recovers his physical attributes but his mind has become a blank. Around the light-house keeper and his daughter, there is woven a story of a little girl supposedly drowned, but in effect living with the chief of a band of gypsies. This man has broken away from the tribe, and has offices in the doctor's home city, where he practices the art of fortune telling. The light-house keeper's daughter, under the name of Zara, believes that the gypsy is her father and she has studied under him the mystic arts and really possesses hypnotic power.

The doctor and the girl of the light house become engaged, but the course of their true love is interrupted by the recovery of the doctor's memory. He returns to his old life, oblivious of his experiences at the light house and back in his home town he meets the twin sister of the light-house keeper's daughter, and they fall in love with each other, but Zara, jealous of her lover's past, places him in a hypnotic condition and under this influence, he tells her the story of the light house.

An old gypsy crone, one Ogar, quarrels with the professor and betrays the identity of Zara. The doctor's heart goes out to the girl he left behind him as does the heart of Zara for the father left in the lonely light house. The two young lovers sail into the sea of summer and the lost child is last seen clasped in the arms of the rejoicing father.

THE STOLEN INVENTION (Two Parts—Monty).—After spending his last dollar on his invention, John Newcombe takes the finished model to the Morgan Engineering Company for a test. After the inventor has gone, Morgan and his secretary examine the motor and find it contains excellent features. They conspire to steal the invention, and a few days later Newcombe receives a letter telling him that the motor is impractical, and Morgan is unable to use it. The shock of disappointment results in the inventor's death. Later, the motor is put on the market by Morgan and he receives large orders for it. Mary Newcombe, the inventor's daughter, is now obliged to seek employment to support herself and mother. She gets a position in a large dressmaking establishment, and there meets Bob Madison. He takes her home from work every evening, and they soon fall in love. Mrs. Newcombe tells Bob about her husband's sad death and shows him the letters from Morgan. Bob resolves to help them.

It happens that Morgan is financially interested in the concern where Mary and Bob are working and becomes interested in Mary. Through his influence, she is promoted to a position of model in the showroom, and Bob is fired. Mary resents Morgan's attentions and he gets in touch with an actress and tells her of a plan in which he needs her co-operation. The next day the actress calls at the showroom, has several gowns displayed and, on seeing Mary, pretends to be greatly affected by her resemblance to her departed sister. She prevails on the manager to allow Mary to accompany her on a trip to Europe, to assist with her wardrobe, and insists that Mary call on her that evening.

When Mary calls, the actress gives her several presents and induces her to drink some wine, which Mary refuses. At last, the actress shows Mary to her room and bids her goodnight. Later, she cautiously opens the door and is greatly moved by the sight of the girl on her knees, saying her prayers, and then and there resolves to protect her. When Morgan calls in a drunken stupor, she puts him out at the point of a revolver. The next morning she gently awakens the girl and tells her she has changed her mind about going away, and personally takes her home.

Meanwhile Morgan and his secretary have had several more drinks, and run into Madison, when a fight ensues. Madison is thrown to the ground by Morgan, who leaves him lying senseless on the sidewalk. Morgan and his secretary then separate, and Morgan jumps into an automobile, the chauffeur being out of sight—and starts the machine at a terrific speed. The next morning his body is found under the wrecked car. Madison has recovered when he meets the drunken secretary, who hands him a bunch of money, bidding him take it, as "it is only hush money given him by a geezer who stole somebody's invention—" Here is the witness that Bob has been looking for, and with the evidence in hand, he succeeds in winning the case of the stolen invention for Mary and her mother, who are now made prosperous as a result.

LIGHT-FINGERED SYD (Alhambra).—Sargent gives his wife some money to buy their daughter a birthday present, and she starts out to a jewelry store. The daughter has had a quarrel with her sweetheart in the park and runs away from him. Syd watches Mrs. Sargent enter the jewelry store and trails her after she comes out. Later, he cops the gold bracelet she has bought for her daughter and beats it. She gets hysterical and comes upon her daughter's sweetheart, who takes her home.

Syd meets the daughter in the park and falls for her. He gives her the bracelet and she invites him to take her home. He does. In the hallway she bids him wait, while she will bring her folks to meet him. Mother immediately recognizes the bracelet and also the crook. She hands two big bats out of the window to her husband and the boy, who wait for Syd to come out. The things which happen to Syd after that are hot, fast and furious and he is finally cornered and given a good beating. The boy gets back his sweetheart and every one is happy again.

THE HAWK AND THE HERMIT (Two-Parts—Paragon).—Bob Shaw and his wife, Kate proprietors of a small general store in a mining town, are very much annoyed by the attentions to Kate of the "Hawk," a notorious town character. Bob ejects the Hawk from the store and earns his enmity as well as that of Steve, the Hawk's pal. However, he gains a friend in Old John, a goodnatured prospector, nicknamed "The Hermit," whose only fault is an occasional spree. During a second encounter, between Bob and the Hawk wherein the Hawk comes out second best, he leaves vowing vengeance. That night Bob's store is burned to the ground. The next morning, Kate and Bob take refuge in a neighbor's house.

The Hermit arrives at the camp saloon with word of his lucky strike and inquires for Bob. Learning where Bob is, he goes in search of him without giving information to anyone as to the location of the claim, explaining that he cannot act without Bob who is entitled to half-share in the find. Steve and the Hawk follow him to the cabin and see him give the diagram of the location to Bob. They withdraw and lay plans to get hold of the drawing. Meanwhile, Bob gives the diagram to Kate for safekeeping. Steve watches the cabin until the Hermit and Bob leave. The Hawk accosts Bob in the street and picks a quarrel with him. A fight ensues, and the Hawk's gun is discharged and he falls to the ground, apparently dead.

Steve rushes back to the bar, tells the boys that Bob has shot and killed the Hawk while he was unarmed and gets them worked up to such a pitch that they go in search of Bob whom they capture and take away to lynch. The Hermit returns to tell Kate the news while Steve returns to the Hawk whom he takes to a safe hiding place, where he quickly "recovers." Steve then rejoins the lynching gang who have taken Bob to the woods, the Hawk following.

Kate and the Hermit seek the sheriff, but he is away. Kate leaves the Hermit on guard and goes to find Bob. They are about to hang Bob when Steve suggests that they pardon him if he gives them the location of the claim. Bob denies having the diagram and is subjected to abuse and illtreatment. On her way to the lynching scene, Kate is seen by the Hawk who tries to stop her. After a struggle, she breaks away and rushes to where Bob is. She offers the diagram which they accept and insist on taking both Bob and Kate with them to the claim.

Meanwhile the sheriff has arrived and he and his deupties accompanied by the Hermit start for the mine. They meet Steve's gang with Bob and Kate captive on their way and a fight follows. The Hawk, trailing the bunch, watches the battle from the side of the road. Seeing Kate endeavoring to free Bob, he draws his gun and is about to fire, when Steve receives a mortal wound. Dropping his revolver as he falls, the gun is discharged as it strikes the ground and the Hawk receives the bullet. The sheriff's party soon rout the remainder of Steve's gang and Bob and Kate are freed. With Old John, the Hermit, they proceed to their claim.

TAMING FATHER (Thistle). — Despite mother's protests, father is obstinate and refuses to allow Rena to marry Fred. Instead, he orders Fred from the place with a threat that he will regret it if he ever returns again. At the office, father attempts a familiarity with his stenographer, and she leaves, angrily. The next day he puts an advertisement in the paper for another one. The paper containing the advertisement falls into Rena's hands, and she calls up Fred at the motion picture studio where he is employed and suggests a plot, whereby they can gain father's consent.

Fred disguises himself and applies for the position in father's office. Father "falls hard" for him and engages him on the spot. Later, he invites his new "stenographer" out to dinner at a cafe in the city. Fred's chum works the old badger game, entering while father is having the time of his life, and accuses him of being a home-breaker and stealing his wife. A few shots and father makes a hasty exit, beating it directly for his home. Rena is there waiting for him and when father arrives with Fred's chum in pursuit, and most of the habitues of the cafe following, Rena makes him promise his consent to her marriage with Fred before she will intercede with the angry mob and save him.

AN AMATEUR BURGLAR (Punchinello).—Because Mr. Jones is unable to come home at a reasonable hour, Mrs. Jones takes away his latchkey. He does not reform, however, and after an evening spent at his club, he wanders around and at last turns towards his happy home, a little unsteady on his feet, due to too many "bracers." At the club, Davis ridicules the police and makes a wager that he can rob a house and not be caught. His wager is taken up and he goes home to his apartment to get ready, and there finds a real-live burglar. He takes the man's outer garments away, dons them himself and after locking the burglar up in a room, starts out in search of a suitable house to "rob." He comes across the Jones' house and with a skeleton key, endeavors to opens the door. Jones who sees him, thinks he is at the wrong house, and staggers over to a neighbor's house, which he mistakes for his own. Not having any key, he tries to get in through a window. By this time Davis' real burglar has escaped and run foul of the police.

Mrs. Jones, who has been sitting up waiting for Jones, hears a sound and as Davis creeps in, hits him over the head with her rolling-pin. Discovering her mistake, she phones the police, telling them she has captured a burglar in her house. The Browns, next door, have been awakened by Jones' efforts to get in through the window and also summon help. As a result, when Jones and Davis finally make their escape, they meet with a bang and before they can make a getaway the real burglar, pursued by the police, came sprawling on top of them. The policemen arrive and in the excitement the burglar steals away, enters the Jones' house, gathers up some silver and "beats it."

Davis is taken away by a policeman, while Jones is yanked into the house by his irate wife. Suddenly they discover the place has been robbed and rush to the police station to report their loss. Davis succeeds in breaking away from the policeman, and runs into the burglar, carrying the loot away from the Joneses. He takes the silver away from him and rushes back to the club, and there claims he has won the bet. The clubfellows are incredulous, however, and send one of their number to the police station for verification. When the man arrives, he finds the Joneses there lamenting their stolen property. Upon displaying the silver, the Joneses cry aloud for joy, embrace him and leave, happy in the recovery of their property. The clubman phones his club and tells them Davis has lost, whereupon he is obliged to "cash in."

THE POWER OF PRAYER (Two Parts—Alhambra).—Dan Ashton, a middle class farmer, finds that his farm is not paying expenses and, seeing in a newspaper that gold is being found out west, decides to mortgage his farm and try his luck at gold digging. His daughter is beloved by a young bank clerk and also the village money lender, with whom her father has negotiated the loan. In the west, Ashton falls into the clutches of two rascals who sell him a worthless mine.

In the meantime, his daughter is pursued by the money lender who says if she will consent to marry him, he will tear up the mortgage. The young bank clerk finds that he has not enough money himself to loan his sweetheart and her mother, therefore, is tempted to use the bank's funds. He is saved from possible crime by an old maid who is very fond of him and who sees him about to take the money. She advances the money herself and the claims of the money lender are satisfied.

Meanwhile, father has fallen into evil ways out west and taken to drink. His daughter prays for him and during a prayer, her spirit flies to him and leads him in a dream out to the abandoned mine which he had bought. She urges him to dig deeper with the result that he finds gold. The money lender accuses the young clerk of using the bank's money, but when they examine the books, they find them to be O. K. The father returns home rich, pays the old maid back the money she loaned and the young people are betrothed.

UNITED FILM SERVICE.

RETRIEVING THE PAST (Ideal—Two Parts—Mar. 15).—Richard Francis, cashier of the Security Bank, sat alone, long after business hours, in his cage, the rays of the electric light above his head forming the sole spot of light in all the pitchy blackness that surrounded him. Frowns of perplexity and wrath played alternately on his forehead as he gazed on a note held in his hand. The note was a confession of attempted misuse of the bank's funds which the banker's son left with the old cashier to convey to his father on the next morning, and the banker's son was the man to whom the cashier's daughter had given her heart. Francis pocketed the note and took it home. The next noon, when Harry Morrell, son of the president of the bank, saw his father at luncheon he discovered that the note had not been delivered. He could not bring himself to the point of confessing his guilt. Gambling and carousing—these had been the causes of his financial transgression. He rushed to the bank to learn from his prospective father-in-law that the note had not been delivered—that he had taken it home by mistake and left it there. The cashier desired to see Morrell at his home. In his mind he had a scheme to assist the young man to remove the blemish from his name. Morrell, not waiting to answer, dashed out of the bank and made for the Francis home. Entering softly, he made his way to the library undetected and began feverishly to ransack the desk. In the midst of search he heard a step. In a jiffy he had the tell-tale note in his hand and started to rush from the room. It was Mabel, his intended, who blocked his way. Not waiting to explain and wishing to impress on her his unworthiness in a decisive manner, he knocked her brutally to the floor and fled. The cashier, alarmed by the young man's state of mind while in the bank, hurried home to find his daughter unconscious. He telephoned this bit of news to the Francis home, where the butler gave it to the younger Morrell as he entered. His father entered shortly after and Harry, unnerved by his act of desperation in felling Mabel, confessed all. The banker laid his hands on his son's shoulders. "You have wronged the girl more than me. Ask her forgiveness and make amends, and then come to me. I have lost my boy but have gained a man for a son." And Mabel, receiving the penance of Harry later, felt that the one who had wooed and had struck her to prevent his one unworthy act to come to her knowledge was worthy to be her husband.

LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET (Superba—March 16).—Mrs. Talboys orders a new hat for $149, adorned with beautiful feathers. She tries it on and then goes in to show it to her husband, who almost goes frantic when he hears the fabulous price has has to pay for it. Mrs. Talboys decides to go out for a walk through the estate near her home. This estate is the property of Sir Michael McGlug, who is very fond of hunting. Mrs. Talboys stoops down behind some shrubbery and at the same time Sir Michael McGlug alights from his automobile, and thinking the feathers on Mrs. Talboys' hat are the feathers of a mocking bird, he shoots at her. Mrs. Talboys, overcome by the shock, almost faints, and Sir Michael and his valet help her into the machine. He brings her to his home and immediately they fall in love with each other. Mr. Talboys reads of the incident of the shooting and, believing his wife is dead, he leaves the old home. Mrs. Talboys returns, only to find that her husband is gone. Believing he has deserted her, she consents to marry Sir Michael. A friend of Talboys visits him and Talboys tells him his tale of woe, showing him his wife's photograph. The friend next visits Sir Michael and recognizes Lady Audley. He rushes to Talboys' home and tells him of his discovery.

WITH A GIRL AT STAKE (Premier—March 16).—Lillian and her father, a forty-niner, who drives the old stage coach, assist the former's son, a deputy marshal, to arrest Jose, a renegade Mexican. Jose later escapes. The old father is just mounting the stage when he drops to the ground with a bullet wound. Jose appears and tells Lillian that his chance for revenge has arrived. He ties her on top of the stage and then starts the horses going madly. The runaway stage is fast approaching a broken bridge when Lillian manages to free herself and jumps into the arms of one of the cowboys, who had galloped madly to head off the runaway. A minute later the stage tumbles over the high embankment. The deputy sheriff clambers on a speeding freight train in pursuit of the fugitive and grapples with him. Losing his balance, the Mexican falls to his death in the river below.

THE VERDICT (Grandin—Two Parts—March 17).—A synopsis of this picture was published on page 1052 of the issue dated Feb. 13.

I'M CRAZY TO BE MARRIED (Starlight—March 18).—Two old maids live alone. One is simply crazy to get married. Their father has died and left his wealth about the house. They search for it tirelessly. The older places an advertisement in the newspaper for a husband, a dimple being a condition to acceptance. An old fellow who lives next door is in love with her. She objects to him because he has no dimple. This angers him. A young Portuguese nobleman seeks her hand. The old fellow next door accuses him of being a crook. He is thrown from the old maid's house. In revenge he has a bomb placed in the old maid's house. The house is blown completely to pieces. The great treasure is revealed. The Portuguese, thinking fast, says he did it to reveal the treasure. He is accepted. The unsuccessful rival goes in search of an anarchist to have him apply house-wrecking measures on his own person.

YE GODS, WHAT A CAST! (Luna—March 18).—The opening scenes of this novel picture take place in the restricted quarters of the Hard Luck Film Company, where the producer has engaged people for his picture. Being financially tight, the director notifies his leading man that he will not only have to play the leading part but all the different characters as well, five in number. In the little play which follows the leading man assumes the role of the villain of the piece, an accomplice to the villain, a policeman, the girl's father, and also Rev. Fiddle, D.D., a minister of the gospel. The story tells of the love of Jules Jenkins for pretty Nellie Jones, an innocent country girl. The girl has been hounded by Felia Devillo, a deep-dyed villain, who is endeavoring to lure her away to the city. Devillo, finding he has a rival in the person of Jenkins, with the aid of Snoopy Mike, Devillo's accomplice, entraps him and places a bomb in the barn where he is prisoner. An opportunity to kidnap the girl eventually arrives and Devillo drags her to the park lake, where he threatens to drown her if she does not accept him. Jenkins escapes from the barn in the nick of time and saves the girl. Jenkins settles with the villain and the two happy young people hasten to the girl's home and tell the father of their engagement. He refuses to permit the marriage, so they elope to the preacher's, where they are married just as father storms up the steps. He finally grants them his blessing and the happy lovers embrace. Here the picture fades out and the picture actors are shown returning to the film company's office, all of them nearly dead with fatigue from the strenuous day's work. Their reward is an I. O. U. on the film company for $1.50 apiece.

WITH DADDY'S AID (Luna—On same reel as foregoing).—The new clerk meets Carol in the park, not knowing she is the daughter of his employer. He falls in love with her and they soon arrive at a mutual understanding where a consultation with the parents as to wedlock becomes necessary. Mother is at home when they arrive and promptly rejects the young man, who returns desolately to the office the next morning and in the course of his duties seeks advice from his employer. He is told to marry the girl first and then tell the parents about it afterward, and he loans him money to carry out this formula, making reservation as to this general rule as regards his daughter, Carol. Arrived at home that evening, the father answers the doorbell, to be confronted by the new clerk and his daughter Carol, who have come for parental blessing. "I have accepted your advice," says the clerk, who now for the first time learns the identity of his father-in-law. "We have married first and now come to ask consent, forgiveness and blessings." Father relents, as well as mother, and all ends pleasantly.

COURTING TROUBLE (Empress—March 19).—Brown and Green, lawyers, advertise for a stenographer. Many apply, one of whom completely captivates them. She is immediately employed and given a desk beside Agatha, the old hatchet-faced retainer, who has been their only employee for years. In their efforts to win favor in Edith's eyes, Brown and Green do many foolish things. Their notes, flowers and candy offerings get badly twisted, causing untold confusion. Finally Green evolves a brilliant scheme. He changes the desks of the two stenographers. Brown places his candy, with an invitation to the matinee, on Agatha's desk. Trouble for Brown to the intense enjoyment of Green. Brown, however, finds a way out of it, by turning the tables on Green. It might have been all right had not their wives decided to lunch downtown and inadvertently strolled into the very same cafe where Brown and Green were entertaining their stenographers.

THE HOUSE ON "E" STREET (Regent—Two Parts—March 20).—It was some diabolical intuition which prompted Bert Wesley to place surreptitiously in his pocket the revolver of Paul Drake, a brother of Irene, whom he had wooed unsuccessfully. All this happened previously to one of those occasional slumming expeditions which one ventures on in search of the unusual, the party being comprised of himself, Irene, her brother and Frank Stanley, the successful seeker of Irene's hand. Wesley had taken the revolver from Drake's dresser and this fact he recalled as he saw an intoxicated man repulse the attempts of servants to put him out of the gambling den. His mind working fast, he sent a note and the revolver, carefully wrapped, to a gunman, whome he knew well and had power to command, the note stating that he was to come to the place to remove the obstreperous guest. It was left to the gunman to place interpretation on the sending of the gun that he wished. When the gunman arrived and grappled with the stranger he found strong resistance. He leveled his gun, shot the guest and made his escape. The pistol was found on the floor next to the dead man and was soon proven to belong to Paul, who was forthwith arrested for murder. Irene, prostrated over this news, received a note from Wesley shortly thereafter assuring her that he knew how to bring about the exoneration of her brother, but that he would not make a move in that direction unless she broke her engagecent to Stanley and listened to his protestations of love. Irene very wisely turned this missive over to the district attorney, who soon learned that Brown, known to be impoverished, had suddenly become affluent, and also learned that Wesley had been corresponding with Brown prior to the tragedy. The circumstance of the revolver in the meantime weighed so strongly with the jury that they returned a verdict of guilty after short deliberation.

Desperate to establish the innocence of Paul, who he felt certain to be without blame, the district attorney suddenly wheeled upon Wesley, who was sitting among the spectators, and, pointing directly at him, shouted, "You are the murderer." Wesley, taken off guard, jumped to his feet with a scream and made for the door of the courtroom. Finding the door barred by the court attendants, Wesley made a mad leap for the freight elevator. Blind in his fright and desire to escape, he did not note that the elevator was at the bottom of the shaft. Down he plunged head first, landing a mangled mass at the bottom. Impelled by further evidence unearthed, the district attorney and a party of detectives left in a motor to locate Brown, who it was now evident was the real murderer. Brown, having received warning, fled in a machine, a flight which ended as disastrously as had Wesley's, for the machine, veering sharply, plunged over the edge of the Palisades.

MARRIED IN DISGUISE (United—March 21).—Joe and Jack, ranch hands, are madly in love with Jennie, the ranchman's daughter, who finds little to her liking in the latter. However, to test the depth of Joe's feelings, she allows Jack to gain a margin over Joe's advances, cultivating his society to an extent that makes Joe furious with jealousy. Jennie is glad to notice these symptoms and is about to reward Joe by accepting him as her accredited sweetheart, when Jack makes it plain that he has no intention of allowing her affections, simulated though they were, to lag. Joe, on the other hand, seeks advice of the padre, who has learned that Jack intends to hold Jennie to promise to marry him, given in fun. He is perplexed, but sees a solution of the difficulties, and Joe, acting on his suggestion, dresses himself in the manner of Jack, applying various deft touches of cosmetic to his face—in short, making himself appear the very image of his rival. In this disguise he goes to Jennie, timing his visit so as to reach her side just before Jack comes to take her to the altar. He leads her off in triumph to the little church and there the padre marries them, seemingly by mistake pronouncing the bridegroom's name as Joe. Before the disconsolate Jennie can call his attention to his seeming breach of memory, she begins to penetrate the disguise of her husband-in-the-making, and, with a joyful cry, throws herself into his arms as he obliterates all trace of deception from his face with his big bandana.

THEIR DELAYED HONEYMOON (Ideal—Two Parts—March 22).—Josette, the pet of mamma and papa, was engaged to be married to Joe Jackson. The engagement proceeded exquisitely until one day during tea at Josette's there came a telegram. The telegram was from his father, stating that Joe must acquaint himself thoroughly with the business routine of the family's chain of warehouses all over the world before he could marry and become one of the family business heads. The firm was large and it would take him at least a year to accomplish the task. Mamma and papa as well as Andre Ternay, Josette's godfather, a jolly bachelor, were all at the party. Consternation reigned. Amidst tears, Joe left Josette to embark on his tour of the family warehouses.

Then another startling bit of news was later received. Josette's Aunt Amelia, who was very wealthy, died, and her will revealed the fact that her wealth went to Josette if she married during her eighteenth year and no later. Josette was just eighteen. By the time Joe Jackson would return from his tour of inspection she would be nineteen. It was on the night that Andre was having a very informal and decidedly Bohemian dinner at his bachelor apartments that Josette, who had been sitting with her mama and papa in the living room of their home, leaped suddenly to her feet, her face all smiles again after a week of gloom.

"I have it!" she cried impetuously.

"Have what?" demanded her mama, disturbed in the reading of a delicious scandal on the front page of the evening paper.

"I'll let you know. I must go to Andre Ternay's at once!"

From this point complications set in which make this comedy-drama an unusual mixture of laughter and tears.

SUCH A PICNIC (Superba—March 23).—Charlie and Joe meet. Charlie sees Vivian on another corner and immediately leaves Joe without even an apology. Joe sees Vivian and decides he would like to be one of her acquaintances, so he goes over to Charlie, who, of course, has to give him an introduction to Vivian much to his sorrow. Charlie is then pushed into the background and Joe has the "floor," for Vivian gives Charlie all of her attention. After Joe leaves, Charlie meets his handsome friend Ned, and is forced to introduce him to Vivian. Charlie is again considered a "back number," and, though he tries innumerable times to talk to Vivian, it is all in vain. They arrive at Vivian's home and, not being invited to stay in the parlor with Ned and Vivian, Charlie goes in search of the maid. He compels her to write two letters, one to Joe and the other to Ned, stating that Vivian will meet them at a certain part of the park at three o'clock. The boys get the note and start out for the trysting place. Meanwhile Vivian and Charlie go off for a picnic. All goes well until the two boys discover that they are both waiting for Vivian and that a joke has been played on them. They go in search of Charlie and when they find him comedy situations develop in rapid succession.

TARGET PRACTICE (On Same Reel As Foregoing—Superba—March 23).—Eddie visits Mae. While she is entertaining him, Bert, another beau, enters. Both are enraged with jealousy and come to the conclusion that the only way to calm themselves is to fight a duel with pistols and which ever one lives through the combat will be the winner of Mae's hand. The fight starts and is continued over tables, behind chairs, and with bullets flying in all directions. A few go flying into Mary and John's room and Mary, becoming indignant and furious after her mirror is broken, wall paper torn and holes made in the walls and floor, goes in and revenges herself upon the two men, finally assisted by a few cops. A month later, Eddie and Bert, well bandaged, call at Mae's home at the same time. They are ushered into the parlor and Mae soon joins them, bringing with her a handsome stranger. Eddie and Bert all but collapse when he is introduced to them as Mae's husband.

THE DEPUTY'S REWARD (Premier—March 23).—Fred, a young westerner, gains the promise from his sweetheart that when he obtains a position she will marry him. He sets out happily on his way to the country store. While on the road he is suddenly deputized by the sheriff (who has just received an urgent call from the neighboring town to hunt for an escaped convict who is headed that way) and pressed into service. While hunting the convict in the woods, he comes upon his sweetheart picking flowers. He gives her his knife to make her task easier and goes on with his duty. In the evening, the hunt having proved unsuccessful, Fred returns to the sheriff's office and gives up the badge. His good work wins for him a position as deputy sheriff in the neighboring town.

As time goes on Olga meets the stranger—Hal—and is completely fascinated by his charming ways. He induces her to leave her home and elope with him. The parents find her little note which says, "I have gone to marry the man I love," and think that she has gone to Fred. A week later finds the girl disillusioned and without a wedding ring. Her allurer comes into the room after a debauch, in which he lost all his money at cards, and forces his attentions upon her. A fearful struggle ensues and in a moment of desperation, she grasps the knife within her reach and kills him. Finding the door locked and no way of escape, she calls for help from the window. Fred, who is passing by, hears the calls and rushes to her aid. He breaks in the door and the recognition follows. People in the hotel, alarmed at the crash of wood, rush into the room at this moment, and see Fred leaning over the body. The sheriff is sent for and Fred, to shield the girl, admits that it was his knife that killed the man. Suddenly the sheriff starts and leaning over the body, takes a paper from his pocket, and from the description thereon, discovers that the dead man is the escaped convict, upon who's head is a reward of $2,000 dead or alive.

Fred is congratulated, and a few days later finds them at the gate of the old home, man and wife.

WHEELED INTO MATRIMONY (Luna—March 25).—After a strenuous social season, Dotty and her father take refuge in a sanitarium, Dotty with shattered nerves, her father suffering with the gout. Dr. Lee, the head of the rest cure, prescribes the same treatment for both: Complete rest and plenty of fresh air. Installed in wheel chairs, the old man and his daughter find plenty of recreation in the beautiful grounds of the sanitarium. Now it happens that Raymond Wright, a wealthy young man, living near the sanitarium, has seen Dotty and has made every effort to make her acquaintance, but with little luck. One day Dotty is wheeled outside the sanitarium grounds and Raymond speaks to her. She makes it apparent that she admires him and Raymond is elated. However his budding courtship is threatened with early disaster when he inadvertently collides with Dotty's father's gouty foot and thus incurs the ire of this important personage. Father makes it very plain that there is little chance for Raymond to win the girl, and the young fellow rakes his brain for a solution of how to continue.

Suddenly it occurs to him that should he in some way contract some ailment and thus gain entrance to the sanitarium he would stand a chance to see the girl oftener and thus prosecute his love affair. He decides on heart failure and with the aid of two children, who have grown fond of Dotty, he applies to the doctor for treatment. By means of a patent stethoscope the doctor soon finds that Raymond is shamming and orders him out of the hospital. However at the opportune moment in steps Miss Dotty and the doctor notes a peculiar action on the part of the stethoscope. Where it registered normal at the first examination, it is now kicking up in a manner which causes the doctor grave concern. He immediately orders Raymond to a bedroom where he insists on putting him to bed. However, Raymond, after quite an argument, gets the doctor to consent to a wheel chair and a few moments later the amazed, but still delighted, Dorothy finds her newly-acquired beau at her side. There is another guest at the sanitarium who is also surprised, that is Dotty's father.

Quite some time now elapses. Dotty and Raymond have become quite fond of each other and Raymond is ripe to pop the question at any moment. However the inevitable quarrel takes place and it is only through the aid of the children that they are brought together again and, confident of no sanction from Dotty's father, they plan an elopement. Through a clever trick on the part of the children the two lovers elude the old people and race off to the minister's. They are not a moment too soon, for father is soon on their trail and arrives just as the preacher is naming them man and wife. However seeing it is too late, he eventually gives them his blessing and the two young people, now feeling quite physically fit, desert their wheel chairs and hand in hand make their way back to the hospital.

ACH LOUIE (Starlight—March 25).—Two Germans are traveling in Cuba. One saves the life of a wealthy Cuban who gives the German the hand of his daughter. She has already been married. Her young husband threatens to pursue the German over the world and kill him. Later, the old Cuban sends his lawyer, who resembles the young husband, to New York to find the German to give him $100,000.

The two Germans think the fellow with the money is the one who has come to kill. Consequently they have a fearful time keeping away from the man who is trying to give them the money—the two men who look so alike, coming and going. The German's great confusion and fear forms the foundation for laughable situations.

A DOUBLE DECEPTION (Empress—March 26).—Marian and Joe, due to parental objection decide to elope. Father has planned for just such an eventuality by hiring a private detective to watch them, thus the elopement is frustrated. Joe returns home and the need of a postage stamp takes him to the postoffice, where he sees Dot and Bill, who resemble Marian and himself to perfection. He calls upon Marian, explains his plan to which she readily acquiesces and also gets Dot's and Bill's sanction. Marian and Joe go to the postoffice where Marian gives Dot her coat and hat and returning to Marian's house with Joe, Dot does not arouse the detective's suspicions. Joe returns to the postoffice, gives Bill his hat and coat and then Bill returns to Marian's house. The detective believes it is Joe returning. Father returns home, sees the detective, who advises him they are safe inside. Father believing he sees Marian and Joe in the library, thinks all is well. Meantime Marian and Joe, having been married, return home much to the damage of the detective's feelings and dignity after father sees them come in. Matters are cleverly untangled, and the newlyweds receive the parental blessing.

THE WHITE TRAIL (Lariat—Two Parts—March 27).—Old man Wagner, the driver of the Wells Fargo stage between Wells and Rose City, was found one winter afternoon, lying across the seat of the stage dead, with a rifle bullet in his brain. The cowboys who found him drove the stage to Rose City and brought the old man's body back to his home, where his daughter, Ruth, who was all that remained of his family, received it. With her, was the sheriff of Rose County, who was courting Ruth. She had accepted her the week before and when the sheriff saw the body of his "father-in-law-to-be," and found that he had been shot by a cowardly assailant from behind, he kissed Ruth good bye, and started to hunt the murderer.

There had been in Rose City a young man named Luck Schrade, who had been the sheriff's rival for Ruth's hand, and had taken his defeat illy, even though one of the other girls of the village loved him dearly and wanted him much more than, perhaps, he ever really wanted Ruth. She was an attractive girl, too, and daughter of the man who ran the Rose City general store. This young man was in the store when the gold, which had been left there over night for old man Wagner to take to Wells in the morning, was deposited there, pending its journey to the railroad. The gold was, of course, missing when Wagner's body was found, and the express company immediately offered $2,000 reward for the capture of the highwaymen, dead or alive.

It was with the thought of the murderer of Ruth's father in his mind, not of the reward, however, with which the sheriff set out after the marauders, on the same day that Ruth, without telling him, decided to take her father's place on the stage and drive another consignment of gold to the railroad herself. He became separated from his deputies, in the course of his following of the highwaymen's horses' hoofs, the prints of which were rapidly becoming more and more indistinct as the result of the wind, and it was near evening that he suddenly came upon the deserted hut of a one-time prospector hidden below a shoulder of the foothills. From the shack, to his surprise he saw smoke rising. He tethered his horse and cautiously approached on foot. As he reached the window and peered through it, he saw young Schade in the act of trying to kiss Ruth, who was dishevelled and violently resisting, while Schade's accomplice, another young tough of the county, looked on laughing.

With a bound the sheriff was through the window. In alighting within, he dropped his revolver and grappled with Schade, man to man. A terrific fight followed. Schade's accomplice pushed Ruth into a small inner room, closed the door, and then joined in the scuffle, the two robbers eventually succeeding in handcuffing the sheriff with his own handcuffs. Ruth's abduction, her rescue by the sheriff, their pursuit by wolves, the terrible fate of the bad men who were overtaken and killed by the starving animals and the unexpected climax of this drama brings it to a novel and exciting close.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 10—Two Parts—March 17).—Gilbert Blye and his party go aboard the steamer which they have chartered for the trip to Bermuda. Ned Warner and Burton, his detective, also board the boat. They practice the policy of watchful waiting. Soon Ned is informed by Burton that June is sitting alone on the lower deck. He hurries below. Suddenly Blye, from where he is sitting, sees the runaway bride in her husband's arms. He goes to the captain and tells him that a crazy man has attacked one of the ladies of his party. The next thing Ned knows he is struggling in the grasp of two husky sailors. June is in hysterics. Ned, locked in his stateroom, is unable to escape until just before the landing in Hamilton Harbor, Bermuda. Here he is seized by two sailors. The three men fight furiously. Finally Warner is backed up against the rail,

What One Operator Thinks of Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, New York, March 6, 1915.
36 East 23rd St., New York. 858 East 165th St.

Dear Sir: I cannot help reading your book "Motion Picture Electricity" over again. This is the fourth and not the last time. It is so interesting from beginning to end that I cannot put it down before finishing. It is written plain and the figures are easy to understand. I believe that this book gives more knowledge to an operator than many years of actual experience. I see now, after reading your book, that even though I am considered a good operator, there is a whole lot I did not know. It gives a clear understanding about Electricity, Motors, Generators, Rectifiers and many other things which every operator should know.

Excuse me for writing about matters which you know, but I cannot find any other way to express my appreciation for the knowledge I received through your Book. Am sure that I will recommend it as often as possible.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) MICHAEL FRANKEL,
Operator at The Ashers Wonderland,
Member of the M. P. M. O. Union, Local 306.

and then—by accident—pushed overboard. A practiced swimmer, he strikes out toward a small fishing craft, calling for help. The fishermen take him aboard. When first they hear that Ned is over the side of the ship, June and Blye are about equally horror-stricken. The news of his rescue, however, calms them both. June is inspired to refuse to land, but Blye compels her to do so. Burton, following them, learns the name of their yacht and their route. This he confides to Ned as soon as that unfortunate young man sets foot on the pier. But how are they to board the yacht?

SHADOWS OF DOUBT (Three Parts—March).—Wrapped up in his profession, Dr. Martin has no inclination for the social activities which absorb his wife's time. Science has claimed him and he is a devoted servant. A note asking them to attend a soiree, finds the wife eager, but the doctor indifferent. A visit from a needy laborer seeking aid for his stricken child is met with all the doctor's ardor. That night, while the doctor bends anxiously over his fever-tossed patient, his wife sits out a dance with Harry Vernon, a handsome young aristocrat. He sees her home, and exacts from her a promise to attend a party to be given by his mother. At his mother's lawn fete, Harry renews his attentions to Mrs. Martin, and they wander through the beautiful park, happy in each other's society. Charmed by their sympathetic youth, they forget for the moment their positions, and not until it is over does she realize that their kiss involves disloyalty to her husband and child. Next morning, drunk with his love, Harry sends a note, saying that their kiss has sealed his fate and he can but hate the man who stands between them. Dr. Martin, entering, demands the letter, and on her refusal tears it from her. Clearly, with this shadow between them, a continuance of their peaceful home life is impossible. To prevent a scandal, the doctor writes his wife a check for her maintenance, and bids her leave his home and child. She submits to this decree, and leaves, with her love for her husband unimpaired.

On learning the result of his rash act, Harry Vernon writes a repentent letter and calls on Mrs. Martin. However, nothing seems to matter but the fact that she has been separated from all she holds dearest. She rents a house next to her husband's in order that she might catch an occasional glimpse of her little one. In the doctor's home all is gloom. The youngster, yearning for her mother, is inconsolable, and starts to pine sadly away. Catching no sight of her beloved young one, Mrs. Martin makes inquiries, and finding that the child is ill, gains admittance to the sick-room. With the eloquent pleading of a yearning mother, she prevails upon the nurse in charge to give her her uniform. The effect upon the child is instant. When the doctor returns, he notices the sudden change in his baby's manner; then, discovering the nurse's identity his surprise turns to consternation, but the gladness of the child, together with the loving devotion of his wife, melts his stern nature, and releasing all his pent-up love, he mingles his caresses with those of his young one.

IMA SIMP'S DREAM (March).—Ima Simp's boss, stung by the love bee, impatiently awaits the arrival of his fair typist, the object of his affections. She arrives on time, but does not meet the approval of the office boy, who sets out to make things hum for her. At home, Ima Simp, awakened by his trusty alarm clock, realizes that a miracle is the only thing that will get him to the office on time. Like a flying wedge, he dashes into the office, and soon pandemonium it let loose. Quiet is again restored, however. Simp, reading in a newspaper of a humble clerk who received a legacy of $7.000,000, wishes that he was the lucky one. He falls asleep and dreams that he inherits the $7,000,000. In his dream, the boss and the stenographer, wishing to escape the dull routine of the office, set forth on a pleasure trip, but Ima Simp is also in love with the key-pounder, and, thinking he can win her with his money, he sticks to the couple closer than a porous plaster. They try every method of ridding themselves of him, but all in vain. Ima is strenuously on the job. At length he is thrown over board by his impatient boss, and lands in the water with a thud. He awakes at this moment, being doused by a fire extinguisher, and realizes that it has all been a dream.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode 14, "The Reckoning"—Two Parts—March 29).—Wong Long Sin, the Chinese adventurer, lately in league with the nefarious Clutching Hand, has been won over to the side of the scientific detective, Craig Kennedy, on the promise of immunity in the final reckoning. The Clutching Hand, unaware of the duplicity of his closest confederate, entrusts him with a chemical bomb, instructing that it be delivered to the laboratory of the detective within an hour. Wong Sin promises the delivery, and exiting, makes for the sleuth's rooms, where he performs his duty to the letter, neglecting however, the understood implication that the delivery was to be made without Kennedy's knowledge. Kennedy's X-Ray discloses the complicated workings of the bomb, which is immediately destroyed. A scrap of the paper wrapping of the explosive furnishes a startling clue to the sender, for a type-written line, under the microscope, shows the letter T to be battered and faint. Kennedy and Jameson rush off to Elaine Dodge's home, where, with the help of a clue co-ordinate with the battered letter T, they hope to gather in the last thread of the already tight mesh enclosing the master criminal. The reserve between Kennedy and Elaine, due to a recent misunderstanding, does not prevent the detective from having full run of the house in trailing the Clutching Hand. His search among certain papers bring an exultant cry to his lips as he comes upon a sheet and compares the T with that of the bomb evidence. The case is complete. The identity of a dual nature, subtle and incongruous, once disclosed, denouncement and justice are but a matter of moments. The whole world is aware of the atrocities committed in the name of the Clutching Hand. Forth on his errand of retribution goes Craig Kennedy, the detective, in the guise of Science apprehending Crime.

THE POLICE DOG (Third Episode of the Animated Cartoon Series by C. T. Anderson of the Bray Studios).—Officer Piffle is strong for the fair sex, and, consequently suffers acutely from an attack of "nurse-girlitis." While indulging in his favorite outdoor sport, ogling the girls, he spies a dusky Ethiopian stealing a pig. A battle ensues in which Piffle comes out second best. Hastily donning a pair of skates, the stalwart officer pursues the flying thief, who arrives home safely in the lead. The Pinkerton Pup arrives soon after, and captures the stolen hog. Piffle also arrives and gets an awful deal from the coon's wife. He is thrown out the window and lands astride the fleeing swine. The unlucky Senegambian is also thrown out by his wife and lands on top of Piffle. In this position the two of them are landed at the station house by the Pinkerton Pup who drives the hog in that direction. Right in on top of the captain lands the flying cavalcade. The Pinkerton Pup again proves that he can deliver the goods.

SERINGHAM (Madras-British India). (On the Same Reel as Foregoing—March).—An optical treat is afforded by this remarkable series of intimate views of Seringham. An opportunity for close study of the inhabitants' life and customs is presented. The strange and wonderful architecture is also shown, many beautiful specimens being presented.

THE BLISS OF IGNORANCE (Balboa—Three Parts—March.—Ernest Gray, discontented with the dull routine of a farmer's life, rails at his fate. He causes great uneasiness for his widowed mother and his brother, John, by openly sympathizing with those of anarchistic tendencies. At a lecture by Arthur Fenno, an anarchist, he gains the friendship of the lecturer by saving him from violence at the hands of a mob. Fenno prevails upon him to leave the farm and go to the city. He becomes a leader of an anti-capitalist movement, and attracts the attention of the mayor, who secures a position for him in a public library. Mary Pearce, a romantic school girl, is deeply impressed by him. They meet often, and their friendship ripens into love. Through ignorance, and intending no harm, he induces her to enter into a common-law marriage with him. A month later, while reading a book of law, he learns of his terrible mistake, and, in a moment of cowardice, he drives her from him. Through this act he loses his position, and swears vengeance on the mayor, who caused his dismissal. Mary, driven from her home by her irate father, leaves the city and makes her way unknowingly to the former home of Ernest. Weakened by hunger, she is taken in by John, who was left alone by his mother's death. John later induces her to marry him. She accidentally learns that John is a brother of Ernest, who meantime becomes "down and out." Ernest joins a band of anarchists, and shoots the mayor, for which he is sent to prison. Time tempers his spirit, and, on his release from prison, he returns to his old home, where he learns of his brother's marriage to Mary. Weakened by his life in prison, he soon pays the penalty for his misspent career.

THE GORGES OF THE TARN (Picturesque France—March).—From is source in Mt. Lozere, the river Tarn winds its sinuous way through ravines nearly two thousand feet in depth. No part of France excels so much in rugged scenery, and excursionists find a pleasant pastime in exploring the famous gorges. Quaint villages nestle snugly on the walls of the surrounding cliffs. One of the most noted examples of ancient architecture, the Castle of Le Caze, is shown. At a point known as the "Steps of Care," the Tarn disappears under a chaotic mass of Titanic rocks. It is a treat to the eye to follow the excursionists through the various windings of this beautiful river, and it will be conceded by all that the optical trip is one that should not be missed.

THE PRAYING MANTIS (On the Same Reel as Foregoing—March).—One's first impression on seeing this title is that views of a religious character will follow, but the Mantis, a specie of insects, derives its name from the manner in which it holds its very large forelegs when waiting for its prey. To follow the wonderful views depicted is an opportunity that affords one an intellectual treat.

THE TREASURE (March).—His grown son and daughter, ever fearing their father's acrid displeasure, skulk furtively about the household, slaving at their multiple chores. His penury extends even to the table, at which he stints his children to dry crusts and weak tea, in order that his secret hoard of gold might be increased. His one pleasure, when assured he is alone, is to cautiously remove some loose bricks from the chimney place, and silently chuckling, take forth from its hollow his money bags, and count with tremulous fingers their hoarded wealth. But deep rooted in his being lies a chord sensitive only to the touch of a child; so, when a distracted mother, too poor to maintain her young one, leaves it on his front porch, he welcomes the new influence in his life with a pleasure his god, gold, could not elicit. His joy evens leads him to be facetious, as when he finds there is no cradle in the house, he surprisingly remarks to his astonished daughter that "you should be prepared for this kind of thing!" But now the mother, unable longer to withstand the separation from her young one, steals in to take it back. The miser, jealous of his new-found treasure, fights desperately to retain it. The silky floss on the youngster's head gives promise of compound interest in golden curls, and the miser now hoards love. But the solution is so easy! Why lose the child? Why not gain another? His heart is big enough for both, so the mother, with her babe, is prevailed upon to join the now happy family.

THE LONE STAR RUSH (Climax—Five Parts—Adapted from the Novel by Edmund Mitchell).—Harry Murray has rescued an old prospector, Rhodda, when almost perishing from thirst on the mid-Australian desert. Rhodda, in gratitude, promises the youth an interest in a rich claim he had located. But another man, Potosi Jim, knows of Rhodda's discovery and steals the rough map marking the precise spot. The shock of this act of theft kills Rhodda. Meanwhile Potosi Jim, already bent on jumping the gold claim, had dispatched his mate, Blaxland, to the city to get money to take up and develop the prospect. Blaxland brings to the gold fields Colonel Baylor, a mining speculator, previously acquainted with Potosi Jim; also a capitalist named Cuthbert, who is accompanied by his daughter, Hilda. By the same train arrives Jack Murray, owner of a sheep station, intending to bring his younger brother Harry home and away from the gold fields life. But Harry interests Jack in Rhodda's find, and the two brothers start out to seek it. Potosi Jim's party starts out later. All meet near the last stage to the sought-for claims. But Potosi Jim steals a march on the Murrays by stampeding their horses and secures possession of Rhodda's find.

The brothers are indignant over the trick played, and believe that the Colonel is a confederate of the two rascals, Potosi Jim and Blaxland. Harry has fallen in love with Hilda, and is jealous because she defends the Colonel from such a charge. Mr. Cuthbert would willingly share the claim with Jack and Harry, but they refuse to be associated with Potosi Jim and ride further into the wilderness, prospecting. Here they discover the skeleton of a sailor who more than two hundred and fifty years before had wandered into the desert, and with the aid of an aboriginal boy had found alluvial or placer gold and accumulated a store of nuggets. The sailor had written his story on an old chart, whereby the Murrays are enabled to find both the burried treasure and the placer gold. Meanwhile the Lone Star Claim, the name Potosi Jim gave to Rhodda's find, turns out to be small pocket of ore which cannot be profitably worked, but the outside world has heard rumors of the new eldorado.

From all parts of the world the gold seekers come. The new arrivals are grievously disappointed, and vent their anger on Potosi Jim and Blaxland, who have been concealing the truth about their claim with a view of selling out the property to the first unsuspecting buyer. But just when the trouble is reaching the head, Harry Murray arrives with the joyful news of free gold, and the crowd of miners stream away to the placer ground. Potosi Jim and Blaxland learn of the treasure found by the Murrays and steal the gold. But this time their villainy is exposed, partly by aid of the Colonel, and they are driven from the camp outcasts. The love between Harry and Hilda has gradually grown stronger through all these vicissitudes of fortune, and their engagement brings the story to a happy end.

THE PAGEANT OF SAN FRANCISCO —(Five Parts—Pageant Film Corp.)—Portola and his band of adventurers departed from the Spanish settlement of San Diego, California, and traveled northward through the unexplored regions until they beheld the beautiful expanse of water which is now known as the San Francisco Bay Hurrying back to San Diego, Portola reported the result of his expedition to the Royal Viceroy.

The Viceroy decided to plant a Spanish colony and despatched a column of settlers under the command of Juan Batista Anza, and Pedre Junipero Serra, a monk, to the newly found country. After a hazardous journey the colonists arrived, and the pious monk, raising the banners of the church and of Spain aloft, invoked the blessing of the Almighty upon the settlement named in honor of St. Francis.

A hundred years passed over the little town before the first Yankee arrived from the distant United States, a thousand miles to the Eastward. In him was the spirit of California's future greatness, for, from that moment, dates the periods of great expansion and prosperity which has made California one of the greatest States in the Union. Shortly after this the Mexican war was fought, and California became a territory of the United States.

In 1849 gold was accidentally discovered near the then village of San Francisco. From all parts of the world throngs of adventurers flocked to California. So great was the development that before another year had passed California was admitted as a full-fledged member into the Sisterhood of States. The next decade saw the rapidly growing city in the clutches of a ring of lawless politicians. We next see the fair city of St. Francis almost leveled to the ground as the result of the great earthquake. Vast stretches that had been reduced to charred ruins are shown upon the screen. In the rebuilding of the almost destroyed city we see the indomitable American spirit that has made the United States one of the leaders among nations assert itself.

Undaunted by disaster, faithful to its ideals the newer and greater city of St. Francis arises from the smouldering ashes of her former self. A beautiful panoramic view showing the entire great Panama-Pacific Exposition, with the hills of the Golden Gate sloping to the sea, brings the spectacle to a fitting conclusion.

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORP.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode 18—Reels 35 and 36—"The Cipher Code").—Captain Radcliffe's injuries from his fall off the freight train delay his return to America, but Bruce takes passage the next day. Tom Hunt and Jim Baird also answer, by first ship, the summons they have received from John Storm. The Captain, meanwhile, has recovered from his singular adventure with Baird, and is able to visit the mines. He returns from the open diggings with a quantity of diamonds.

Deciding to sail immediately, Radcliffe puts the diamonds in a rubber hot water bag and places it in his suit case. Then, on board the ship, he writes this wireless cipher message: "J. W. Bruce, New York, Sinbad. X. Y. Z. Suntop Aurenia Looslyde Tunner Rispah Mecca Sib Lover, Radcliffe."

On the day that this message reaches Bruce in New York, Zudora, from her prison in the old hag's house on the island, wins her gaoler's consent to write the following note: "Mrs. Ramsay, 16 Willow Grove avenue, I am not permitted to tell the place of my imprisonment, but will you please give the bearer a change of clothing for me. Zudora."

The old woman dispatches Gyp with this. When he reaches Mrs. Ramsay's he is asked to wait until that lady can get Zudora's things ready. As soon as she is safely upstairs with the doors carefully closed, she calls up Tom Hunt.

"Come down here at once," she urges, with difficulty restraining her excitement, "and follow the man who leaves the house with a suit case. He will go to Zudora."

Then, taking one of Zudora's skirts, she rips several inches of hem, tucking in this message: "I have phoned Hunt to follow this man you have sent. John is crazy with grief and worry, but keeps on searching for you. Have courage." Already, from the porch, she has seen that Hunt is coming down the street, and she sees him conceal himself until she has done with Gyp and the bag. As soon as he leaves, the detective follows.

Meanwhile Jim Baird, on watch outside Bruce's office, has seen him receive the wireless dispatch. He sees him decipher the message and then slip it between the blotters of his writing pad. The moment Bruce leaves, Baird enters by a window and copies the words. But how is he to find the key? A bit of pasteboard projecting from under the blotter attracts his eye. The next instant he holds the secret code in his hand. Rapidly comparing, he reads: "Arrive New York Steamer Aurenia. Will throw rubber bag of diamonds overboard before landing. Radcliffe." Rushing to Hunt's office, where also he finds John Storm, he shows the detective the wireless. They realize that there is no time to be lost. The "Aurenia" is due within two hours.

Chartering a motor boat with an engineer at the wheel, and taking a rowboat in tow, the three men make for open water. Hunt is relating how he has pursued Gyp to the dock, and through marine glasses seen him land with the suit case at Execution Rock. Leaving the motor boat and getting into the smaller craft, they row under Zudora's window. She has seen them coming. When the rope is thrown to her she seizes it. Five minutes later the heiress and her lover are reunited.

Hunt and Baird return to the motor boat which speeds down the bay. Already another similar boat is puffing harborward a few yards ahead. It contains Gyp, Bill and Ike. As the big liner is seen approaching, the small boats pick their positions with care. Then begins a scrutiny of the deck for Captain Radcliffe. Hunt sights the figure of the adventurer first. He sees him come to the rail and throw a hot water bag overboard. Both motor boats dash for it. Leaning far out over the edge of the craft, in eminent danger of going into the sea, Hunt grabs the slippery rubber object. But before he can draw in his catch, Ike in the other boat knocks it out of his hands with a long boat hook, and the crooks turn tow and scuttle off up stream.

Meanwhile, John Storm and Zudora reach Mrs. Ramsay's house in safety. The persecuted owner of the Zudora mines once more finds herself with friends.

WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES (Five Parts—Brady).—Ebenezer Goodly, Professor of Anatomy, conducts an academy for young ladies. He and his wife, two daughters and sister-in-law, are looking forward to a long-promised visit from the Professor's brother, the Bishop of Timbuctoo. It is thirty years since the Professor has seen his brother, and none of the family has met him. Secretly, however, the Bishop has been making love, by letter, to Alvina, the Professor's thin and homely sister-in-law. Cissy Vandergould, an heiress, comes as a pupil to the academy and on the train has encountered Jones, a wide-a-wake travelling salesman, who deals in Bibles and playing cards, and they have been immediately and mutually attracted.

The Professor's youngest daughter, Marjorie, is engaged to Dick Heatherly, who is supposed to be a model young man. When leaving the Professor's house, however, he drops a card of admission to a prize fight. The professor finds it and accuses him. After a heated argument, Dick persuades the Professor—"in the interest of science"—to accompany him. During the fight, the police make a raid. Dick and the Professor escape by crawling over a stable and down a waterspout. They are followed by Jones, the travelling salesman, who was also at the prize fight. Jones gets badly mauled by the police and loses his coattails in the scrimmage, but by the use of "uppercuts" gets free. He finds refuge in the professor's academy and frightens Cissy Vandergould by disturbing her in her bath and interrupts a strenuous pillow-fight in the young ladies dormitory.

The Professor and Dick try to eject him, but he demands their protection under threat of exposing them to the police. A new suit of clothes has arrived for the expected Bishop. Jones dons the suit and is seized upon by Alvina and the rest of the family as the "dear Bishop." He forces the Professor to appoint him a teacher in the academy and makes violent love to the heiress, Cissy. The real Bishop arrives and they hustle him up to a bedroom and undress him and take away his clothes and lock him in the room. A lunatic, who is wrapped in a blanket, imagining he is an Indian, escapes from a neighboring sanitarium. The Bishop makes his escape from the window also wrapped in a blanket and is seen by the officials from the sanitarium and chased all over the neighborhood.

Jones sees that things are getting too hot, so he persuades Cissy to elope with him. They start for the railway station and are pursued by the lunatic. They elude him and reach a clergyman, who ties the conjugal knot. The Bishop explains matters at the sanitarium and is restored to the academy and is glad to be welcomed to the protection of Alvina's skinny arms.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BLACK BOX (Episode No. 3—March 22—Two Parts—"The Pocket Wireless").—Sanford Quest now has two mysterious robberies to untangle. He has perfected a little pocket wireless instrument in the use of which he coaches his two assistants, Lenora and Laura, very carefully. While they are working, the mysterious hands leave a tiny black box in the study. It contained this message: "You have embarked on a new study, anthropology. Now what characteristic strikes you most forcibly? Cunning? The necklace might be where the skeleton is. Why not begin at the beginning?"

Miss Quigg, a little Salvation Army girl, comes to Quest with an appeal for charity. The professor and Craig arrive at the same moment and Quest tells the girl that he has no time to consider her plea, but she may return the next morning at 10 o'clock, when he will have a check for her. As Lenora shows the girl out, she sees that Craig has been listening at the study door. Lenora has an instinctive dislike for the man. Craig and the Professor go on to Mrs. Rheinholdt's, where the scientist has promised to call and let the lady know what progress Quest is making.

Quest proceeds to adjust his phototellsme. The instrument is a small mirror, equipped with several coils and batteries. It can be connected to the telephone and, upon pressing a tiny lever, a reproduction of the place at the other end of the line is shown in the little mirror. The criminologist calls Inspector French. The Inspector's men have stumbled across an odd bone of peculiar grayness and he offers to bring it to Quest at once. The criminologist tells him it is unnecessary, that he can see it if the Inspector will merely hold it up to the 'phone. Thinking Quest crazy, French does as told, and Quest startles him by naming the bone as the left minor digit of the anthropoid skeleton.

Although Professor Ashleigh has scouted any suspicion of Craig's complicity in the Rheinholdt robbery, Quest decides to learn something of the man's character and sends Laura, disguised as a man servant, to seek information in the Servant's Club. Quest and Lenora go to the place where the bit of bone was found. After a search, they discover that they are near Professor Ashleigh's extensive grounds, and find an odd looking hut. They investigate. The hut is locked, but through the tiny window they see a strange sight. A figure, half man, half ape, hairy, clad only in skins, glares at them. A leopard, chained to a post, paces restlessly up and down. A half-dozen monkeys scamper about.

Quest pries off the lock and he and Lenora step inside. The wild man would attack them, but Quest brings him under hypnotic control while the girl searches the hut. Buried under the straw, she finds the missing skeleton, but nowhere is the necklace to be found. Quest cannot understand the presence of this wild creature in captivity in the Professor's grounds, and determines that the scientist shall explain the suspicious circumstances. Locking the door he and Lenora go to the house. There is no one home, but Quest, using his prerogative, opens the door and they enter.

The Professor is driven up by Craig and is surprised at Quest's presence inside the house. To the criminologist's stern demand for explanation he says nothing but brings forth a letter written to Prof. Edgar Ashleigh which reads: "Your communication gratifies me beyond words. Twelve years ago in Africa you found the skeleton of the Anthropoid. Now you tell me that in the person of Hartoo, the last of the Inyamo race of South America, you have found the next higher step in the evolution of man. Let me warn you, however, even anthropologists are subject to jealousy. Guard your secret well lest the honor of the discovery be stolen from you."

Quest realizes the necessity for the Professor's secrecy and is apologizing when Craig bursts in saying that the hut is in flames. The mysterious hands have again been at work. The Inyam and the anthropoid skeleton are beyond recovery. The Professor is prostrated by his loss.

Quest and Lenora leave the sorrowing man and go home to get a pocket wireless message from Laura, stating that she has discovered that Craig was once an officer of the Servant's Club, but is now an infrequent and mysterious visitor. Suddenly Quest sees a black box on the table. A card with it advises him to drop all investigation. And in the box he finds—Mrs. Rheinholdt's jewels.

THE BLACK BOX (Episode No. 4—Two Parts—"An Old Grudge"—Released Week of March 29).—Quest receives a report from the police that no trace of Ian MacDougal has been found since he jumped from the train while on his way to prison. The police scout Lenora's theory that MacDougal had a hand in the Reinholdt robbery. The girl's fear of MacDougal is so very real that Quest decides to investigate MacDougal's whereabouts. He sends Laura, disguised as a man, to see what she can find, and tells Lenora that they will follow at once. Leaving a check for the Salvation Army girl and taking with him the aniahldyte, which experience has taught him is an invaluable companion, Quest leaves the house, leaving word with his secretary that he will return before noon because of an appointment with Mrs. Reinholdt. The lady is coming with Inspector French to identify her jewels.

Laura has made friends with the section boss and paved the way for Quest and Lenora when they meet her at the railroad. With a handcar, the section boss takes them to the spot where MacDougal jumped from the train. A man at the section house, however, has recognized Quest as the man who sent him to the penitentiary for five years. He determines to be even with the detective and enlists the aid of his pal. Armed with a revolver and rifle they lie in wait.

Meanwhile Quest and his party have found in a cave near the railroad the dead body of MacDougal. Lenora cannot help but be glad that this fiend is dead, even though he was her husband. She asks permission to remain and see that his body is properly cared for. Quest grants this, but must himself return to the city to keep his appointment with Mrs. Reinholdt. He goes back to his car and is starting for the city when a shot from the outside punctures a tire. Red Gallagher covers the detective and he is disarmed. The chauffeur is knocked unconscious with a heavy blow on the head, and Quest is dragged off to the handcar house nearby. The thugs lock him in and go for oil and waste to burn the shack.

But Quest is equipped with his aniahlydte and a well placed charge wrecks one side of the handcar house and the detective steps out unharmed and makes his way to the signal tower nearby to have the operator stop the freight which is due. The thugs have seen Quest's escape and run to the tower. Covering the operator with a gun, they force him from the signal room. At last Red thinks he has Quest in his power, but the detective kicks the gun from Red's hand and slams his right fist into Gallagher's face. Quest runs to the signal lever to stop the freight, but he is too late. The engine passes the window. Without an instant's delay the detective swings from the window on to the signal arm and drops to the last car. The thugs then attack the operator, who manages to down both of them. In trying to escape he is killed by the two gunmen who make off in Quest's abandoned auto. While Quest, on top of the freight, nears the city, the chauffeur recovers consciousness, but not sanity. He staggers away to a house where the kind farmers take in the wounded man and nurse him.

Meanwhile, events are shaping rapidly in the city. The Professor and his servant go to Quest's house, arriving at the same time as the Salvation Army girl, who comes for her check. She sits talking to the Professor in the study, while Craig and the secretary chat in the hall. Some time later the Professor leaves with Craig. Shortly after their departure the girl decides that she, too, must go, and tells the secretary she will return some other day to thank Quest. The secretary is charmed by the girl's appearance and engages her in conversation.

Mrs. Reinholdt stops at Inspector French's office to take him to Quest's apartment. Their ring is unanswered and the Inspector is puzzled. Suddenly he sees caught in the door a piece of blood-stained white embroidery. Startled, the officer thinks something must be wrong inside and enters with his pass-key. The secretary lies dead on the floor. Stretched on the table, her torn garments stained with blood, is the body of the Salvation Army Girl. Quest has reached the city safely. Getting the Professor and Craig at their house as he has promised, he hurries to his own home. The detective is staggered by the horror that awaits him.

Lenora and Laura return to the house and the former's attention is immediately caught by Craig's expression. Ignoring the rest of the scene, she watches every haunted look of the man's face. Once he seems almost about to confess, but draws back.

The Inspector finds, close to the secretary's body, a bloody paper-weight which bears Quest's name. On the floor nearby is the clock, which has stopped at 11.15. The Inspector asks Quest where he was at that time and the detective answers: "At 11.15 I was in the No. 10 signal tower, five miles away. Ask the operator. Why, Inspector French, you don't suspect me of this terrible deed?"

The puzzled inspector hesitates.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

THE LOST HOUSE (Majestic—Four Parts).—Dosia Dale, a young Kentucky heiress and her uncle's ward, arrives in a hotel heavily veiled, and apparently ill. She is under subjection to her uncle who calls in Dr. Protheroe, crook and charlatan. The uncle has spent Dosia's fortune. As the time for turning it over approaches he proposes marriage to save himself. She refuses indignantly. Balked, he schemes with Protheroe to do away with her.

Protheroe's house is in a street devoted to insane asylums. There Dosia is locked in an upper room. She manages to slip a note through the window bars, but as that is a trick of the insane the police pay no attention. Ford, a reporter, sees the note, learns Dosia Dale, an heiress, soon to come of age, has been traveling with her uncle, and investigates. The finder of the note cannot locate the house it came from. Inquiries develop denials only. Finally, hiring a street piano, Ford plays "My Old Kentucky Home" in the street till a glove drops from a window of the third house from the corner.

"I'm a naval officer suffering from a nervous breakdown," he later explains to Protheroe and is given a room. He discovers the girl, but is attacked by Protheroe and Dosia's uncle. He barricades himself in, knowing his pal, Cuthbert will bring the police at twelve if the two are not safely out. The police come, and Protheroe and the uncle open fire. Rifles and machine guns begin popping. As Ford and Dosia plight their troth, the house catches fire and they escape over the roof, leaping through the flames into the fire net below. Behind them Protheroe and Dosia's uncle both are shot to death.

THE QUEST (American—Five Parts).—John Douglas, a bachelor and society man, is a cynic concerning the women of society and has pictured as his ideal one whom he calls his dream girl. Often in his musings she has appeared to him, but he has never seen her in the flesh. Tired of society and wishing to avoid the approaching social season, he sails on a freighter for a trip to the Orient, but the ship is wrecked and he is the sole survivor. Exhausted among the wreckage a vision appears to him of the dream girl as if drawing him on to a place of safety. Finally he lands on an island inhabited only by a strange race of white people.

Nai, daughter of the chief, Naeto, rescues John from the water and he recognizes her as his girl of dreams. Frightened at his behavior when first rescued, Nai defends herself and knocks John unconscious with a rock. Summoning help she has him carried to the village where he is received as a guest of the tribe. Nai is a musician of great ability playing upon a rude harp made by herself, and her playing to John arouses the jealousy of Kaura, the subchief, who has been taught to look upon Nai as his mate.

John learns from the priest of the tribe that an old legend relates that their ancestors landed on the island from a shipwreck. Kaura, growing more jealous, demands that Nai be married to him at once, but this awakens her love for John and she appeals to him to save her. In a primitive battle with Kaurr, John is worsted, and Nai is placed in her father's hut with a guard to watch her. At night Johi overpowers the guard and escapes to the priest's cave where they are married. Pursued by Kaura and his men, they flee to th rocky coast, and in the storm which breaks Kaura is killed by lightning.

For months they live in the forest, Nai growing more proficient at playing upon a larger harp that John has made for her. Finally a yacht is seen anchored some distance off shore and John hurries to erect a signal, but before it is completed night comes on and they retire into the forest. Here they find the priest who has come with word from Nai's father that if they will return they can rule over the tribe. John refuses and takes his accustomed place before Nai's hut to guard her during the night. He falls asleep and dreams of their rescue. On the ship is De Villiers, his former close friend, a bachelor and flirt. Nai is in charge of one of the wealthy guests and is fitted out with the latest style clothes, and although everything is at first new and awkward she becomes a bewitchingly beautiful girl. De Villiers begins a flirtation with her which progresses until their arrival home where he presents her with a harp to take the place of the one brought from the island. John grows jealous of De Villiers' attentions to his wife and the climax is reached at Nai's first reception when she plays upon the harp before the guests. De Villiers attempts to teach Nai the vices of civilization, smoking and drinking, and John decides to kill him. He follows Nai to De Villiers' rooms where she has gone to see a rare painting. In a terrible struggle he shoots Nai and is about to strangle De Villiers when Nai seizes his arm and he wakes from his dream, finding her trying to rouse him. He tears down the signal and he and Nai and the priest watch the yacht sail away. Then the three start back to the village of the tribe.

DEMAND THE GENUINE

An imitation at its best is but a poor substitute, and these substitutes do not and cannot produce results obtained from Mirroroide, the oldest metalized screen. The pioneer screen. The screen with a bona-fide 5 year guarantee against cracking, peeling or turning black.

MIRROROIDE

is waterproof, the cloth drill canvas—not ordinary window shading—and is used by 8,500 theatres the world over.

We guarantee MIRROROIDE to produce perfect definition regardless of how close or angle seats are placed.

The real value of a guarantee is the standing of the company back of it.

Mirroroide is guaranteed by the J. H. Genter Co., Inc., of Newburgh, N. Y. Capital stock and resources, $75,000; doing business under the laws of New York State, under the same management, at the same location since organization six years ago.

You cannot afford to take chances with the imitators, insist on the genuine Mirroroide, demand a guarantee, investigate the reputation and rating of the people back of the guarantee.

FREE! FREE! FREE! Let us send you large free samples, let your eyes and common sense prove to you that Mirroroide is the Screen for you.

See a Specialist!

This is the Age of Specialists. The man who does one thing and does it well, wins. In medicine the general practitioner may make a passable family doctor, but when the Specialist appears on the scene the general practitioner stands aside and looks on.

THE MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER IS NO EXCEPTION TO THE GENERAL RULE.

At the present writing motion picture studios are FEATURE-MAD. The SHORT-STORY-PICTURE—(The all-important picture of one and two reel lengths)—is not given the careful attention which the feature receives. All of which IS VERY NATURAL and all of which is ALL WRONG.

The UNITED FILM SERVICE PRODUCERS are SPECIALISTS in SHORT-STORY-PICTURES. That's WHY the UNITED FILM SERVICE PICTURES will keep pace with FEATURES in QUALITY. In the UNITED STUDIOS the Short-Story-Pictures are ALL IMPORTANT. The BRAINS and ENERGIES of every man connected with the UNITED PROGRAM are centered upon the producing of one and two reel pictures of quality. Fix these facts in your mind and remember that

The United Film Service Daily Program Is Not a "Feature-Mad" Program

But Specializes in One and Two Reel Productions of Quality

NEW!

INDIVIDUALITY is the only quality which makes people remember one particular theatre out of a hundred others in your neighborhood; and their remembrance is the finest, soundest, surest advertising in the world. MINA Films have individuality. They are as funny as any comedies made, have the technical advantage of David Horsley's wonderful new double exposure camera, photographic excellence and top-notch comedians, but above all this they have individuality. MINA Films are different. They add that novelty and distinction so desirable to your theatre.

THEY WERE ALL RIGHT

We recently asked seven men, all purchasers of the New MOTIOGRAPH, the reason for their choice. The following is their report:

Buyer No. 1.—I assure you that your Projector is a good Projector mechanically. You ought to know how to build them with your many years of experience in Motion Picture Machines, and MOTIOGRAPH Users speak highly of how the Manufacturer treats its customers.

Buyer No. 2.—I used two MOTIOGRAPHS 4 years, then changed to ——, the first night they burned up 1000 feet of film, the next night I was using MOTIOGRAPH again. My operator will use no other kind.

Buyer No. 3.—I have tried several machines and the MOTIOGRAPH equipped with INSIDE SHUTTER has them all beat. The Inside Shutter is always set and will give a brighter picture on less amperage.

Buyer No. 4.—The MOTIOGRAPH Lamp House and Arc Lamp take my eye. My operator has handled several machines, and he says the MOTIO Lamp House is years ahead of all others.

Buyer No. 5.—I use the MOTIOGRAPH for two reasons—I don't want to send to the factory for repairs every month as my competitor does, who uses a ——. My first MOTIOGRAPH cost me $1.50 in 3 years for repairs. That is why I am buying the second MOTIOGRAPH.

Buyer No. 6.—The MOTIOGRAPH is the most simple machine to handle and with Extra Framer my show is always insured to run.

Buyer No. 7.—Less cost in upkeep, brighter and steadier pictures on lower amperage. Prefer Inside Shutter, MOTIOGRAPH less liable to fire.

Every one of these seven was right, and yet the story is not a tenth part told. There are more reasons why people buy the MOTIOGRAPH and why you should buy this projector than this paper could tell in a week.
We shall be glad to point them out to you any time.

MOTION PICTURE MAILING LIST SERVICE TALKS

The maintenance of a mailing list of motion picture theatres has been part of my work for the past five years, during which time I have supervised the recording of over 100,000 changes.

A particularly flexible and efficient system and organization is utilized to secure, handle and record these changes. The master index of our list is on addressograph plates, which have a flexibility that linotype or monotype printing or typewriting do not possess.

Write me for particulars regarding the service we furnish embodying the use of this list.

Theatre ....

People nowadays refuse to patronize ill-ventilated, stuffy theatres.
Fresh air is just as essential as good pictures.
We are the largest manufacturers of Fans, Heating and Ventilating Apparatus in the world.
Why not consult our engineers? They will advise the right fan for the right place. Mention this paper.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service
To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:
Script Criticism
For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.
Plot Estimates
If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.
Please Note
My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

MA'S GIRLS

A Selig Western Drama in Two Reels

Released Monday, March 29

BRAVE ROSE ROPES THE GAMBLER, DRAGS HIM ACROSS A FORD, AND SAVES HER PRETTY SISTER!

"Ma's Girls" is a multiple reel drama of western atmosphere, containing unusual situations, and an out-of-the-ordinary plot. "Ma's Girls" is away from the beaten path, although it abounds in thrills, expert horsemanship, lariat throwing, etc. Selig western stars are featured in an entirely new western Pictureplay. The public is no longer attracted by the stereotyped western stuff. The production of "Ma's Girls" is "something different." Book it!

THE LEGAL LIGHT.—Selig one-reel western comedy, released Tuesday, March 30.

ASHES OF GOLD.—Selig one-reel drama, released Wednesday, March 31.

TWO WOMEN AND ONE HAT.—Selig one-reel comedy, released Friday, April 2.

A NIGHT IN THE JUNGLE.—Selig one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama, released Saturday, April 3.

The Big Idea

PARAMOUNT in the minds of exhibitors of motion pictures is to serve their patrons with the best pictures obtainable in the World of Film and to present them in the most perfect manner.

The Universal demand for better pictures has already resulted in a General improvement and has added greatly to the uplift of the motion picture art.

It is conceded by all the motion picture trade that it is to the Mutual advantage of themselves and patrons to procure the projecting apparatus made perfect by years of experience.
